J. R. Perkins, pastor at Sioux City, Ia., has been honored in being elected an official delegate to the "Rotary" convention at Houston, Tex., in June. "Rotary" is made up of the leading business men—for the most part—of all cities in Canada, England and the United States, of above 30,000 population, one man from each line of business. Six months ago Mr. Perkins was made chairman for the Section of Clergymen in International Rotary, and he is in correspondence with fifty ministers of all denominations. He also serves as chaplain for the Sioux City Rotary Club of more than a hundred business men. President Wilson will address the convention at Houston, June 21.

Franklin Circle, Cleveland, in "Best" Report.

W. F. Rothenburger, the pastor, and the congregation of the Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland, may well be proud of the year's work reported at the seventy-second annual business and social session. The records of the work were conceded to be without precedent. The following is a partial report: eighty-nine additions at regular services, fifty-nine by confession; $15,168 raised for all purposes, $4,624 of this amount for missions and benevolences. Besides other missionary interests the church recently assumed the support of the sixteen native workers in the station at Nantungchow, China. The duplex system and every member canvass are used. The growth of the Sunday-school, which has a Slovak and Chinese department, has necessitated the equipping of rooms in the "annex." A six weeks' Daily Vacation Bible School was conducted, three paid and several volunteer teachers, with an enrollment of 366. "Symmetrical Development and Personal Evangelism" have been emphasized. The church has taken an active interest in the Cleveland Federation of Churches, and its pastor was chairman of the Social Betterment Committee which brought about a more stringent regulation of the divorce courts and a lessening of the number of divorces granted; conducted a campaign of Eugenics among all the clerical bodies of the city; and presented the Mayor with a report of the conditions of the district of segregated vice which led to a public proclamation by him that the district would be gradually decreased and finally completely eliminated.

Success at Noblesville, Indiana.

The congregation at Noblesville, Ind., is so well pleased with the progress of the church under the ministry of L. C. Howe that they have recently voted him a substantial increase in salary and an indefinite call. But Mr. Howe is appreciated by the entire community. He was asked to deliver the baccalaureate address for the Noblesville High School, and has given nineteen other special addresses during the last few weeks. The union spirit is strong at Noblesville. In a recent ministers' meeting it was decided to hold union open air meetings in July and August. Such meetings have been a great success at Noblesville, being attended by two thousand people and upwards. Ministers take turns about doing the preaching. The city band and a large chorus of men lead the song service. It has also been decided to hold a big union tabernacle meeting next January with Bob Jones in charge.

President King at Bethany Assembly.

Pres. Henry Churchill King's subjects for his Bethany Assembly lectures are as follows: "The Supreme Claims of the Christian Life Upon Thoughtful Men," "The Significance of Jesus Christ for the Modern Man," "Difficulties Concerning Prayer," "The Difference Between the Bible and Other Books," and "The Problem of Suffering and Sin."

Inland Empire C. M. S. Meet.

J. E. Davis, superintendent of Missions for the Inland Empire Christian Missionary Society, reports that the Third Annual Convention of the Inland Empire Society will open at Waitsburg, Washington, June 29, continuing to July 2, inclusive. The first night of the program will be given to temperance. Thos. H. Harper of the Congregational Church and Louis R. Horton of the Anti Saloon League will be the speakers of the evening. Tuesday, G. W. Muckley will present the "Budget System and Every Member Canvass" and "Equipment of the Church." On this day the missionaries who are doing work over the state will give their reports from the field. Wednesday, Mrs. McDaniel Sterns, Robert M. Hopkins, E. E. Elliott and President I. N. McCash will bring special messages to the convention. Thursday, W. R. Warren will be heard. A special feature of the convention is the arrangement for conferences at regular hours in the morning, the first hour after lunch and for one hour following the afternoon program. The entertainment at the convention will be on the Harvard plan. This will probably be one of the greatest conventions the Disciples have ever held in the Inland Empire, writes Mr. Davis.

California Churches in Convention.

The Disciples of California will meet in annual convention at Santa Cruz, July 13-19. Efficiency institutes seem to be a special feature of this assembly, Each day, from 8 to 9:30 three such "Institutes" are programmed for C. W. B. M., Missions and Church. Some of the addresses of the convention are as follows: "The Men and Millions Movement," by Dr. Dye; addresses by Mrs. McDaniel Sterns, national C. W. B. M. secretary; address, "The Origin and Purposes of the General Convention," by Graham Frank; addresses, "The Social Force of Christian Missions," and "California Dry." Addresses by Secretaries Muckley, Warren, Mohorter, Elliott and Corey will also be heard. Sermons will be preached by G. W. Brewster, Jr., and by C. H. Hilton. A men's banquet will be held at 4:30 p. m., July 17.

Dedication at Norman, Okla.

D. A. Wickizer has served the Norman, Okla., church only about six months, yet reports coming from this field are very encouraging. The old property was exchanged a few months ago for a large brick building, of three stories, containing over fifty rooms. This has been remodeled, so that now there is an auditorium seating over 700 people. The auditorium is modern in every respect, with fine acoustic properties. On the third floor are fifteen rooms which will probably be used for dormitory purposes in connection with the State University at Norman. F. M. Rains was present on the day of dedication, and more than was needed, $6,000, was raised. Mr. Wickizer writes of the Norman work: "This is a University town, having this year some 1,200 students in attendance at the school. We have now by far the best equipped building in the town, and the location is the best in the city. Have had some 35 additions the past month, mostly by confession. Among these are some of the most influential men of the community. We are hoping for a great work in the future, feeling, with the student body the Lord is sending us, he presents to us a challenge that must call forth the best that is in us."

Dedication at Fayetteville, Ark.

May 24 was a proud day, not only for the First Church congregation, at Fayetteville, Ark., and for the present pastor, L. R. Riddell, but also for N. M. Ragland, who for twenty-two years served this church as active pastor, and who is now pastor emeritus. Mr. Ragland's memorial address is reported by a local paper to have been "the feature of the day," and the address is published in full. From this we glean the fact that the church at Fayetteville was organized with about fifty members by Robert Graham, who had just graduated from Bethany College. He came to the southwest in the interest of the "Millennial Harbinger." John T. Johnson was also an early organizer. The church's history goes back to the middle of the last century. Mr. Ragland says of the present pastor, "Mr. Riddell is the beloved and efficient pastor under whose ministry the late success has been achieved. He is one of the best and most capable men in the brotherhood." More than $8,000 was raised by G. L. Snively, the dedicator. On account of the large attendance at the morning service many people were turned away from the doors, and an overflow meeting for the young people was conducted in the First Presbyterian Church, just across the street from the new building. In the afternoon a union fraternal and memorial service was conducted in the auditorium. Maj. B. R. Davidson, one of the "old time" members of the congregation, gave a historic sketch of the several church buildings and related their histories.

Missionary Takes Pennsylvania Pastorate.

After fifteen years of efficient missionary service in Cuba Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Menges have resigned from the work and have taken the church at Le Moyne, Pa. After reaching Cuba in 1899 they worked for a number of years in Havana and then opened up the work in Matanzas. Here they spent eleven or twelve years and endeared themselves to the hearts of the Cubans very much. They leave a well organized church in Mantanzas, and through Mr. Menges' efforts one of the best mission buildings to be found in any of the fields has been erected. Besides the central work in the city, some promising outposts have also been opened up. W. L. Burner and wife of Transylvania went to Matanzas last fall to take up the work there.

Social Service in Eastern Convention.

Next year there is to be an innovation in the program of the convention of the Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia Disciples, reports E. B. Bagby. One-half of Preachers' Day is to be devoted to a discussion of the report of the newly appointed Social Service Committee. One member of this committee is to report on the social activities of the local churches, another on legislation in the several states affecting the moral and social welfare of the people, and the third upon the conditions of the rural churches. Preachers' Day program this year was exceptionally good, Mr. Bagby states. Howard Peters spoke on "Pastoral Evangelism;" W. F. Smith on "The Preacher and Men;" J. L. Wilmeth, "My Ideal of a Preacher;" Andrew Wilson, "The Preacher and Moral Reform;" G. L. Townsend, "The Preacher as a Leader of the Church," and G. A. Miller, "The Cause and Cure of Church Factions." Other convention notes are as follows: The H St. Church, Washington, is erecting a $20,000 building, and Benning, D. C., begins an addition to cost $5,000. Mt. Ranier cleared its indebtedness to the Church Extension Board, but finds, under the able leadership of Harry L. Ice, it must provide a larger meeting-house. Calhoun St., Baltimore, won the prize banner for the best Sunday-school work, with Tuxedo, Md., second, and Fork, Md., third. Two new congregations sought admission—Bradbourne Memorial, Washington, and Landover, Md. These congregations, numbering about fifty each, were, until recently, affiliated with another communion. Both possess valuable properties.

California Churches Report Progress.

The spring convention of the San Joaquin Valley churches was held May 18-20, at Fowler, where C. O. McFarland, recently from St. Louis, is minister. The convention was one of the largest and most enthusiastic ever held in this district. The reports from the churches, Bible-schools and Christian Endeavor societies showed such progress that President Dr. H. O. Breeden declared it as his belief that the churches of San Joaquin Valley had never presented such favorable reports. The convention sermon was preached by J. H. Hughes. Roy O. Youtz had charge of the music. The Bible-school session was conducted by Chas. Laurant Beal of North Side Church, Fresno. The Endeavor and C. W. B. M. programs were helpful and encouraging. Dr. Breeden reported 196 conversions from the Sunday-schools alone during the past six months. The next convention will meet at Dinuba in the latter part of November.

R. G. Frank Impresses Texas Disciples.

J. C. Mason, of Texas, writes that the great address of the Texas Convention was that of Robert Graham Frank on "The General Convention of the Disciples of Christ." It was "prepared, clear, clean, conclusive." Mr. Mason reports that "some at least who had opposed the General Convention idea were convinced of their mistake."

W. B. Hopper, pastor at Sullivan, Ill., writes that the Sixth District Convention of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society will be held at Sullivan, June 18-19. Those who are planning to attend should notify Mr. Hopper. Lodging and breakfast will be furnished free; other meals at usual prices.

Thad. S. Tinsley, pastor at Midway, Ky., delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class at the orphan school at that place, his theme being "The Flower of Our Country." A "Brightening Up Fund" of $200 was taken last week to be used in painting the Midway parsonage.

L. C. Howe, pastor at Noblesville, Ind., has recently finished a special series of missionary discourses, reviewing the great modern movements in pagan lands. The every member canvass was taken at Noblesville, with generous results.

Melvin Menges, pastor at Lemoyne, Pa., addressed the Woman's Missionary Union of Harrisburg, June 2.

Ohio's Enthusiastic Convention

Ohio's convention at Bowling Green last week was attended by about 450 people. The hospitality of the church in that town of about 6,000 people was very cordial and intimate and gave a somewhat more "homey" character to the gathering than usually obtains when the convention is held in larger cities. The pastor, Z. E. Bates, and Mrs. Bates were especially gracious, both on the program and in the social mingling of the attendants. Two days were devoted to the Woman's Missionary Society. On the second day the men held forth in two sessions devoted to a discussion of their peculiar interests and responsibilities in the church. On the evening of the second day and on Wednesday the sessions of the Ohio Christian Missionary Society were held with men and women jointly participating. Thursday was devoted to sectional conferences on Sunday-school work, with an eleven o'clock mass meeting addressed by the missionaries supported by state funds. Ohio is the second state to adopt the plan of small sectional conferences on many topics of particular interest, Indiana having arranged its program on the same principle last month. The list of leaders of these conferences is too long to give, but the following with their topics will suggest the plan: W. R. Walker, "The Rural Field as a Life Ministry;" L. N. D. Wells, "Church Publicity;" Mrs. Z. E. Bates, "The Ladies' Aid Society as a Social and Financial Asset;" W. R. Moffett, "The Lord's Supper;" Percy M. Kendall, "Church Music;" W. D. Ryan, "The Budget System;" L. I. Mercer, "Evangelism in the Sunday-school;" W. S. Goode, "Reverence in Worship;" H. E. Stafford, "The Preacher in His Study;" W. F. Rothenburger, "Recruiting the Ministry;" G. W. Muckley, "Church Debts;" J. H. Goldner, "The Long Pastorate;" S. S. Lappin, "The Sunday the Preacher is Away," etc. This list does not mention the twenty-one sections into which the Sunday-school half-day was divided. The general opinion seemed to be that the small grouping for these special conferences has much in its favor and is a step forward.

BROTHERHOOD DAY SUCCESSFUL.

Much was said in praise of the Brotherhood sessions held simultaneously with the women's sessions on Tuesday. There was no organization to promote, no technique to bind the free actions of the men who gathered in a crowd of more than 300 to hear discussions on such topics as: "Ohio Dry, 1915," by James White of the Anti-Saloon League; "Father and Son," by John P. Sala, of Dayton; "Playing Fair With Men," by D. D. Kimmel; and testimonies from the experience of Mr. W. H. Cowdery's men's class in Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland. This, together with W. F. Rothenburger's statesmanly survey of the whole Ohio field as related to the Disciples task, constituted a strong and rich morning program for the men. In the afternoon, the Men and Millions Movement occupied the whole of the stage with C. O. Reynard of Hiram College speaking on the Men, Geo. W. Muckley of Kansas City speaking on the Millions and J. Campbell White of New York, though not set down for any particular theme, speaking on the Movement. The reverberations of this session kept on sounding through all the later sessions of the convention. Mr. White spoke three times on the two days of his stay. His daring way of thinking about the missionary enterprise is well known. He believes we are only playing at the great task, and he lays upon his hearers the responsibility of incomparably deeper sacrifices than the church has ever known. Mr. Muckley's address is referred to in the editorial pages. F. M. Rains spoke on Foreign Missions and Carey E. Morgan, of Nashville, captivated the convention in two truly great addresses on "Home Missions." Of the women's sessions it goes without saying that they were immensely inspiring. A fruitful year's work was reported. Mrs. J. McDaniel Stearns of Indianapolis and Prof. T. M. Iden of Ann Arbor Bible Chair were the "imported" speakers at the women's sessions. The next convention will be held at Nelsonville.

News From the Colleges

HIRAM COMMENCEMENT PROGRAM.

The following is a brief announcement regarding the commencement program at Hiram College this year.

President Charles T. Paul of the College of Missions will deliver the commencement address at Hiram College on Tuesday, June 16. His theme is "The Task, Age and the Worker." Professor Paul's intimate relation with the college, both as a graduate and for many years professor of modern languages and later of missions, renders his selection for this service a peculiarly happy one. The Hiram people are expecting a great address and will not be disappointed.

Fuller announcement of the commencement program will be published later.

COMMENCEMENT AT PHILLIPS UNIVERSITY.

The commencement exercises at Phillips University closed on the evening of May 28. The several departments of the institution are in good condition as was manifested by the commencement program. The baccalaureate sermon was preached by Rev. E. L. Watson, pastor of the Baptist church in Enid. The various Protestant churches of the city dismiss their services annually and unite to make this one of the greatest events of the year.

The high school has this year twenty-seven graduates. Of this number at least twenty will enter the College of Liberal Arts to swell the Freshman class. The commencement address was given on the evening of May 26, by Z. A. Harris, president of the Board of Trustees. He spoke on the "Value of Education." Brother Harris is a close student of the trend of things in education and was therefore able to give an address of a very high order. Some wonder why Phillips University maintains a first class high school. The reason is that Oklahoma, being a new state, has only twenty-one high schools that hold membership in the North Central Association. One of these is the Phillips High School. It will probably be necessary for several years to come for the university to maintain its own high school.

On Wednesday morning occurred one of the most impressive programs given during the week. It was an ordination ceremony at which three of the graduates were formally ordained to the ministry of the gospel. The three churches of which the candidates were members united in the ceremony and were assisted by the professors of the Phillips Bible College.

The College of Fine Arts held its commencement exercises on the evening of May 27. There were twenty-two graduates in all, representing the schools of music, oratory, and fine arts. On the same evening diplomas were also given to the graduates of the school of trained nurses of the University Hospital. The program given was an elaborate one and one of the best of its kind ever given in Phillips University. The College of Fine Arts is one of the very best in the southwest.

Thursday morning was the day set apart for the class day exercises of the seniors. On Thursday evening occurred the commencement exercises of the College of Liberal Arts and the College of the Bible. Fifteen young men and women received the Bachelor's degree and two received the Master's degree. Of this number, ten expect to be ministers or missionaries. Six are already experienced preachers of ability. Three others are volunteers for service in the foreign field. One is already under appointment to go to Japan. Another will take a medical course before sailing. Two ladies received the church worker's certificate. This is a department that can easily be enlarged as with the corps of instructors the institution has it is well equipped to train church workers. The commencement address was given by H. E. Van Horn of Oklahoma City. He spoke for one hour on the "Electives of Life's University." Brother Van Horn is pleasing in his address, is thoughtful and practical. This was his first visit to Enid and he was given an enthusiastic reception.

President Zollars presented the diplomas at all of the commencement exercises. This is the thirty-third year that he has sent forth graduates with his blessing and with a marked improvement in health that has come to him since Christmas, indications are that many other classes will receive their diplomas from his hands. All together he gave out sixty-six diplomas, not counting the diplomas of the business college, for which no special commencement exercises were held.

Phillips University has just closed a very successful year. The total enrollment was above five hundred different students. Crop conditions in Oklahoma and Kansas promise to break all previous records. Wheat harvest is at hand and an enormous yield is assured. An additional professor has been added to the College of Liberal Arts for the coming year. A large increase in attendance is confidently expected. The Bible College will doubtless have a large increase in enrollment next year. The work of pulpit supply has been placed in the hands of Chancellor Roth, who will remain in Enid during the vacation. A number of professors will attend the large universities during the summer quarter.

NEW MEXICO—WEST TEXAS CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the New Mexico-West Texas Christian Missionary Society was held with the church at East Las Vegas, N. M., May 26-29, inclusive.

While the attendance upon the annual conventions in this territory is never large it is usually very representative. In point of attendance the general interest of the last convention was one of the best, if not the best, that has ever been held since the organization of the society seven years ago.

FOR SALE

The house-like Bungalow of Dr. and Mrs. Royal Dye, including three lots, close to College, convenient to Church. Special terms for quick sale. Address MARSHALL AND McGUIRE, Eureka, Ill.

The program had been arranged with special reference to the state work, and, therefore, the national secretaries were not in attendance with the exception of Grant K. Lewis, who was present throughout the entire convention and lent valuable aid. The forenoons of each day were given over to what was called a "Preacher's Retreat," in which the problems peculiar to the preacher's life and work were considered. The C. W. B. M. session was held on Thursday afternoon under the leadership of Mrs. J. J. Beck, secretary of the state work.

One of the most profitable sessions of the convention was one in which all of the pastors in attendance met for conference and prayer. This meeting lasted for nearly three hours and the whole situation was considered in the most careful and prayerful manner. The results of this conference were embodied in the report of future work committee which emphasized the importance of maintaining the work already begun in various parts of the state, the necessity of getting into direct communication with scattered Disciples wherever they may be found in order to keep them informed with reference to the work, and to acquaint the board with opportunities for beginning new work, and further to arrange for addresses or sermons to be delivered from time to time in centers of population where our work is not represented by organized churches, setting forth our plea for the union of Christians, and with a thought of organizing churches at present.

Practically all of the work in New Mexico-West Texas is missionary, there being but four self-sustaining churches in the entire field. The success of the past year's work has been very gratifying. By grouping missions each of the twenty-eight places where we have missions has had some sort of pastoral oversight, and preaching has been done at various other points The society is fortunate in having such men as the veteran, Frank Talmage, now pastor at Roswell; H. P. Williams, formerly of the Philippine Islands, now at Albuquerque, Judge L. A. Dale of El Paso, formerly a preacher in East Texas, now in the practice of law, and others of equal merit, as its counselors. The writer was re-elected as president of the board and general superintendent of missions throughout the territory, a service which he renders without cost to the board and by the grace of the First Church of El Paso, which he serves as pastor.

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTES.

STATEMENT OF COMPARATIVE RECEIPTS FOR APRIL AND MAY, 1913 AND 1914.

Churches.

For this year	$1,205.27
For last year	1,192.01
A gain for this year	$ 13.26

Individuals.

For this year	$ 7,791.00
For last year	11,829.00
A falling off	$ 4,038.00

It will be noted that we have a falling behind during April and May of $4,038 for individuals. This would not have been the case had some annuity gifts materialized before the end of the month. These will come in to help the receipts during the month of June.

During April and May the following loans were closed: Apalachia, Va. (J. W. Gill Fund) $800; Batesville, Ark. (Cedar Rapids Iowa, Church Fund) $1,000; Severance, Colo. (Sidney S. and Rebecca J. Chapman Memorial Fund) $600; Eureka, Mont. (Frankfort, Ky., Church Fund) $1,500; Clearwater, Nebr. (Akron, Ohio, First Church Fund) $500; Robertsdale, Ala. (Sunday-school Fund) $500; Scottsbluff, Nebr. (Annuity Fund) $1,500; Woodland, Wash. (Y. P. S. C. E. Fund) $800; Chelan, Wash. (Margaret K. Long Fund) $800; Alliance, Nebr. (Nell B. Ford Fund) $2,000.

At the April meeting the board granted only a few loans as follows: Kirwin, Kans., $1,200, 6 per cent; Malden, Wash., $600; Lambert, Okla., $500; Klamath Falls, Ore., $1,500, 6 per cent; Deming, New Mex., $3,000, 6 per cent.

During the month of May the corresponding secretary visited the Georgia and Texas conventions and spent twelve days in the team work of the Men and Millions Movement. The associate secretary attended the Indiana and Maryland conventions, and also visited many churches in the East that were delinquent on the payment of their indebtednses to the board.

N. B. A. EASTER OFFERING.

The Easter offering, received at national headquarters up to June 4, amounts to $19,362.55. This is an encouraging showing but the amount by no means equals, as yet, the pressing needs of the association.

The friends of the widow and orphan everywhere among us will understand that the Easter offering is the association's main dependence for bread and butter for its nearly six hundred wards. Many of our Bible-schools have not yet sent in their offering. We earnestly suggest that every school in the Brotherhood have fellowship this year in this Christlike ministry. Will you not for the sake of our Lord's neglected and dependent little ones see to it that your school takes an offering for this cause at an early date? We crave the assistance of every school.

The association is just in receipt of a $1,000 annuity gift from a dear friend of the cause in California. This gift will be a blessing to this sister while she lives, and will perpetually bless the needy for whom it is given.

Send all offerings to The National Benevolent Association, 2955 N. Euclid Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

A REVIEW OF THE QUARTER'S LESSONS.

By Rev. A. Z. Conrad, Ph. D.

LIFE AT HIGHER LEVELS.

Luke 14:7-24. The scramble for first place is a continuous performance. The world's suffering is due to selfishness. The great defeats experienced are due to misdirected efforts. Self-promotion is followed by disappointment. A false humility is as reprehensible and as despicable as egoistic assumption. True humility is always held in honor. Jesus warned against seeking the first place without respect to merit or approval. He made it clear that all true promotion must be on the basis of merit. The appeal for the life of unselfishness is urgent and unanswerable.

THE GREAT SUPPER.

Luke 14:12. In the parable of the great supper the warning against self-deception is clear. Those who were bidden "with one accord began to make excuse." Self justification is always the ground of excuses for the failure to fulfill duty. Life is presented as an opportunity. Discipleship is a privilege. Christian service is not to be regarded as an irksome responsibility but as the highest joy. Under the type of a feast the Christian life is presented. The folly of apology for neglect is forcefully set before us. No excuse goes with God. He asks nothing which is not reasonable. He requires nothing which is not beneficial. The best is open to all.

ON THE WAY WITH JESUS.

Luke 24:13-35. The day seemed lost. The Cause appeared to have failed. Jesus had cried, "It is finished," and died. He had been entombed and now the third day had come. Certain rumors and reports proclaimed him alive. Some of the disciples are gathered together contemplating events and awaiting the further revelation. Two went on their way to Emmaus, discoursing about the tragedy which had transpired. Jesus joined them. They did not know him. They told him their trouble. He at once interpreted to them the prophecies, the theophanies, the types, the events and incidents leading up to the crucifixion. As they sat down to the evening repast he was recognized. It is a great lesson upon the consequences of fellowship with Jesus Christ. It presents to us the true law of interpretation. No Scripture can be properly interpreted which does not recognize the Divine Spirit as the great teacher of the human heart and mind.

THE COST OF DISCIPLESHIP.

Luke 14:25-35. The test is severe. The obligation is insistent. Jesus will never share his throne with any other. It is wholehearted devotion to the point of worship or it is nothing. It is a reasonable request. Nothing else is possible. "Whosoever doth not bear his own cross and come after me cannot be my disciple." Jesus never concealed the issue. No honeyed words and soft phrases were used to allure. He spake the case frankly, and yearningly appealed for loyalty and obedience. He wants those who enter upon the Christian life to do so with their eyes open. They must be willing to pay the price. Great as is the cost, the results are so infinitely beyond the price paid that it is irrationality itself to hesitate. The call is for a great renunciation, but brings an infinitely greater enrichment. The half-hearted disciple is likened to savorless salt. The most useless individual in the world is one who seeks to be neutral and non-committal in his relation to Jesus Christ.

THE JOYS OF RESTORATION

Luke 15:1-10. The parables of the lost sheep and the lost coin portray the dangers of departure: the impossibility of self-restoration; the sympathy of the shepherd; the persistence of Jesus Christ in his search for the lost; the completeness of recovery and the joys of restoration. The Good Shepherd is measurelessly kind. Every soul not having covenant relations with Jesus Christ is hopelessly and helplessly lost. Restoration is never due to human initiative. Redemption, regeneration, rehabilitation, all these have the initiative in God. The adequacy of his mercy and his grace constitute the true basis of our hope.

ROYAL RESOLVE IN A FAR COUNTRY.

Luke 15:11-32. Rebellion against restraint is the cause of measureless suffering. The world's ruin is its rebellion. License is mistaken for liberty. Life at its best and bravest works in harness. Co-operation with God does not make for limitation but for liberty. The prodigal with the swine herd is a graphic picture of perverted purpose. Decision determines destiny. The resolve in a far country is a picture of the movement toward the higher life. In no portrayal is the nature of God so beautifully set forth as in the father's embrace of this prodigal profligate, yet now returning, son. We can never really get away from God. We can never get away from memory. The highest resolve of life is the resolve to be in harmony with the law and love of God.

TRANSMUTED DEATH.

Luke 16:1-13. Every material thing is capable of transmutation under the guidance of love. Wealth is of little advantage until we have learned how to employ it so as to produce happiness and holiness. A larger enthusiasm in the Christian life would result in awakening the indifferent and the unattached and would multiply the membership of the Christian church. In the parable of the unjust steward zeal is commended, foresight is commended, but above all the importance of so employing time, talent, opportunities, health, wealth that at the end of life here we shall take it all with us into the life beyond. We are entreated so to live that we shall not leave behind us what we have, but gather it up into a larger life and employ it in the service to which God will call us in the life beyond. Man's choice in the last analysis is a choice of masters. He can enter upon spiritual realities, bowing to the lordship of Jesus, or he may become so engrossed with the things which are purely temporal and material that Mammon will become his master. There is no middle ground. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

PRODIGALITY AND POVERTY.

"After death, what?" Luke 16:15, 19-31. Of all the utterances of Jesus none are more weighted with solemnity than the parable of Dives and Lazarus. If any who have ever lived knew of the life after death Jesus was that teacher. The parable is so explicit and emphatic that there is no getting away from it and no misinterpreting it. In the parable Jesus teaches that the consequences of living here reach beyond the grave. The reprehensibleness of prodigality and wastefulness is emphasized. Above all, there is clearly declared an impossibility of regarding the helpless about us as negligible. He who makes gold his god, who lives selfishly and considers only his physical comfort can see himself in the picture of Dives as drawn by our Lord. Lazarus illustrates patient suffering, settled purpose and holy resolve. The contrast here is heightened there. The great felicity of the trusting soul that has suffered here and still been faithful finds the clearest enunciation in the words of Jesus. Men gravitate to their own place. No arbitrary decision put Dives in Hades nor did it put Lazarus in heaven, but the heart in each case followed its own treasure.

FORGIVENESS CHALLENGING FAITH.

Luke 17:1-10. The sense of insufficiency becomes almost oppressive in the presence of a perfect ideal. No man lives to himself. We are responsible for influence. Jesus cautions against the disturbance and destruction of human faith. The awfulness of misleading an immortal soul cannot be overestimated. Let us beware how we introduce or suggest doubt. One of the severest tests of discipleship is ability to rise above all resentment. Retaliation is deadly in its recoil. Nothing is harder but nothing is more profitable than forgiveness. As an act, forgiveness often has to wait upon opportunity. As a condition it may be constant. The spirit of willingness to forgive is a strong mark of Christian character.

PURIFYING PROCESSES.

Luke 17:11-19. Ten lepers sought healing. They pleaded for mercy. The response was a surprise. They were asked to do the last thing which conditions and circumstances seemed to declare as reasonable. They were to show themselves to the priest. Yet there was no evidence of healing. Obedience brought results. "As they went they were cleansed." One returned to give thanks. Regeneration is an instantaneous act. The perfecting of life is a process. The Christian graces have to be cultivated. We can determine the direction of life instantly; the reaching of the goal takes time. Gratitude is one of the fundamental principles of godliness. The ratio of true righteousness, one to ten, seems small. Perhaps it is truer to the fact than we think. Our question is, whether we are counted with the nine, or whether we belong to the appreciative class, remembering the source of all benefit and blessing and thanking God for every gift of life. Expressed thankfulness develops the spirit of gratitude. Our prayers should be more occupied with thanksgiving.

THE EXPANDING KINGDOM.

Luke 17:20-37. Jesus had much to say of the kingdom. He proposed to himself the colossal task of becoming the imperial head of the greatest kingdom the universe had ever known. He had said so much of the kingdom that his followers were ever looking for some spectacular demonstration of power and the institution of an earthly kingdom. Jesus said, "The kingdom of heaven is within you." Yes, but it is also without. It begins within. It is to be a kingdom all embracing. Jesus warns them against following false leaders. In the figure of the lightning he indicated the simultaneousness of manifest power in the day of his coming to claim the world as his own. As it was in the days of Noah and the days of Lot so shall it be. Some will believe and be ready, and others will be in despair and be lost. The effort to escape will be unavailing. The great thing is to be prepared. He emphasizes also the inevitableness of separation based upon the attitude of people toward God. "One shall be taken and another left." No stress was laid by our Lord upon the time of his coming, but the whole of the teaching of Jesus would indicate that the one thing required is a continuous preparedness. He has authorized no one to set the year or the day of the coming of the Son of Man. The one thing which is determined is the fact that either Christ will come as the imperial ruler or we shall be called to him. The supremely important consideration is harmony with his will, and faith in his saving power.

PERFORMANCE AND PIETY.

Luke 18:9-14; 19:1-10. The rebuke of self-righteousness could hardly have been more emphatic than in the picture of the Pharisee and the Publican. Soliloquy is not prayer. Self-adulation is not acceptable to God. Recounting our virtues is not calculated to develop humility of spirit. The value of any religious act is measured by the approval of God. "This man went down to his house justified rather than the other." This is what Jesus says of the publican. Why? He recognized his need, he appealed for mercy, he accepted the offers of divine grace. Justification is a primary requisite to soul satisfaction. The mysterious power of the atonement to bring to the sinner a sense of justification is testified to by the untold multitude who, through faith, have received Jesus Christ. The conversion of Zaccheus reveals the entire independence of conscious and caustic criticism which Jesus ever felt. Not profession, or class, or caste, or race is determined, but desire to know God and to obey him. When we welcome Jesus as a guest in the palace of the heart we become conformed to his will.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR JUNE 24.

Unifying Agencies in American Christianity. Eph. 4:17.

The fact that we are discussing Christian union points to something more fundamental than anything we say. The conditions which have put before us the subject for serious consideration should engage our attention more than the utterances of church leaders, however passionate and eloquent. These utterances are significant, but we should use them only as aids to getting at the facts. Our conferences and speeches may give us a theory of union that does not meet the situation. It would not be impossible, I suspect, to find men who preach much about union and practice little of what they preach.

HISTORICAL STUDY.

The theory of development is finding its way into all departments of study. For a long time religious people were afraid of it. They reasoned that since religion is of God it was impious to employ the methods of scientific investigation in the study of religious origins. A change has taken place. We can believe that God is in what develops in an orderly way. Instead of stating before we begin our study what must have been, we honestly endeavor to find out what actually was. The student of religion studies himself that he may know his predilections and prejudices. He sets forth his conclusions modestly. He does not anathematize his opponents; he asks for proofs. He is more anxious to discover and present to the world the important contributions to history that have been made by the different denominations than he is to expose their errors. He is showing us that no denomination has a monopoly either of error or of truth.

MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

The preachers are sometimes charged with being the chief offenders in promoting sectarianism. They are not sinners above all other members of the churches, for they are the representatives of the churches. When the churches demand something different they will get it. But there is a heavy responsibility upon the leaders. The education of ministers has often made them sectarian. The art of theological warfare used to be taught systematically in theological schools and the enemies whom the young preachers were trained to combat were Christian ministers and Christian churches. We have a different idea of ministerial education today. The ambitious young man who wishes to deliver his message most effectively chooses a school whose teachers are catholic in spirit and scientific in method.

A COMMON TASK.

The policeman who undertakes to arrest a wife-beater often finds himself opposed by both husband and wife. Man and wife may fight each other, but they stand together against the outside world. Republicans and Democrats and Progressives are arrayed against one another on election day, but if a foreign power should invade American territory, they would unite to drive out the common enemy. The churches of America are realizing that they have a common service to render to the world. They have made the discovery that it is not the chief business of a disciple of Jesus to define his belief and then denounce everybody that does not sign his creed. They are to give the world right notions of God, it is true, but they have found a God so great that he cannot be defined by any one man or group of men. Therefore they are putting the emphasis on love and service. The moral and the spiritual are being exalted above the metaphysical. Vice and crime and injustice menace civilization. The disciples of Jesus are uniting against them.

Acts 11:1-18; Acts 26:14-18; Mal. 2:6, 7; Matt. 20:25-28; 1 Cor. 9:16-23; 2 Cor. 4: 2; 6:2-7; Rom. 12:4; Eph. 2:14-21; 3:6.

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Character Talks

SELF-CONTROL

Self-control is an indispensable element to a useful life. Great power is of little service unless it is under control. Many a man spoils all the good he has accomplished by allowing his temper to get the better of him. It is no mark of greatness to be high-spirited unless you master yourself. Some insane people are high-strung. We are exhorted repeatedly in the Word to moderation. It is not "Let your self-assertiveness, or your anger, but rather let your moderation be known to all men." Self-mastery is a key quality; it is the secret to steadfastness, to service and to safety in Christian work. How perfectly self-possessed at all times the Master was! Hence nothing ever caused him regret. We are to "bridle" the tongue. This is the organ put in motion when we lose self-control. The perfect man is one who offendeth not in "word." Let every one who would seek to be great understand that "he that controlleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city."

"The Conquest is just what you say it is—'a journal of character-building,'" writes one of our superintendents. "The Conquest" takes itself seriously. That's why its readers take it seriously. Is the paper your school is taking one that emphasizes the things that should be emphasized in a Sunday school—serious Bible study, religious ideals and Christian service? "The Conquest" has as its aim not simply to give schools what they have been used to—small talk of school work; but to publish such material as will actually GROW CHARACTER.

This is a regular feature of our paper for Adult and Young People's Classes, "The Conquest." Have you seen this live weekly? Send for free copy today.

WHY The Bethany System of Sunday School Literature Demands Your Attention!

1. It is the product, not simply of the talent of our own brotherhood, but of the expert workers and writers of the ENTIRE SUNDAY SCHOOL WORLD.
2. Mechanically it is the most nearly perfect of all the systems of graded literature produced to date.
3. Because the use of the Bethany lessons will make it possible for your school to co-operate in graded union activities. With other literatures, you will be handicapped in such co-operation.
4. It represents a notable achievement in Christian unity, for which principle the Disciples as a people stand. The Bethany literature is the joint product of five Protestant bodies.

We do not ask you to use the "Bethany." We do ask you to compare it with other systems. If it does not prove to be the Best, after a careful examination, use the system that IS the best.

Rev. Finis Idleman, of Des Moines, Will Write for "The Conquest"

Rev. Finis Idleman.

For several months "The Conquest" has been looking for a man who could work out our ideal of what a Sunday School lesson treatment should be. In addition to the Scripture text and a "verse by verse" explanatory column, there should be a straight-from-the-shoulder talk applying the principles of the Sacred Word to today's life. We have found the man who can do it, and is willing to do it. Mr. Idleman will talk to "Conquest" Bible classes just as he talks to his great Des Moines class. His treatment of the lessons will be forceful, inspirational, up-to-date. This feature will begin early in July. Watch for it. Still other new features are to be announced.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

A Bow at a Venture

We are told of a case in which "a certain man drew a bow at a venture and smote the king of Israel between the joints of the harness."

Great pains had been taken on both sides that it should have been otherwise. Ahab had assumed a disguise, and arranged with his friend Jehoshaphat to put on royal robes and attract attention to himself and so distract it from Ahab. It was a clever device of the two kings, who are supposed to have been most unlike in character, but who had many things in common, and who were just then arranging that Jehoshaphat's son should marry Ahab's daughter. It was a convenient use to which to put a relative by marriage, and Ahab had no hesitation in suggesting that Jehoshaphat impersonate him in the battle, and draw away attention from himself, while he, disguised, went on with the fighting. It all seemed to be working well.

Such partnerships are likely to be a disappointment. In this case it was disastrous. Ahab got killed, and the curse of Jezebel, which was upon both countries then and later, had added to it the bitterness of defeat in battle, the tragedy of the death of the king, and the humiliation of foreign subjugation.

But who killed Ahab?

None of the men in the front of the fight. They were pursuing Jehoshaphat. They were so far from the place where the fatal shot was fired that no one of them could claim the honor. When investigation was made it was discovered that the arrow in the dead king belonged to a man who was stationed some distance back. He had merely shot at random into the enemy's ranks as they moved into the fight, and he was as much surprised as any one to know that he had killed a man, and that man the king.

Doubtless they made a feast for him. Probably they promoted him. Doubtless they went back to Damascus singing his praises. He, probably, rode in a chariot for the first time in his life. To his wife came for the first time the suggestion that her husband was a hero. This is as it has been in all ages, and the common private soldier, promoted that day and pointed out ever afterward as a hero, had all the while the uncomfortable feeling that it was a mere stroke of luck. He did not deserve the honor. He had merely shot his bow at a venture.

There is something in luck. Call it by whatever name you like, the accidents of history are too many to disregard While the man who sits back knowing just what he would have done if he had been there seldom gets there, there is something in the fortunate circumstance that works to the advantage of the man who is on the spot when the great occasion arises.

But this man was not in the front at all. He was not in the party in hot pursuit of the man whom everyone supposed to be the king. He was one of those who were supposed to have no opportunity for heroism. He shot at a venture because that was the only way a man at his distance could shoot.

The Bible encourages us to shoot some bows at a venture. We are counseled to put forth our best effort in view of the certain reward of some good efforts, and the complete uncertainty of others. We are told to "Sow beside all waters," though some of them bear the seed away and it never returns to us, while others bring our bread back after many days. We are told that "He that regardeth the clouds shall not sow," that is, we are not to wait for perfect conditions and certain results. If we do, we shall wait forever and do nothing. Here is the fine word exhorting us to take chances in the doing of good: "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening hold not thy hand." And the reason for sowing at both times, the favorable and the unfavorable, is not that we know that one is a good time and the other not, but precisely the reverse, namely, "For thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether both alike shall be good."

Some great harvests have resulted from very unpromising sowing. Some fine results have come from good deeds where it seemed the good was wasted. If you have a good word to say, say it now. If there is any good thing you can do, do it today.

It is well to take careful aim. We need the kind of work which is preceded by careful planning. There is too much waste of ammunition in all good causes. The guns fire tons of metal for every man killed. There should be less waste in our moral warfare. We need more careful aim, more resolute and thoughtful endeavor in religious work. Church work is growing to be better organized. The methods of doing good work are less wasteful than formerly. This is as it should be. Nevertheless there still remains, and very likely always will remain, the need of the effective shot at a venture.

"Billy" Sunday and True Religion

A Favorable and Friendly Analysis of the Famous Evangelist

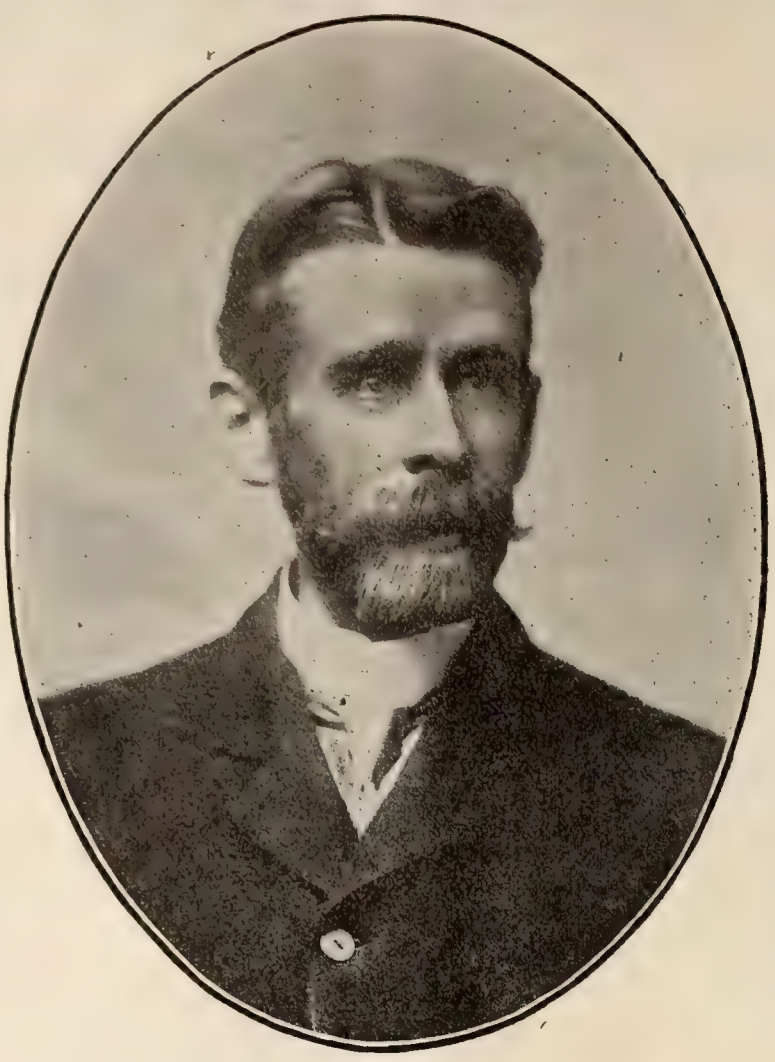
BY HENRY KINGMAN.

FOR years Mr. Sunday has been the most popular preacher of religion in America. Recently, however, he has ben invited by the Provost of the University of Pennsylvania, an ancient and dignified educational institution founded by Benjamin Franklin, with over 5,000 students, to conduct meetings for the students there. And the results are held to have justified his action.

What is the explanation of this phenomenon? Is it because our generation prefers sensationalism? Is it because it has clean forgotten the sweet reasonableness of Christianity? Is this preference for so crude a gospel as that of Sunday a sign of the times?

First of all, who is this Billy Sunday?

He was a famous baseball player twenty-five years ago, and a godless man. Upon his conversion he determined to give his life to taking to others the gospel which had saved him. He became a preacher of righteousness and an evangelist. But he took with him into the pulpit the language of the baseball field and of the man of the street; and though he is now a Doctor of Divinity of the Presbyterian Church, he has never altered in this regard. As someone has said, "He fairly drips with slang." It is not evil slang; it is simply such language as is used right here on our campus. But taken into the pulpit and used regarding sacred things, it jars painfully on any sensitive hearer. It violates what I think we must all concede to have been a characteristic of Jesus' preaching—the seemliness, the reverence, with which instinctively we handle the more sacred things of life. It is a sound instinct that makes us shrink from such grotesqueness in the pulpit; and it is no part of the gospel message of today that it should be couched in language that somehow ill befits either our deepest moods or noblest aspirations.



Rev. Henry Kingman, D. D.
Claremont, Calif.

AN INTOLERANT DOGMATIST.

Again, Mr. Sunday has taken over without reserve or change the theology that met him 25 years ago, and continues to preach it uncompromisingly, to a day and generation that has passed on in some respects unto purer and more just conceptions of Christian truth. He knows nothing of biblical criticism or of anything resembling an evolutionary principle, either in the material or religious world: and as a result he bids such open defiance to the views of thoughtful men as might well set them against his message altogether. He preaches dogmatically and confidently as facts some things that most of us are as powerless to believe as we are to believe in the flatness of the earth's surface. No zeal nor piety nor evangelistic success can make this any part of the gospel message, nor justify in any wise such mingling of truth and error.

Furthermore, he accompanies this dogmatic adherence to the thinking of a past generation with the harsh intolerance of those who differ with him on these points. He has denounced at times in almost lurid language those whose intellectual habit is that of the educated men and women of our day. This also is no part of true religion of a Christian gospel. It would be as dishonorable and ungodly in me to believe in the Bible as Billy Sunday sees it as it would be to profess belief that 2 plus 2 make 5. It is not a matter of will but of common honesty. And yet we are assailed as unfaithful to our trust. Both the gentleness and the justice of a true minister of Jesus are wanting here.

DROSS WITH THE GOLD.

It is further to be noted that not all the seeds Mr. Sunday plants are seeds whose fruitage is to be good. Perplexity, doubt and alienation will follow in some minds. Many of those who take from him their first religious convictions in these things will have slowly and painfully and with much danger to face by and by the recognition of a different world from his: and he is prolonging the era of dissension and misunderstanding that is so hurtful and trying for all the church of Christ.

There are other things that might be said in just criticism of the evangelistic message, and even what I have ventured to say might be put much more strongly and at great length. But this is enough to indicate my conviction that in Mr. Sunday's message, and in the method of it, there are elements that are unworthy and untrue, and that have no place nor excuse in a Christian evangel for our day. The fact that I am one of those whom he attacks—that I am in sympathy, heart and soul, with the fearless and utterly untrammeled critical scholarship of my generation—may make me unduly sensitive to the injustice of some of his deliverances: but I do not think it invalidates the fairness and kindness of the judgment I have expressed.

What makes all this of grave importance is the fact, to which I invite your earnest attention, that Mr. Sunday is the most popular speaker in the world today. There is no living man, so far as any of us know, who can command and hold from week to week such tremendous audiences of profoundly attentive hearers as this untrained evangelist. Not even Mr. Bryan nor Mr. Roosevelt nor Lloyd George, nor any other man who represents the most virile social message of the hour, such as thrills men's hearts to hear, can equal Mr. Sunday in the marvelous intensity of his drawing power. There have been great audiences within men's memory gathered to hear notable speakers, and there have been great buildings erected to accommodate them. But here in modern Pittsburgh, not even one of the largest cities of our country, Mr. Sunday was able to gather and hold week after week audiences of 18,000 and above. On a single day, in two meetings, 40,000 men heard his great sermon against liquor. And another day when the services were for women only there were more than 40,000 present. What is the explanation of this unparalleled popularity?

As sensible people we should dismiss at once the suggestion of his enemies that any clever man who will make a mountebank of himself, and sufficiently advertise his performance, can secure such crowds to hear him. The "Nation" has recently advanced this theory. Its spiteful folly needs no comment. Every city in the Union has clever and sensational speakers along many lines, who would almost sell their souls to secure an audience like Sunday's. But if they succeeded a few times by prodigious advertising, their audiences would inevitably and immediately fall away. Those tens of thousands of earnest men and women representing every class in Pittsburgh from richest to poorest, and from the most refined to the men and women of the slums and dives, were not there to amuse themselves with the contortions of an actor or with occasional clever squibs at the expense of the clergy. They were grimly concerned with the harshest difficulties of their own lives, and it was as obvious as daylight that in the end they were fighting out their problems with God, and not thinking of Billy Sunday.

NOT A MOUNTEBANK.

We must be sternly on our guard against many of the newspaper reports of his extravagances. Many of us here remember well when Mr. Moody was called an illiterate mountebank, and very many other worse things. We remember that immense interests hate Mr. Sunday with a vitriolic hatred, and would count no sum too great to expend in his destruction or even partial besmirching of his character. If they do not succeed in befouling him, it will be because money cannot purchase and human ingenuity cannot devise a way to bring him into contempt.

And further, we are compelled to admit that it is almost invariably those who hear Mr. Sunday at second hand who are troubled by what they call his buffoonries. Those who listen to him, clergymen, bankers, teachers, business men, students, for the most part are his loyal supporters and claim that the great portion of his address is plain, homely good sense and that his occasional extravagances are so natural an expression of the man himself, are so tempered by his unquestionable sincerity and kindliness that they do not at the time challenge criticism. I could pick out of a certain one of Dan Crawford's addresses six detached sentences that would lead almost any man, not knowing him, to say that he was a ranting boor. But did any of us regard him as a ranter or a boor in fact? Let us dismiss the idea if we ever cherished it, that it is Mr. Sunday's sensationalism that enables him to gather to himself as with hooks of steel the men who are the brain and sinew of any city, the policemen, the reporters, the street car men, the doctors and lawyers and judges, the great employers of labor and the men from the mills and factories, coming as they did repeatedly in delegations of thousands at a time. I am strongly tempted to use up all my time in telling what to many of you would be all but incredible, the response of every class in society to Mr. Sunday's appeal. On one evening practically all of the 4,000 city employees who could get off duty were present, grouped about the Mayor. Again, 7,000 stalwart workingmen from one of the great mills attended in a body, and even from surrounding towns such delegations of workmen were brought in by special trains.

PERSONAL RELIGION INTERESTS MEN.

I think we may fairly admit that there is no other theme in the world which so deeply and constantly interests the men and women of today as religion—vital, intense, personal religion—and that there is no other exponent of it who has so profound a hold upon the people as Billy Sunday, explain it as we may.

Before we go on to attempt this explanation, notice one or two other characteristics of his work relating to its spirit and its results. Its pervading and essential spirit is what you might expect of a work which is utterly built on prayer. Not only in the life of the man himself, though this is true; but in the case of his last campaign over a thousand prayer-circles met for six weeks in advance, in preparation for his coming. And now, all over Pittsburgh and its suburbs, hundreds of the circles continue permanently as Bible-study classes. On prayer and Bible-study he maintains his own life, and for the new converts he lays strong insistence on their organization at once into these Bible-study classes. Not for the study of the Bible as a literary document, with the following legitimate fruit of literary and intellectual culture; but for the study of the Bible as the living word of God for the saving of a man's soul, with its fruit of rebuke and guidance and inspiration in the first business of a man's life day by day. You will find these classes existing still, as centers of power in the cities where he has gone in years past.

SOME SUNDAY RESULTS.

The results also are notable. In Pittsburgh over 26,000, publicly and by card, expressed their purpose to begin a new life in Christ. Figures are of little worth. Thousands of these cards we may discount at once as of very slight significance. But all observers agree that many thousands of others, from all over Western Pennsylvania, who gave no public sign, are among the trophies of the kingdom of God from these services.

Of deeper significance than any figures is the recognition on the part of the prominent men of the community that there has been a moral upheaval that will affect in months to come not only the city but the state. As one of the leading city officials said: "In all the 250 years of the existence of the city, this last eight weeks has been the time of epochal importance." Billy Sunday's gospel might be derided by some as purely individual and utterly out-of-date in these days when the social obligation has so largely become the message of the church. But the wisdom of the New Testament message of personal guilt and personal salvation is witnessed by the amazing awakening to social responsibility on the part of Mr. Sunday's hearers. No series of up-to-date conventions on purely social topics would have produced a tithe of the social awakening that this plain call to repentance and godly living has achieved. There is not a home in Pittsburgh but is safer today—and if it chose, cleaner and happier—for Sunday's preaching.

Here also the confirmatory facts that could be adduced are almost bewildering in their richness. I cannot speak of them. They continue to appear. Some of you noticed in the press this last week the statement of a Republican political organizer who went down to Pittsburg to interview the local political leaders as to the outlook for Senator Penrose. One and all they assured him that they were done with Penrose; that it was impossible for them to support him since the Sunday meetings, or even to keep out of the Prohibition movement. The papers have not been able wholly to ignore that action of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, a little while ago, said to be unprecedented in America in such a civic body of so large a city, declaring unequivocally against the license of the liquor traffic and in favor of national prohibition. That action of the Chamber of Commerce was one of the fruits of Sunday's call to men to give themselves to Christ.

"BILLY" SUNDAY'S SIGNIFICANCE.

But we must turn quickly to our chief inquiry. We are not deeply concerned with Billy Sunday himself, either pro or con. It is as a sign of the times that we are interested in him; he is only the point of departure for our inquiry as to the significance of this religious phenomenon in our day. What bearing does it all have on the question of true religion, of what is the real gospel?

We admit first of all that Mr. Sunday has grave faults, both in the method and matter of his preaching. They are hardly recognized as faults by the man on the street, but to us they are peculiarly glaring and offensive.

GOD WORKS THROUGH EARTHEN VESSELS.

But on the other hand, what preacher has there been in all these centuries, who has not had grave defects peculiar to himself and his miserably imperfect apprehension of the unclouded truth? We have reason here to be grateful for the dignity and reverence of our own pulpit and the lofty ideals that are kept before us. But there are worse defects than those of good taste. Suppose Billy Sunday should come to me and say: "Brother, I don't like your preaching. It has grave faults. You are so hampered and hamstrung by intellectualism and conventionalism and apologetic consideration for the prejudices of your hearers that your message has no regenerating power left. How many men and women has your preaching won over from a sinful life in the last ten years, to the public confession of the Lord Jesus?"

It is legitimate to throw stones at Mr. Sunday, but it is not I who will lead in casting them. Rather would I be willing to be a fool for Christ's sake if I might do some of the work that he is doing. But the fact is this. Every preacher of the evangel, through the centuries, has his own work; does, we will say, the best he can with his limitations. But the power is in the eternal gospel of Christ that shines through his crudities; and its magnificence, its infinite reaches of regenerating resource, are such when it is especially prominent as utterly to overwhelm and make negligible the crude human additions of foolishness or superstition. If a man can in this day set forth with single intense conviction and flaming earnestness the central realities of human need and divine sufficiency, he will find a great tide of human longing setting in as a flood to meet him and to greet his message. It is for thirsty mortals a stream of life. Though it bear on its surface the driftwood and refuse of out-of-date dogmas and narrow personal prejudices, and incongruous mannerisms, these are less than nothing in comparison with the fact that a flood of life underlies them and thirsty souls can take and drink and live.

"THE GREAT CENTRAL REALITY."

You would not tolerate for one week from this pulpit the crudities and extravagances and superstitions of the greatest preachers of the ages, who hold whole civilizations in their debt. Chrysostom, Augustine, Bernard, Francis Xavier, Luther, Wesley,—all of them saw in a glass darkly, and set forth the gospel with grievous limitation of prejudice or credulity. But because they saw as in the light of eternity the great central reality of the cross of Christ, and set it forth fearlessly and with supreme abandonment, the hearts of millions leaped up to greet the vision and to share its comfort. And poor Billy Sunday, with his weaknesses and prejudices, has not shaken a great city this last winter because of his wisdom or his cleverness, or his vulgarity,—but it is the grace and power of Billy Sunday's Saviour, that he loves to set forth in every message, that have triumphed even over his limitations. And the heart of the common people has thrilled to the ancient, unchanging, yet ever-changing message of eternal love. This clever, sophisticated twentieth century is beginning to show what coming years will make more surprisingly conspicuous—that it is as eager for the fearless incisive preaching of personal sin and personal salvation and personal devotion to a living Lord as any priest-taught gathering of the middle ages.

SUNDAY'S MESSAGE EASILY UNDERSTOOD.

Think for a moment further of the appealing quality of Billy Sunday's message. He makes sin hateful, fearful, as has no other preacher of modern times—in sharp contrast to a gentler spirit like Gypsy Smith. We sometimes pride ourselves that we do not appeal to men's fear; and thereby we show our shallowness and folly. The man who above all others set forth the fear of sin was Jesus. It was he who had the courage and the love to say: "Fear not those who destroy the body and after that have no more that they can do. Fear him who can destroy both soul and body in hell. Yea, I say unto you fear him." And many such warnings Jesus uttered.

A doctor could take us to a children's hospital where you might see bright, hopeful little lads and lasses from babies up, some of them blind, some of them crippled and deformed, some scourged with cancerous disease, suffering patiently and wonderingly year after year—for what—for their father's selfishness. And the shock of it staggers one like a bullet,—the unspeakable fear of such a sin. You may go to one of our huge and evergrowing asylums for the insane; and as you see the piteous unhuman wreckage in some of its wards, and remember that selfish indulgence in drugs or stimulants made them what they are—blasted them for this world—you get a shuddering glimpse of the fearfulness even of venial sin.

Jesus Christ knew all this and infinitely more of the hideous ravages of sin here and beyond our sight. And his wisdom and his love and his courage made him scourge sin and set forth the terror of its consequence. Some of us have not love enough nor courage enough to be faithful with men in our preaching—perhaps we are too polite. But the heart of the common people goes out to a man who in the spirit of Jesus will scourge sin today, and there is no popular lecturer they will go so far to hear as the man who, like Billy Sunday, preaches in love and power the fear of sin and the absolute and glorious assurance of a way to escape.

Further, our generation hungers for the man who can somehow disentangle the living, palpitating truths of the Bible from the dusty lifeless accessories of mere Biblical scholarship. Deep answereth unto deep, and the man on the street today longs for a message in which appears the whole passionate strenuous heart of a man, wrestling with divine reality.

John Burroughs said the other day: "Man lives in his emotions, his hopes and fears, his loves and sympathies, more than in his reason." And yet many of us actually try to make our religion a dry and desiccated and unnatural thing of intellectual processes and results only. We are afraid of ourselves and of our emotions.

The message of Billy Sunday appeals to the whole man—to the intellect first of all, of course; but to the heart also, as did his Master's—to men's love and fear and penitence and gratitude and soaring hope. And it is a sign of the times that our wise, suspicious, critical age comes back like a little child to hear with delight anyone who can tell them with power and assurance how God loves the world.

SUNDAY AND THE STUDENTS.

Not only the common people—but the students of the universities. Did you see how at Columbia, a few weeks ago, 2,000 men every night crowded the hall to hear John R. Mott on personal religion? How at Lafayette 220 men took a stand for Christ, including the captain, the manager and nine members of the football team, and the captain and manager and five members of the baseball nine. How even at Berkeley the other day in spite of every effort to obstruct them, 1,600 men attended every night of Sherwood Eddy's meetings in the gymnasium and 1,200 stayed to the after meeting: 140 men accepted Christ for the first time.

These are not isolated and disconnected events. They all point—and here must needs be our brief conclusion of the whole matter—they all point to the eager hunger of our driven and harassed age. The hunger, not primarily to hear of the religious discoveries and by-products of this last generation, even in their most modern adaptation to our day; but the hunger to listen to an ancient confession of faith, uttered by a man of power with passion and conviction—"Christ the Son of God loved me and gave himself for me." This is the message of supreme attraction for our day; for as Jesus said, and now for the first time we come in sight of our text: "I if I be lifted up from the earth will draw all men unto myself."

Editor's Note: Doctor Kingman's article on Mr. Sunday will be followed next week with an article by Dr. Theodore Gerald Soares, of the University of Chicago on "Revival by Religious Education." He suggests a somewhat different point of view and different standards for judging of individual evangelists.

Humbler Heroes

EDMUND VANCE COOKE IN THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

IT might not be so difficult to lead the light brigade,
While the army cheered behind you, and the fifes and bugles played;
It might be rather easy with the war-shriek in your ears
To forget the bite of bullets and the taste of blood and tears.
But to be a scrubwoman, with four babies, or more,
Every day, every day setting your back
On the rack,
And all your reward forever not quite
A full bite
Of bread for your babies. Say!
In the heat of the day
You might be a hero to head a brigade.
But a hero like her? I'm afraid! I'm afraid!

It might be very feasible to force a great reform;
To saddle public passion and to ride upon the storm;
It might be somewhat simple to ignore the roar of wrath,
Because a second shout broke out to cheer you on your path;
But he who, alone and unknown, is true
To his view,
Unswerved by the crush of the mutton-browed
Blatting crowd,
Unwon by the flabby-brained, blinking ease
Which he sees
Throned and anointed. Say!
At the height of the fray,
You might be the chosen to captain the throng.
But to stand all alone? How long? How long?

Building the Tombs of the Prophets

A Lesson In Tolerance Drawn from a Very Modern Illustration.

BY ELLIS B. BARNES.

A REMARKABLE instance of the time-honored custom of building the tombs of the prophets has just come to light. The flight of Glenn H. Curtis a few days ago in "Langley's Folly," the aeroplane which tumbled into the Potomac a dozen years ago, now proves the correctness of Prof. Langley's theories. It will be recalled that the inventor died a broken-hearted man owing to the failure of his aeroplane to work. The recent successful flight demonstrates that the aeroplane was defective merely in its starting device and not in the principle upon which the lamented professor worked out his machine. But at the time of the fatal flight every jokesmith who lives upon the frailties or misfortunes of others, every man who believes that wisdom will die with him, all the safe and sane who would scoff at Columbus before and shout with him after he discovered America, sharpened their wits and unlimbered their contemptuous "I told you so's," at the expense of this eminent scientist and scholar.

It is too late now to make amends, too late to shed availing tears, but not too late, fortunately, for us to draw a few lessons from the incident for the benefit of those who are neither hopelessly learned nor invincibly ignorant. At present we can build a national monument to the inventor; and those who scoffed at his "failure" will now commemorate his success by every device known to adulation and tears. Incidentally, some of this class will claim that they were the discoverers of Prof. Langley's genius, and had it not been for their unwearied persistence in urging him to give his attention to the science of aerial navigation he would have died unknown to his generation. This is the historic way we have of washing our hands of the blood of our victims. There are probably a half million men or more who boast of their shrewdness in discovering presidential timber in the present resident of the White House, against whom they voted, in all probability, and who, had he been defeated, would have boasted with equal fervor of their superior judgment in saving the country from an impending crisis. Nothing produces so many sages, so much shouting, so great majorities, and so much hypocrisy as success.

"I TOLD YOU SO."

The wisdom that flowers in the "I told you so" type of person is not peculiar to the American people. It is the vice of the human race. It is a sad commentary on human nature that even the heroic failures of our fellow beings set fire to our scoffing, start us all a-lecturing each other on how the thing should not be done, and lead us to measure our ability according to our vanity. The vocabulary becomes unctuous, the chest expands, pity is effusive, though free from solace and full of sting. We are never as confident of our knowledge as when our neighbor lacks confidence in his. The fact that we know that he does not know is to us an inspiration. Fortunately, as in the case of Prof. Langley and hundreds of broken-hearted men like him, it comes to pass that our assumptions were too well founded to be just, our conclusions too well demonstrated to be correct, and our confidence too well established to be secure.

The earth did move even when an overwhelming majority proved that it could not move.

HEARKENING TO NEW VOICES.

Of course this it not to say that every invention is a success; the patent office at Washington shouts its denial of such a possibility. Nor is it to say that we should plunge into every reform that is proposed; nor yet that every intellectual venture should find us among its propagandists; nor that we should be charmed toward fatal shores by siren voices pitched to the tune of progress. But it is to say that we should be hospitable toward new ideas, considerate of the claims of those who believe they have an invention of value to the race, tolerant toward all men who come to us with altruistic messages even if on first examination they appear to be revolutionary. We can afford to be patient and to wait before we wax merry, when that mirth is as salt to the sensitive soul of a fellow creature.

We can afford to wait before we call men who are our equals dreamers, impracticable or heretical. Words like these have in them the sharpness of steel; and our levity is often but velvet concealing death in the leaden paw. If humanity had waited, the story of long ages would not be cleft by rivers of crimson, nor overshadowed by lofty pyramids of human bones and skulls; nor would diabolical instruments of tortune have been invented for use in inquisitions; nor would malicious books have been written in the interest of brotherly love, and pious editorials designed to ruin the reputation and character of able men, had the open mind, rather than the open dungeon policy prevailed.

The practice of tolerance is, on all hands, admitted to be worthy of all praise, though the sectarian will not hesitate to warn us of its dangers. One who strives to give every man a square deal in theological circles is likely to be set down as an indifferent pagan, caring little for either truth or error. The religious jokesmith, or more properly the sacrilegious jokesmith, will sharpen his wits for the tormenting of those who believe that the truth needs not the support of carnal weapons, whether they be bloody swords or pens of detraction.

The wise men who identify truth with the peculiar tenets of their creed, will wag their heads at the approach of any man who will not be dangerously aggressive against a brother who differs from the majority, though his life is above reproach. The fanatic will be as anxious to kindle a fire for him as for the avowed heretic; and we are more liable to suffer from the fanatic than from the heretic. How the world has groaned under the tyranny of the fanatic! How his cocksureness has enabled him to regard all who are not as ignorant of history as he, and therefore not as magnificently fearless, as temporizers, spineless, disloyal! He is not content unless he is "lining up" everybody on all occasions. The man who believes that the cause of truth would be served by delay is read out of the kingdom. And however valuable these zealous souls may be to a cause, their value would be immeasurably greater if their zeal would be tempered with charity.

COMPENSATIONS FOR THE TOLERANT.

But for the tolerant there are many compensations. Neither the blood of men nor the tears of widows and orphans will be required at his hands. If he has erred in being patient he can atone for his sin. The intolerant can only make reparation for their errors, if intolerance have its perfect work, after a godly man has been ruined in reputation and fortune, after the grave has closed over a broken heart. The tolerant is always willing to allow the truth to vindicate itself without the aid of blows or knocks. Such a man will weep rather than jest over the errors or failures of a brother, over the disappointment and heartbreak of hero, saint, or martyr. He will not add a single cloud to the sky of the world's woes, or a tear to its heart-wrung anguish. He can enter into the struggles of the men who had hoped to achieve; he can feel the pangs of the disheartened and the disappointed; he can eat the bitter bread of sorrow with them all, and mingle his consolations with the dregs of their cup of bitterness. And when the day comes for the truly elect, the time-beaten martyrs and reformers—all of whom have trod the path of the despised and the rejected—to claim their inheritance, the tolerant and all who are in the royal line with them, will have no apologies to make, no regrets that they helped to weave crowns of thorns, no repentance to record, no reversals of history to write. They can enter with joy into the fellowship of the goodly company who attained, and sit at their feet to learn the lesson of patience anew. In that hour the consciousness that they helped by sympathy every man who had a device to lighten the loads of the world, every man who had a doctrine that cheered and inspired, every man who tried to live a life that brought God nearer the needs of men, will be as precious as are the prayers of saints to him who answers his children before they call.

The sea of life is full of struggling swimmers. Why should we in the name of theology or science thrust a worthy, even if an erring, brother beneath the waves when we require so much effort to keep ourselves out of the power of their untiring and merciless gravity?

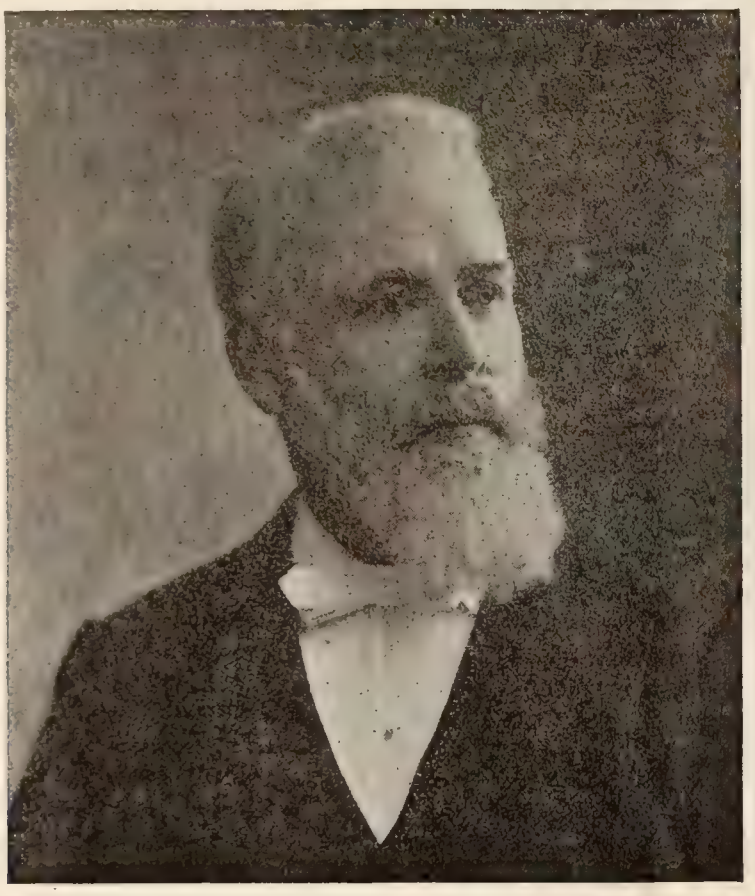
Christianity a Developing Religion

A "Growing Temple Upon Which Every Successive Generation Works, but Which is Never Completed Here."

BY JAMES M. CAMPBELL.

THE religions of the East are stagnant and stationary. They suffer from arrested development, and are either dead or dying. Among the religions of the world Christianity alone continues to make progress. It has in it something of the fire of eternal youth. It is a sunrise, not a sunset. It holds the future in its hands. It claims for its own not only things present, but things to come.

The reason why it is sure of the future is because it has power to adapt its inherent, growing life to changing conditions. In this it resembles the Bible, which is structured from beginning to end upon the principle of adaptation. It is a record of the development of truth from its crudest to its highest forms. It reveals a process of moral education, in which every successive lesson was wonderfully adapted to the growing intelligence and quickened moral sense of those to whom it was given.



Rev. James M. Campbell, D. D.

DOCTRINAL FORMULAS NEED REWRITING.

The Church has followed the same line of development and adaptation. It has done so more hesitatingly in its methods of work. It has done so in its polity and government. It has done so still more tardily in the revision of its statements of doctrine. And yet it is here that the work of reconstruction is most imperatively required. For no definition of truth is final. Words change their meaning and become obsolete. They grow and die, as men do. Hence our doctrinal formulas need to be rewritten, so as to be adapted to the requirements of language, if nothing else. But not only do words change, thoughts change also. They are growing things, and outgrow the words in which they were expressed, as flowers outgrow the pots in which they were stuck. God's expanding truth refuses to be imprisoned in our formulas; its outward forms must "with endless change be fitted to the hour." Truth is eternal, but it needs to be frequently reminded. Truth never changes, but our conceptions of it do. God is ever the same, but our knowledge of him ought to increase. Finality belongs to the divine, progress to the human. As Browning has said, we "Find progress man's distinctive work alone—

Not God's and not the beasts'."

And it is simply inconceivable that there should be progress in every sphere of human thought and interest, save that of religion.

The process of development is by no means uniform. There are times when it is retarded, and times when it is accelerated. The present age is generally looked upon as one of swift movement, because of its transitional character. But every age has doubtless appeared to those living in it to be transitional, and if the present age appears to us more so than any that has preceded it, it may simply be because we know it better. Yet it is possible that future students of Church history, looking back upon this age, will characterize it as transitional in a preeminent degree. The application of scientific methods to religious inquiry has led to marvelous changes in religious thought. There has been a breaking up of religious dogmas similar to the breaking up of the ice-bound lakes and rivers in spring. Many untenable theories have been abandoned; and the truth, relieved from the burden of unnecessary defense, has been made to shine forth in its own self-evidencing light. It was inevitable that at first criticism should have been destructive; now it is becoming constructive and creative. The era of theological reconstruction is upon us. Doctrines that were in a state of solution are beginning to crystalize, and to re-form under the new combinations. The points of emphasis are being shifted.

There are two main lines upon which this work of development and reconstruction is going on. In the first place it is a movement from the external to the spiritual. A mighty change is taking place corresponding to the breaking up of the old order of things when the law was succeeded by the gospel. That change so graphically described in "The Epistle to the Hebrews" is now being duplicated. There is a passing away of the outward; a religion of mere ceremony is rapidly becoming a thing of the past; a religion based upon outward authority is fast crumbling away, and in its place coming a religion based upon the inward authority of the spirit. The Christ who was once known only after the flesh is coming to be known as he now is; and those who were wont to look for his coming in outward apocalyptic visions are learning with John to find his presence in the soul. And what is still more important from this movement is coming freedom from bondage to the letter in matters pertaining to the religious life; and emancipated souls are entering into the glorious liberty which belongs to them as the children of God.

CHRISTIANITY AGAINST NARROWNESS.

The present day movement of development is also a movement from the limited to the universal. We see how it began to take on this form even in the apostolic days. Take, for example, the liberation of Peter from the Judaistic shackles. By the vision which he beheld on the house top in Joppa that work was completed, and he was brought to include the Gentiles in God's covenanted mercies, and welcome them into the Messianic kingdom. Ever since, Christianity has had to contend with the spirit of racial prejudice, of caste exclusiveness, of class distinctions, and of religious bigotry. It has steadily proclaimed the twin doctrines of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. It has rebuked all narrowness of sympathy and interest. It has taught its followers to pray for all men, and to minister to their welfare in the whole circle of their needs. Whenever it has had its way it has lifted them up into the universal by making their lives blend with the world-embracing purpose of divine redeeming grace.

While this outward movement is not actually resisted, it is often unconsciously hindered by harking back to the past. A restoration of Apostolic Christianity is often pleaded for. Now, Apostolic Christianty was suited for the apostolic day, but in many of its aspects it is unsuited to the present day. We are to "build upon the foundation of the apostles;" we are to use what they have bequeathed to us, just as we use the garnered knowledge and experience of the past in any other department of life. But the edifice to be erected is our own. And we in our turn are to leave something upon which those coming after us are to build; for the temple of God is, as Paul puts it, " a growing temple" upon which every successive generation works, but which is never completed here.

Jeremiah as a Business Man

With a Defense of the Modern Preacher in the Same Role.

BY WILLIAM E. BARTON.

IT would have been good for Jeremiah if he could have gone out among a group of real friends who could have taken his mind off his burdens. But his occasional appearances in society were not wholly happy. He went out one time where other people were enjoying themselves, and people kept as far away from him as if he had been carrying a pot of bright green paint in one hand and a brush in the other. Describing it afterward he said, "I sat alone because of thy hand; for Thou hast filled me with indignation." He did not mean that he was indignant, but that every one else was indignant at him, and he felt he was not to blame for it. They treated him as if he had been a loan shark, of as if he had borrowed money and were afraid to meet his creditors. Jeremiah was proud of his reputation in business matters, but he got no credit for it. People still discounted his business ability. He said, "Woe is me, my mother, that thou hast borne me a man of strife and a man of contention to the whole earth! I have not lent, neither have men lent to me; yet every one of them doth curse me." (Jer. 15:10.)

He paid his debts promptly on the first of the month and yet he never got any such reputation as his business ability deserved.

A PREACHER AND BUSINESS MAN.

One of the most popular fallacies cherished by business men is that ministers have no business ability. They were just as sure in Jeremiah's day as they are now that the ministerial temperament is incompatible with business judgment. There is an element of truth in it. A preacher must have imagination, must have vision; he must see other than material things. Where there is no such vision the people perish. A mere business-man-preacher to whom God's gift of salvation is a commercial transaction, and whose idea of running the church is based on ledger entries, may be a very satisfactory man to those who have the church finances in charge, but a church may grow very poor in its spiritual life under a prosperous business administration. No preacher has any right to be wholly or even chiefly a business man.

Yet ministers are better business men than they are given credit for. With small salaries they manage to rear good-sized families and send their children to college, and they rarely are found in the poor house. Jeremiah's father was a good minister, whose orthodoxy was under suspicion, but he managed to give Jeremiah an education which shows him to have been, all in all, the best grounded of all the prophets in the history, literature and legislation of his nation. Not one of them shows so excellent an equipment in the way of educational preparation as Jeremiah. Not only so, but Jeremiah contrived during his ministry to save a little money.

I do not know how Jeremiah saved any money out of his salary. He was a single man and that may have made a difference. If he had had to keep up a house, and feed and clothe a growing family in an era of stationary salaries and increased cost of living (and that was the time he lived in), he would have had no money in the savings-bank. But he was economical, and had some cash on deposit.

AN INVESTMENT IN REAL ESTATE.

Then hard times struck Jerusalem, and stocks came down. Different people who had made investments that were not paying tried to unload them upon the prophet, just as they do today. But he did not invest in any mining-ventures or oil-wells or rubber plantations. He was a careful financier. One day, while he was in jail (for he went back to jail, though not to the cistern), a cousin of his came around, and said: "Jeremiah, how would you like to buy my farm for a country home?"

He thought that Jeremiah, being in jail, would not know that the armies of Babylon were approaching, and even then were camping on that very farm. But Jeremiah had had in mind for a good while that about this time real estate would be low. And he had kept his money on deposit ready for an emergency. And he made an offer which his cousin accepted on the spot.

Then Jeremiah said: "I want you and all these witnesses to understand that I know just what I am getting. At present I am buying about ten thousand Babylonians with this field, and that is why you want to sell it. I want you all to know that I am not deceived in my purchase. Real estate in the neighborhood of Jerusalem will be low for a good while to come; but I am sure that in time it will have a value. And I buy this to certify that I fully believe that in time God will restore this land to the faithful among his people, and therefore I consider this a good investment."

met that crisis undismayed. He was ready to put up money on the result, and invest his savings in the promise of God. Men smiled and said that preachers were

He was the one man in Jerusalem who poor business men; but Jeremiah knew. He had more business ability than the king, and more than most business men in Jerusalem.

ALWAYS UNPOPULAR.

I should like to tell that Jeremiah retired to his little farm after Jerusalem fell, and lived to a good old age. That I think, had been his hope. He was offered his choice, to go into Babylon or stay near Jerusalem, and he chose to stay, and went to look after the fences of his little farm. But he was not permitted to remain there. There was another period of fighting, and Jeremiah was captured and taken off into Egypt, and there he died. The farm became valuable, but some one else cultivated it. That hope of the prophet to go back and till the soil and raise chickens after he had reached the deadline was unfulfilled.

Jeremiah was unpopular to the last. But of all ministers of the gospel who have ever lived there never was a braver, truer soul than he of whom shallow people know only that he wept. He is not the only man whose influence for good cannot possibly be measured by his popularity.

Several men since Jeremiah's day have had a ministry of tears; but out of the investment of their own lives and heroic sacrifices have bought precious things for the future. Jeremiah ought to be more popular among ministers than he really is. For some of them have had his experiences and do not know that they have been in such good society.

After a while everything went to smash. There was a slump in values, both of religion and of real estate. The bears had everything their own way. I should like to tell you how Jeremiah behaved when the slump occurred.

A CHRISTIAN HUMANITARIAN.

"A city's heart—if it be large and throbbing with feeling for the least of its citizens—is worth more than big industries or a large population!"

That's the creed of Dr. Harris R. Cooley, director of the new department of welfare in Cleveland, Ohio, according to the editor of La Follette's Weekly.

He would change the motto of Cleveland to "The city of good will," because the peace and happiness of a community are more to be desired than commercial prosperity.

"Times are changing. Cities are changing. Ambitions and standards of men and women are changing. And all changes are inevitably tending towards a reverence for human life, its fellowship and community of interests," declares Doctor Cooley.

In an address before the chamber of commerce, at Madison, Wis., Doctor Cooley enumerated these reasons why Cleveland is high up in the world census of cities which have grown in humanitarianism:

"The new charter creates a great welfare department, purposed to see to the comfort and content and well being of its citizens. A famous correction farm has been established where men are reconstructed mentally and physically on the honor system. A splendid colony of buildings and fields is the comfortable refuge for the country's indigent, where old and infirm men and women are tenderly cared for. A tuberculosis sanitarium has been established. An efficiently designed boys' home turns the steps of erring youngsters into paths of health and capability. All these things are expressions of the real heart of Cleveland," believes Dr. Cooley.

"A great community Christmas was held last year in 'the city of good will.' United efforts were made to give the poor and needy food and clothing on that fete day. Universal peace and the brotherhood of all mankind is near at hand. The highest test of society today is what it does to aid the poorest and the weakest—the men and women furthest down. Our welfare department has been established to prove that the securing of human happiness and the opportunity for development of our citizens is today a legitimate municipal function."

Doctor Cooley has grown old in the service of society. His face is full of kindly wrinkles, and his hair is thin, but his finger is ever on the pulse of the humanity of Cleveland.

A WEALTHY BEGGAR.

The hump on the shoulders of a beggar who was sheltered by the San Francisco police recently was found to be a box containing gold coin and paper money in the amount of $23,000. The beggar picked his food from the ash-pit and slept in the open air, says The Christian Endeavor World.

A CONSTRUCTIVE WEEKLY

EDITORIAL

BILLY SUNDAY.

PROBABLY, after all the criticisms are in, the truth about Billy Sunday is that his evangelism is a perfectly logical expression of modern Protestant religion. Our religion has passed from individual experience into a highly-organized institution. It is not now a vigorous inner life that the minister strives to create; he strives to build up a vigorous institution. The inner life with its calm perception and response to spiritual values is nurtured by one thing only, and that thing is Truth. The institutional life is maintained by Pressure, the pressure of a social situation upon the individual. Billy Sunday's evangelism creates and utilizes this social situation. It therefore produces some apparent good.

It hardly pays to criticize the objectionable methods that are distinctive to Mr. Sunday. The thing that needs criticism is the thing that is common to him and to Chapman and to Scoville and to a large proportion of the pastors and editors as well as practically all professional evangelists, the thing common to the whole Church of today, namely, the lack of a religious Idea big enough and potent enough to grip and control the souls of men from within their souls without resorting to artificial social stimuli such as our revivalism has developed.

Perhaps even this deep lack, common to us all, should not be criticised. A better course would be to earnestly strive to possess the mind that was in Christ Jesus and patiently bear with one another until we find it.

It is in this spirit that we have given space to Doctor Kingman's article which though far from a satisfying treatment of the problem Mr. Sunday's presence always raises, is, nevertheless, the best favorable comment we have seen.

THE PERIL OF POPULARITY.

BERGSON, the philosopher, is in danger of being buried under the debris of his own popularity. He has become a fad, and that is almost fatal to philosophy. He has found it necessary to cry out in pathetic plea to be delivered from his friends. He says:

"Almost everything that has been written about my course and my audience is absolutely false. Perhaps some society people do come, but in a small minority. Besides, there are some people of fashion who are very serious. I have known some. I know some now. Why should we be surprised? People like philosophy. Technicians, professors, doctors and former students who come to the lectures at the College de France are just as serious as the small group of students in philosophy. The rules do not permit seats to be reserved either for the former or the latter; but the students who come in to find the seats occupied by those who have the leisure to wait become angry. There is a regrettable but unavoidable conflict. There are, it is true, a few attracted out of curiosity, as everywhere else, who ought to be elsewhere. There are jostling and crowding. But the hall cannot be enlarged. Tradition at the College de France does not permit us to teach elsewhere. A course of the College de France cannot be given somewhere else. Unfortunately this problem seems insoluble. One thing is certain—the hall is too small.

"I am judged by hearsay, by legends, from stories which gain currency by repetition. How often are my works criticized from reports made from the perusal of an article written by somebody who knows nothing about me except a résumé of my philosophy, a false summary of it, published by a writer trusting the word of somebody who could never have possibly held one of my books in his hands. But I do not protest. I let all this stupidity pass."

But M. Reuillard attacked him savagely for the friends he has made, saying:

"One must consider M. Bergson, whether as writer, as professor, or as lecturer, as an elegant product of our modern bourgeoisie. He comes from it and he turns toward it. He flatters its pride and he makes use of it in his plans. In one word, he is of it. This is the cause of his success with the popular public which he has created as God created man, in his own image, so that in worshiping him this public is worshiping itself. It would be a curious task to cite pages of the works of M. Henri Bergson and to extract from them the extracts of human truth that they contain. I have not the space to undertake this amazing task. And clearness, alas, is not always their quality. But the Soul, the unsubdued, ethereal Soul palpitates in these pages, trembles in them, emancipated from low corporeal contingencies. The Soul rises toward Heaven like a cry, or, to be more exact, like a wail—this Soul that was given to man, to man alone, by God himself."

Some ministers suffer in this same manner. Bergson is paying the price of popularity.

HOME RULE FOR IRELAND.

IT HAS come at last. Long fought for and bitterly contested, it has won against an opposition wearied out but not convinced. One more blow suffers the British House of Lords, and one more triumph is believed to have been secured for the people. Home rule for Ireland, so long and bitterly demanded, has come at last. Let us hope that Ireland has not made a leap out of the frying pan. Home rule can deliver Ireland from oppression by the English, but not from oppression by the Irish. Protestant Ireland, in particular, will watch the results of home rule with deep interest and not without anxiety. Let the Irish now show that home rule is a benefit.

Not that the Irish are incapable of government. The history of American municipal government shows that the Irish can govern other things. Let us now hope most earnestly that they will show that they can govern themselves with calmness, economy and justice. The Irish can manage American cities, but we do not remember any that they have managed well. It is time Americans were demanding home rule for their own cities; and if we get that we shall not begrudge the Irish home rule for Ireland.

A CITY LEADER.

AS SUPERINTENDENT of Chicago missions for the past six years Rev. Orvis F. Jordan has grown into a unique position among the Disciples. It is often reiterated to us that, as a communion, we Disciples have missed our great opportunity in the cities. We began in the country and have found our chief growth in the country and the sturdy towns. In few, if any, cities of the first class have we undertaken the problem of developing city churches on lines especially appropriate to city life. What churches have been established have involved very slight self-conscious activity by the sisterhood of churches already existent in the city. Each one has grown up more or less independently, too often, alas! through disaffection and division within the fellowship of another congregation.

For a dozen years the Disciples of Chicago have been striving to effect a unity of inter-congregational life among themselves. As compared with the older days of outright indifference, much progress was made in the half-dozen years before Mr. Jordan became the head of the city work. But since his regime very pronounced progress has been registered. The churches are bound together with a mutual self-regard unknown in former times. The quarterly Assembly held in the heart of the city is a unique event among the denominations of Chicago and probably has no match among Disciples in any city. Two or three ill-advised missions have been discontinued and the others put upon a constantly improving basis.

Mr. Jordan has devoted but a portion of his time to this city-wide task, having during his entire term of service been pastor of Evanston church. But he has brought to his general problem a systematic method, an energy and authority, and a clear vision of what results are worth while and what are not, which make his present relinquishment of the leadership in this work a deeply-felt calamity.

Instead of spending some $6,000 a year on mission work in Chicago and employing a secretary for but a quarter of his time, it would seem that this great brotherhood should more than double that amount and command the full time of Mr. Jordan—we were going to say, "or a man like him," but there is no other like him—to administer it. The Chicago field is still a virgin field for our people. But the time is not far distant when it will be taken and held by others unless taken by the Disciples now.

THE JOY OF THE BIG TASK.

ONE of the surest ways in which to interest a boy in a piece of work is to make it big. He wants to know that the thing he is doing is worth while, and to convince him of this it is necessary to let him see how big it really is. Then he takes hold of it with all his might and sings at his job.

It is the same way with those who are older; they too like the sense that the work that they are trying to do is big. We respond to the task that will call for a little more than the powers that we think we possess with more zest than we do to that which we know we can do comfortably. There must be a challenge in the task or it does not call forth enthusiasm.

It is when we see the full meaning of the program of Jesus, which is another name for the Kingdom of God, that we respond with joy to the summons sounded to all to choose it as the supreme task. Here is simply the greatest thing in all the world demanding our unquestioned loyalty and our fullest measure of service. It is larger than anything else that ever has been proposed. The dreams of a conquered world that fired the ambition of Alexander or Cæsar or Napoleon are as nothing compared with the program of Jesus that looks toward a world restored to God and a kingdom of righteousness and peace and joy. In all the bravest ideals that have stirred the minds of men there is no match for this ideal of Jesus of Nazareth. It challenges the highest hopes of men. It evokes the bravest service that human hearts can render. It awakens the divinest yearnings that can stir the human soul.

This is the challenge of the big task of the Kingdom of God. To it the hearts of all strong men and true women respond with the offer of service and loyalty that correspond to the ideal and to the Master who proclaimed it.

"OUR FATHER."

IF JOSEPH had been addicted to scolding and petty paternal tyranny and Jesus had looked back upon an unhappy childhood, would He have ever taught us to call God "our Father in Heaven?" The whole world, in the use of that name, pays its unconscious tribute to the wisdom, kindness and strength of the humble man who protected, fed and taught the boy Jesus. And Jesus compelled every father thereafter to become to his son an interpreter of God.

In this no father has choice; his choice is what kind of God he will teach his son God is. Jesus compelled this situation, and meant to do so. It is the perilous and sacred honor of fatherhood; and not even the beautiful holiness of motherhood is more sacred than this.

ROOSEVELT AND RIIS.

COLONEL ROOSEVELT returned just as Jacob Riis was about to depart. There was something dramatic in the coincidence. They were most unlike. In temperament and training they might have seemed to possess little in common. But the big, blustering American and the gentle, loyal Dane, had much that bound them together. They wrought out their life purpose with common ideals, and with a mutual love that was as wholesome as it was sincerely reciprocal. Colonel Roosevelt went into the wilds to put a new river on the map, Jacob Riis went into the slums to put Mulberry Bend off the map, and to make that desert blossom into a children's park. It is far too early to write a just estimate of Colonel Roosevelt. It is his nature to waken mighty friendships and strong opposition. But he has taught his generation many useful lessons, and has ennobled his nation's ideal of good citizenship. So also did this poor lad from Denmark, who taught us How the Other Half Live, and who gave to America another great name to add to the list of her honored dead.

NO MORE FREE BREAD.

THE free potato has gone; exit now free bread. Until the cost of living began to soar the railway dining cars gave bread, butter and potatoes free with meat orders, but when the meats began to be marked up, a price list appeared opposite potatoes, while bread and butter remained free. The only food we are taught to pray for was the only edible one could obtain free.

About a month ago the dining cars on the Pennsylvania began charging a dime for bread and butter, and the New York Central Lines soon followed their example. The differential roads still serve bread free with meat orders, and so do the lines west of Chicago; but this may or may not continue. Free bread was economy's last stand against the advance in the cost of living. Not without sorrow do we bid it farewell. To be sure, it is as reasonable to pay for bread as for meat, fowl or good red herring; and there never was any very good reason for expecting it free; but its passing is one more evidence that high prices show no sign of lowering. Free bread, farewell!

NOT A SCAPEGOAT.

IN A recent issue we spoke in terms of strong condemnation of Mr. Mellen's admission of his willingness to deal with the devil, and said that we had been disposed to consider him more or less a scapegoat for popular fury, but that that opinion was in process of modification in view of Mr. Mellen's own testimony. That modification has proceeded steadily ever since Mr. Mellen took the stand. The former president of the New Haven stands self-condemned by his own testimony for direct personal responsibility for the unrighteous deals by which that railroad was looted, small investors were plundered, and human life was sacrificed. Mr. Mellen has himself characterized the transactions. There were deals with the devil. The policy of reposing so much power as Mellen had in one man—and he a man controlled by another, as Mellen was controlled by Morgan—is bad for the public. The devil was the gainer and the public the loser in these transactions, and Mr. Mellen stands between the devil with whom he dealt and the deep sea of righteous public condemnation.

Mr. Mellen was not a scapegoat. Yet he himself came near applying that term to himself. He called himself "the goat." He meant by that that he had not been the one to escape. Mr. Morgan could go to Carlsbad or could die, but Mellen had to live and take the blame.

He deserves it. He has admitted that he was "Morgan's man;" that he feared Morgan; that Morgan by a brusque word could drive his conscience back into its shell; and that he was to all intents and purposes a tool of great financial interests whose bidding he did.

It is a lamentable spectacle when a man who has stood nominally at the head of an immense institution, with thousands of employés, thousands of small stockholders, and millions of passengers putting their trust in his incorruptibility, integrity and loyalty to conscience, and he acknowledges that all the time he was "proud to be known as Morgan's man."

No, Mr. Mellen is not the kind of a goat we were charitable enough to think him; nor is he quite the kind of goat he weakly acknowledges himself to have been. The American public is calling its servants to account, and separating those who have shown honor, righteousness and conscience from the other kind, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats. Mr. Mellen may pass to the left.

"Christian Faith and Social Service."

The Presbyterian bodies have not been content to declare in high-sounding terms that they are interested in the problems of modern social and industrial life. They have gone seriously to work getting the bearing of the church's teachings upon these problems, with a view to putting the church actually at the task of social betterment. In line with this effort a Declaraton of "Christian Faith and Social Service" was prepared by a joint committee representing the assemblies of the Presbyterian, the Southern Presbyterian and the United Presbyterian churches, and the Synod of the Associate Reformed Church. The "Declaration" has been approved and passed by the two first named. The last two have not yet been heard from. In its report the committee explained that, in the Declaration, the words "Christian faith" are used to designate the teachings of the whole scriptures, the essential doctrines of which are held in common by all evangelical churches; that the word "church" is used to designate an organized body, and that the term "social service" is used to designate the practice of the principles set forth in God's holy law which regulate the relations by which men are bound together in the social order.

The Declaration of Faith.

"I. We believe that man's chief end is to glorify God and to enjoy him forever, and that the first duty of all men is to seek God, to repent of sin, to accept the offer of salvation through Jesus Christ and to dedicate their lives unreservedly to his service.

"II. We believe that, from the creation of man, God has ordained for us those social relationships which are to his glory and to the happiness and usefulness of mankind, and that in every age he has made known his will that he that loveth God must love his brother also.

"III. We believe that the moral principles upon which all social relations are based were written in the heart of man, when he was made in the image of God, that these principles have been obscured by sin and are revealed anew in the Holy Scriptures. Inasmuch as all evils, social and individual, have their source in human sin and selfishness, they can be remedied only by the divinely appointed plan for salvation from sin and through the divinely given motive, which is the love begotten in our hearts through God's great love for us in the gift of his Son.

"IV. We believe that the church, holding the gospel of Jesus Christ, is not only the appointed means to salvation from eternal death, but that with the state and the family, she has a distinctive work to do in bettering the social relations of men in this present world. The power given to the church is spiritual, ministerial and declarative, and her function, through the word and the Holy Spirit, is to inculcate and apply those principles and to quicken those motives which are essential to all true and lasting reform."

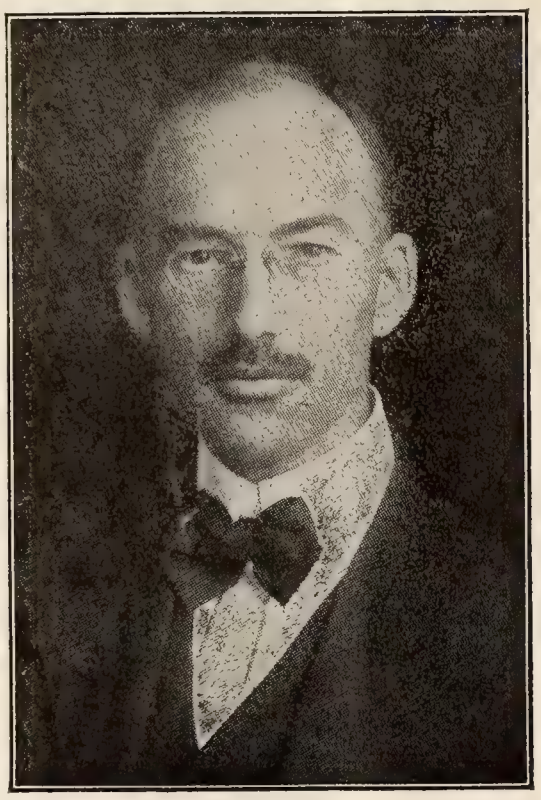
Statement of Modern Conditions.

In Section V are pointed out the reasons why under present conditions especial emphasis should be placed upon the message of Christianity.

"V. We believe that the social conditions of our day require emphasis upon the divine message for the following reasons:

"1. The tremendous advance in our time of scientific discovery and invention and of commercial, industrial and civic enterprises by which men have been brought into closer relations of reciprocal dependence and service towards one another as individuals and towards society as an organized body.

"2. The vast increase of wealth, its unequal and often unjust distribution, and the consequent increase of the power of the privileged few to exploit their fellowmen for private and selfish ends.



Rev. Bouck White, who has established a new social church in New York City.

"3. The development of great business corporations which discharge many of the functions once belonging to individuals, and as a result of this the weakening of the sense of individual responsibility for social wrongs.

"4. The fostering or protection of vice as an instrument to private gain or to selfish ambition for place and power.

"5. The submergence of large classes in ignorance and poverty so that the difficulty of reaching them with the message of Christ is greatly increased."

What the Church Shall Emphasize.

But the committee is not content with this general declaration of conditions. It follows with a statement of certain facts that the church must emphasize in its teaching and practice. "These reasons require that the church of Jesus Christ, which takes its stand as Christ did against the sins of social injustice and tyranny, as well as against other forms of sin, should emphasize:

"1. The duty of man towards his fellowmen as individuals and towards society, with reference to the life that now is as well as to the life which is to come.

"2. The duty of men to put into practice the Christian principles of love, justice and truth in all their social relations, economic, industrial or political; as officials or citizens of the state, as employers and employes, as capitalists and laborers, as stockholders or officers in corporations, and in all similar relationships.

"3. The responsibility of men both for the manner in which they acquire positions, possessions and power in their social relations, and for the manner in which, as stewards of God, they use these, lest in the great day of judgment, they be found unfaithful.

"4. The responsibility of every individual not only for those social wrongs to which he may be a contributing cause, but for those which by his prayers and efforts, he could assist in abolishing.

"5. The duty of Christian citizens to observe those principles of our religion which require that every man do his full share of the world's work; which oppose injustice and tyranny, even when these are entrenched in the usages of our civilization; which lead men to endeavor to maintain themselves in a self-respecting, God-fearing way, this self-maintenance being understood to include a fair return for labor, sufficient to support the man and his family, conditions of labor that are safe and healthy, opportunity to provide against illness and old age, and relief from labor on one day in seven; which lead to movements to secure childhood against forced labor and woman against conditions degrading to womanhood.

"6. The duty of every man to accept Jesus Christ and obey his teachings as the only cure for the injustice, tyranny and sin now looming so large upon the world's horizon.

Organizations for Social Betterment.

"VI. We believe that, inasmuch as many of these evils are rooted in the past and have grown with the development of civilization, they can be cured only by concerted and organized effort on the part of all good citizens. Our churches, therefore, should always encourage voluntary organizations for the betterment of social conditions and urge their members to co-operate in them, leaving private judgment to decide what means or methods or what organizations are best adapted to the promotion of these desirable ends."

Boston Baptist Social Union.

The Baptist Social Union of the city of Boston is said to be the first of such organizations in the United States. An endowment of $1,000,000 given a few years ago by Mr. Daniel S. Ford, recently deceased proprietor of the Youth's Companion, has made it possible for the union to add something to its program of work in addition to the ordinary social features. A part of the money was invested in the Ford Building, the income of which is used to carry on the work of the union. The chief aim has been to reach the people who are out of touch with the church.

Y. M. C. A. Aids Churches.

The Young Men's Christian Association now "sees the light" and is devoting much of its energy to putting its men and boys at actual tasks within the church. The association of Providence, R. I., has been doing a fine piece of cooperative work with the churches of that city and in its vicinity. Volunteers from the churches are working under the supervision of the association where they meet for conference weekly. The association makes assignments and assists in the formation and management of the clubs. Thirty such clubs with a membership of 1,600 were conducted last year. Necessarily much is done to entertain the boys but the religious element is not overlooked. In every club some sort of decision service is held before the close of the season. As a result of this many boys have been won to the Christian life and to church membership.

Men's Federation Makes Social Survey.

One of the most interesting of recent social surveys has been conducted by the Men's Federation of London, Ontario, representing the churches of the city. The report is published in a neat 100-page booklet. The investigation covers recreation and delinquency, education, considerable place being given to indus trial education, religious education and church life, public health, charity and hospitals, liquor and social vice, industrial conditions, including housing and markets. The purpose of the survey was constructive, and was not intended to humiliate the city or its people. Recommendations are made, and necessary follow-up action is indicated.

Quaker Editor Rouses Church.

The editor of The American Friend, looking over the activities of sister churches in the establishment of brotherhoods, the holding of congresses and the organization of societies for social service, has decided that if the "Society of Friends" is to prosper it too must meet the spirit of the age with a strenuous program. He declares that the Society of Friends must "break through the shell of somewhat exclusive environment into larger fields of service wherein lies the hope both for the present and the future." He closes his editorial with the following words: "The call of the world is in our ears and in our hearts. It is the cry of humanity for light and for guidance. No local meeting, no yearly meeting can solve our problems alone. By taking counsel together and by rallying around our central boards, shall we not put forth a supreme effort to incorporate our Quaker ideals into the life of this century as an important element in the Christianizing influence of this age?"

Dr. Gulick for Federal Council.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has appointed a Commission on Relations with Japan, has secured the release of Dr. Sidney L. Gulick from his work with the American Board of Foreign Missions and engaged him to serve as the representative of the Commission. Plans are now being formed, looking towards an attempt to consider the whole question of our relations with Japan in the Christian spirit and from the Christian point of view. Dr. Gulick will continue to represent the Federal Council in addresses before chambers of commerce, city clubs, churches, universities and other influential groups.

English Baptists Great Givers.

The Baptists of England have completed a fund of $1,200,000, the income of which is to be devoted to supplementing the salaries of ministers in small churches. The leader of the undertaking, whose personal magnetism has been a very large factor in its success, is Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, who has in this achievement duplicated his feat of ten years ago, when he raised an equal sum as a "twentieth century fund" for building new churches at home and abroad.

Missionary Education Conferences.

The Missionary Education Movement of the United States and Canada announces the following conferences for 1914 in the United States. Blue Ridge, N. C., Friday, June 26, to Sunday, July 5. Asilomar (near Pacific Grove), Cal., Friday, July 3, to Sunday, July 12. Silver Bay, Lake George, N. Y., Friday, July 10, to Sunday, July 19. Estes Prof. E. O. Excell, who will direct the singing at the International Sunday-school Convention in this city.

Park, Colo., Friday, July 17, to Sunday, July 26. Lake Geneva, Wis., Tuesday, August 4, to Thursday, August 13.

Secretary Cope's Summer Plans.

Secretary H. F. Cope, of the Religious Education Association, announces that his plans for the summer include lectures and addresses at the state universities of Oklahoma and Virginia, at the University of Pittsburg, the Conference of American Rabbis at Detroit, the International Sunday-school Association, the Religious Education Association Conference in connection with the National Educational Association at St. Paul.

R. S. McArthur on Church Names.

Robert Stuart McArthur, the famous Baptist preacher of New York City, is quoted as follows: "The name of Presbyterian, Congregationalist, Methodist and Baptist, however much we love it, and however loyal we are to it now, is to give place to that name which is above every other name. The day will come when the dashing waves of time and eternity shall strip off every name but one. Not our name, but the name of our Lord and Saviour, our Prophet, Priest and King, will abide! and amid the light of earth and the increasing glory of eternity, that name shall alone be read—Jesus Christ."

Notables at Moody Institute.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. J. Stuart Holden, Rev. Charles R. Brown and Rev. John McNeill, of Toronto, will be at the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, this summer. The first-named lectures, July 1 to 5, in the regular summer course and the others during the recess, August 23 to 30. Pastors, theological students and other church workers can avail themselves of these privileges without cost for tuition by addressing the institute.

Unitarians Seek New Name.

The name "Unitarian" was characterized as inadequate in the report of Secretary Lewis G. Wilson, at the eighty-ninth annual meeting of the American Unitarian Association held at Boston last week. "If we are to take advantage of the world-wide opportunities now awaiting us," the secretary's report said, "we should have for our practical use, or at least as an alternative, a new and a more adequate name. We hold a new and a more adequate name. We hold no attitude of hostility toward any religious body. It is our mission to instruct, enlighten and harmonize the churches of Christendom. but the name we bear often prevents us from carrying out our purpose. No one desires to bring about an immediate change in name, but is it not possible to take the first step?"

Southern Baptists Sound Unity Note.

The Southern Baptist Convention began its sessions at Nashville, Tenn., May 13. It is interesting to note that this convention placed itself on record as approving the movement toward Christian unity, at the same time, however, holding the church to Baptist activities. The third section of the report of the efficiency Commission dealt with the question of union in these words: "We are in hearty accord with every movement and cause in which Christians of every name may take part without doing violence to the sacred mandates of conscience and without impairing their sense of loyalty to Christ." The commission then expressed the view that the highest efficiency of the denomination would be attained by "strict loyalty to Christ" and by the fostering and multiplying of denominational schools. "We believe that in this way we can render the greatest service to other Christians and most surely and speedily promote their union on the Holy Scriptures, the only possible basis of a real and abiding Christian union."

Oldest Woman Minister 89.

Rev. Antoinette Brown Blackwell, on her eighty-ninth birthday, May 20, planted trees in her private forest on Martha's Vineyard. Doctor Blackwell is also a pioneer suffragist. Recently she spoke at the suffrage day celebration in Elizabeth, N. J., her home town. When Doctor Blackwell was prepared for college in 1843 only one college—Oberlin, then known as the Collegiate Institute—admitted women. Since her ordination 2,500 women have become regularly ordained ministers.

Of Human Interest

Wu Ting Fang on "America."

The following statement comes from Dr. Wu Ting Fang, late Chinese Minister to the United States. It is taken from his recent volume, "America Through the Spectacles of an Oriental Diplomat." This paragraph indicates how America appears to the cultured people of the Orient:

"The nation which has a large army and a strong navy may be called powerful, but it cannot be considered great without other good requisites. I consider a nation as great when she is peacefully, justly and humanely governed, and when she possesses a large number of benevolent and good men who have a voice in the administration. . . . The territory of the United States is separated from Europe and other countries by vast oceans; so that it would be difficult, if not impossible, for a foe to successfully attack any portion of that country. But who wishes to attack her? She has scarcely an enemy. No country is invaded by another without cause, and as the United States is in friendly relations with all the powers, there is no reason to fear foreign invasion. Even should a foreign power successfully attack her and usurp a portion of her territories, a supposition which is most improbable, would the enemy be able to hold what he seized? History shows that no conquered country has ever been successfully and permanently kept without the people's consent, and there is not the least chance that the Americans will ever consent to the rule of a foreign government."

Some of Lincoln's Lesser Troubles.

In "The Every Day Life of Abraham Lincoln," Mr. F. F. Browne included an amusing anecdote told by Admiral Porter about the president's short visit to the front in the latter part of March, 1865. Mr. Lincoln had changed his quarters from the "River Queen" to the "Malvern," Admiral Porter's flagship, which was then lying in the James River, near City Point. Admiral Porter says:

The "Malvern" was a small vessel with very poor cabin accommodations, and was not at all fitted to receive high personages. She was a captured blockade runner. I offered the president my bed, but he positively declined it, and chose to sleep in a small stateroom outside the cabin that my secretary occupied. It was only six feet long by four and a half feet wide—a very tiny place to hold the president of the United States; but Mr. Lincoln seemed pleased with it.

When he came to breakfast the next morning, I asked how he had slept. "I slept well," he answered, "but you can't put a long sword in a short scabbard. I was too long for that berth." Then I remembered that he was over six feet four inches, and that the berth was only six feet! That day, while we were away from the ship, all the carpenters were put to work. They took down the stateroom partitions and enlarged the room to eight feet by six and a half feet. A mattress four feet wide was put in the new berth.

Nothing was said to the president about the change in his quarters, but the next morning he came out of the room, smiling, and said, "A miracle happened last night; I shrank six inches in length and about a foot sideways. I got somebody else's big pillow, and slept in a better bed than I had on the "River Queen." He enjoyed it greatly; but I think that if I had given him two fence rails to sleep on he would not have found fault. That was Abraham Lincoln in all things that related to his own comfort. He would never let you put yourself out for him under any circumstances.

Where He Might Fit In.

Senator Vance was one of a large family of boys. Their mother hoped that at least one would have been a good Presbyterian minister, but they slipped through her hands. Zebulon was the youngest; and all her hopes centered in him, until he said, "Mother, I am sorry, but I cannot become a minister." "Why not? What is the reason?" He answered: "I am not good enough to be a minister." She was sorely troubled, but at last faltered out, "Zeb, don't you think you are good enough to be a Unitarian minister?"

A Bismarck Anecdote.

Bismarck had little regard for women who attempted to think for themselves in matters of state and politics. Moreover, he never took any pains to conceal his dislike for them. Occasionally, however, when his adversary was a clever woman, he found the snub returned as effectively as he gave it. Tit-Bits describes one such incident:

One day he paid a visit to the Russian embassy at Berlin. Several women who were present joined in the conversation, which turned on some of the political questions of the day. Bismarck was as gruff and surly to the women as usual; he flouted even the mistress of the house, the Countess Schouvaloff.

At last, to the relief of everybody, Bismarck took his leave. A few moments later the family mastiff was heard barking at the great man, in the courtyard.

Immediately the countess ran to the open window and called, in tones of gentle entreaty:

"Oh, please, Monsieur le Chancelier, please don't bite my dog!"

Emerson Had a Poor Memory.

Ralph Waldo Emerson's period of literary production might have been considerably longer had he followed the light breakfast regime advocated by the London Lancet. An authority says: "We are all human and we all need cheering cups—but no pie at breakfast! It was pie at breakfast that broke down Emerson prematurely; no human being, however well, can live long and keep his mind unclouded on pie at breakfast. Emerson lost his mind—or memory—at a much earlier period than he would have been likely to lose it owing to the vicious habit of pie at breakfast."

In later life Emerson's memory played him some strange tricks. James Cabot, his biographer, says that he met him one day in the streets of Boston, apparently at a loss for something, and asked him where he was going. "To dine," said Emerson, "with an old and very dear friend. I know where she lives, but I hope she won't ask me her name." Then he went on to describe her as "the mother of the wife of the young man—the tall man—who speaks so well" and so on, until Cabot guessed to whom he was referring.

Emerson was often at a loss for the names of common objects. Once, when he wanted an umbrella, he said, "I can't tell its name, but I can tell its history. Strangers take it away." This failing led to a pathetic scene at Longfellow's funeral. After gazing long at the face of his lifelong friend, as he lay in his coffin, Emerson said to a bystander, "That gentleman was a sweet, beautiful soul; but I have entirely forgotten his name."

The Mexican Robin Hood.

Villa was an outlaw for twenty-two years. When he was only a boy of sixteen, delivering milk in the streets of Chihuahua, he killed a government official and had to take to the mountains. The story is that the official had violated his sister, but it seems probable that Villa killed him on account of his insufferable insolence. That in itself would have not outlawed him long in Mexico, where human life is cheap; but once a refugee, he committed the unpardonable crime of stealing cattle from the rich haciendados. And from that time the Mexican government had a price on his head.

Villa was the son of ignorant peons, states John Reed in the June Metropolitan. He had never been to school. He hadn't the slightest conception of the complexity of civilization, and when he finally came back to it, a mature man of extraordinary native shrewdness, he encountered the twentieth century with the naive simplicity of a savage.

It is almost impossible to procure accurate information about his career as a bandit. There are accounts of outrages he committed in old files of local newspapers and government reports, but those sources are prejudiced, and his name became so prominent as a bandit that every train robbery and hold-up and murder in northern Mexico was attributed to Villa. But a number of popular legends grew up among the peons around his name. There are many traditional songs and ballads celebrating his exploits—you can hear the shepherds singing them around their fires in the mountains at night. For insance, they tell the story of how Villa, fired by the story of the misery of the peons on the hacienda of Los Alamos, gathered a small army and descended upon the Big House, which he looted, and distributed the spoils among the poor people. He drove off thousands of cattle from the Terrazas ranges and ran them across the border. He would suddenly descend upon a prosperous mine and seize the bullion. When he needed corn he captured a granary belonging to some rich man. He recruited almost openly in the villages far removed from the well-traveled roads and railways, organizing the outlaws of the mountains. Many of the present rebel soldiers used to belong to his band and several of the constitutionalist generals like Urbina. Everywhere he was known as "The Friend of the Poor." He was the Mexican Robin Hood.

Mixed Metaphors.

In discussing a live question before the Methodist ministers of Chicago a colored pastor of another denomination exclaimed, "Brethren, I took the bull by the horns, I started the ball to rolling until every preacher in town was shaking in his boots"—which same is a fairly creditable bull.

The Lord of Out of Doors

As surely as the sap rises in the trees in the spring time, so surely does there come to the normal heart the "impulse to the vernal wood" at this blessed season. Old things are passed away—winter's cloud, and cold, and storm, and death—behold, all things are become new—spring's sunshine, and warmth, and color, and fragrance, and music! Around and about us is a new heaven and a new earth, of such exquisite and heavenly loveliness, that the heart aches for utterance of its quickly coming, swiftly passing beauties; and though our own poor lips are dumb before the pageant of new life that is daily unrolled before us, now and then there come stealing to our minds old, half-forgotten strains from others, who could not only see, but tell whereof they saw. As we gaze on the spring sky, with its silver clouds and sapphire dome, how we love to recall that matchless picture from Ruskin—even though it carries a reproof to our own blindness.

"Who can tell me," asks the great prose poet, "of the forms and principles of the chain of tall white mountains, that girdled the horizon at noon yesterday? Who saw the narrow sunbeam that came out of the South, and smote upon their summits, until they melted and moldered away in a dust of blue rain? Who saw the dance of the dead clouds, when the sunlight left them last night, and the west wind blew them before it like withered leaves?"

And that other rebuke of Wordsworth's, in the sonnet where he laments that the world is too much with us, and exclaims—good and devout Church of England man though he was!—

"Great God! I'd rather be
A pagan suckled in a creed outworn
So might I, standing on this pleasant lea,
Have glimpses that would make me less forlorn—
Have sight of Proteus, rising from the sea,
Or hear old Triton blow his wreathed horn."

But a greater than Ruskin or Wordsworth has set us the example of loving study of nature, and to Him we can always go for the thought that interprets and satisfies. The background of his life was the open air, with the warm winds blowing about him, and sunlight and shadow falling on hill and plain and town. How seldom do we read of him in house, or synagogue, or even in the Temple! On the mountains teaching and preaching, holding his night vigils under the splendid Syrian stars, or communing with heavenly beings, going back and forth on the lovely lake, or talking to listening multitudes on the shore from the swaying boat, making the grassy plain a banquet room for the thousands who flocked to hear him, through the corn fields, by the wellside, in the city streets—how many times must he have followed foot paths up and down the land of Palestine! Is he not, indeed, our Lord of Out of Doors?

And how his teachings reveal him as the lover of trees, and birds and flowers—as the practised observer of earth, and sea, and sky! How different are his modes of speech from those of his greatest interpreter and follower! Paul, city born, city bred, a man of the world in the best sense of the term, has his thoughts colored by the thronging civic and military life of his day—he uses its stately buildings and temples, its races and athletic games, its ever present soldiers, to illustrate his spiritual truths.

But the life and words of Jesus are so linked with God's great out of doors, that he seems to walk more closely beside us than ever at this peerless season.

The busy round of spring work is full of parables of teaching and comfort. The homely task of seed sowing, and seed growing, speaks to us of the open, prepared heart, that his truths may sink deep into good ground, and bring forth a harvest of good works.

And the lesson of fruit bearing!—how dependent is the branch on the vine, and yet how the vine cannot bear its fruit, except on the branches! And how eloquent of meaning is the spring task of pruning those vagrant branches—teaching that lesson so hard to learn, that often much that is green and beautiful in our lives must be pruned away before we can be fashioned into the shape he would have us be!

As we look with wistful tenderness on the frail flowers, and see how they bloom in matchless loveliness in spite of their dread enemies, chill and frost, do they not tell again the old, old story of the care of God for them—and for us?

The spring song of birds is ever echoing the same refrain—"Fear not; ye are of more value than many sparrows; your Heavenly Father feedeth the ravens; be not anxious—for he careth for you."

Our gardens are not only beautiful with plant and bloom and singing birds, but they are rich in holy memories at this time of their full consummate flower.

The story of human life began in a garden, where was every tree that was a delight to the eyes and good for food. In it, man held unbroken communion with his Maker, and often as the evening wind stirred the trees was His voice heard in the cool of the day. And in that garden was played the tragic drama of sin and shame and exile from its pleasant paths, and from the presence of Jehovah.

"Now in the place where he was crucified, there was a garden; and in the garden a new tomb, wherein was never man yet laid. There laid they Jesus."

H. H. Harmon Celebrates Anniversary.

With June 17, Harvey H. Harmon completed eight years of leadership with First Church, Lincoln, Neb. Mr. Harmon began his pastoral work at David City, Neb., in September, 1896, having recently graduated from Cotner and Nebraska State University. From David City he went to Columbus, Ind., where he served as pastor for three years. Mr. Harmon received his M. A. degree from Butler the following year. He came to Lincoln in June, 1906. Mrs. Harmon is a Cotner graduate, and has proved a true helpmeet in the Lincoln work. The following "Appreciation" of Mr. Harmon is the expression of the church he serves: "June 17, 1906, Harvey H. Harmon became pastor of the First Christian Church of Lincoln, Nebraska. The results to the church of his eight years of leadership are recorded in the brick and mortar of its material prosperity, in the numbers and unity of its membership, in its vital relation to the life of the community about it, and in its world-wide vision. Mr. Harmon's sincerity of purpose, his democracy, his charm of personality, his instinctive sympathy with the joys and sorrows of others, his industry and devotion to the cause in which he labors, his blamelessness of life—these are some of the qualities that bind pastor and people in genuine affection and that have won for him recognition far beyond the bounds of congregation and city. He has grown as the work has grown, and tenaciously adhering to the essentials of the faith, he has constantly challenged his people to avail themselves of the best in present day learning and experience. On this eighth anniversary of his coming among us, the First Church greets him and his good wife and family with assurances of confidence and love and high esteem, and the expression of the hope that the relation of pastor and people may continue many years."

Cedar Rapids Church Thrives.

The annual "family supper" and business meeting of First Church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., June 3, was a pronounced success. The fellowship and reports for the year were most encouraging, writes Walter M. White, pastor. The work of the congregation is divided among twelve different organizations, so distributed as to meet the various ages and needs of the entire membership. Each of these reported decided actual progress made during the twelve months, some departments showing an increase of quite one hundred per cent, this being noticeably true of the Sunday-school and C. W. B. M. Auxiliary. The church and auxiliaries raised and expended in the various lines of Christian service during the year a little more than $9,500. The congregation has fellowship with all of the organized missionary and benevolent agencies. The church has enjoyed a splendid growth in membership during the year, 91 new members having been received at the regular services of the church. The net increase in membership for the year was 82.

W. W. Dowling's Biography to be Written.

"A Condensed Record of a Very Busy Life" will be the title of a sketch of W. W. Dowling's career which is soon to be issued. Mr. Dowling has truly shown himself "diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," especially in his editorial work, which has demanded his time for a half century. During the year 1864 he served as Chief Assistant to Elder Elijah Goodwin, editor and publisher of "The Weekly Christian Record," at Indianapolis, Ind., which was afterwards merged in "The Christian Standard," of Cincinnati, Ohio, January 1, 1865, he began the publication of "The Little Sower.' Many who afterwards became eminent as ministers, missionaries, teachers, editors, writers, lawyers and business men and women, received this paper in the Sunday-schools in their childhood days, and some of them who are yet alive no doubt remember it well. Mr. Dowling served as head of the Sunday-school department of the Christian Publishing Company for many years. He also wrote song books and works of a miscellaneous character. During these busy years, Mr. Dowling has always been found faithful in his duties with the church of his affiliations. He says his wish has always been to be permitted to work on until "the last day in the afternoon."

It Is "Dr." Harrison Now.

Transylvania University last week conferred the degree of LL. D. upon Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison, editor of the department of Modern Womanhood in The Christian Century. In conferring the degree Doctor Crossfield, the president said: "Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison is perhaps the first woman to receive the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from a Kentucky college. Mrs. Harrison, we are not forsaking the beaten paths of convention in conferring this degree upon a woman for the sake of novelty, but we are moved altogether by a deep sense of academic justice. Nearly two thousand years ago, on a house top in a city by the sea, it was symbolically shown to the leader of a great religious and social movement that God made no distinction between Jew and Gentile—that the existing prejudice against the other nations was unjust and un-Christian. A vision has likewise come to the modern world, showing us that there should be no distinction between male and female. You have attained unto great eminence in the world of religious activity and the field of social service. Your mind has been well trained and stored with the best thought of the ages. Your perception and appreciation of the best expressions of literature have been highly developed; your services to this community, to the state, and to the nation through the agencies of organizations for women have been recognized and rewarded; and your attainments in the field of letters have won the admiration and warmest esteem of a large group of contemporaries. It is, therefore, with unusual pleasure that I confer upon you the degree of Doctor of Laws."

Mrs. Helen L. Dungan, Disciple hymn-writer, who recently died at her home in Indianapolis.

Transylvania Honors Church Leaders.

President Miner Lee Bates, of Hiram College, and Secretary Stephen J. Corey, of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, also received the LL. D. degree. The former was characterized as one who has "contributed a definite and valuable deposit to the sum total of human knowledge and greatly blessed mankind." To Mr. Corey President Crossfield said: "Your wisdom, patience, and boundless enthusiasm for the realization of the ideal society described in the greatest of books have placed your name in the list of contemporary heroes of the faith."

The Arkansas Convention.

The Arkansas convention at Fort Smith was not largely attended, but important work was considered. There was planned at the convention an "Arkansas Convention of Men" this fall at Little Rock, for the purpose of "Assisting the Church of Christ in Arkansas" and throughout the world. A committee headed by J. H. O. Smith has charge of arrangements. G. A. Hoffman, once identified with the Christian Evangelist, now a pastor in Arkansas, presided over the convention. In his report as President he made some remarks about conditions that caused a flurry in the convention. He said that the reason the Christian church has not prospered in Arkansas as it has elsewhere, is largely due to the fact that the religious newspapers of the "anti" element have been introduced, to the exclusion of progressive journals. "It is everywhere recognized," Mr. Hoffman said, "that the religious paper which sows discord, and objects to every move which points toward progress, is an enemy of the cause, and ought to be banished. The difference between organization for the conduct of the theology of the church, and organization for the conduct of the Missionary enterprises of the church, is the difference between ecclesiasticism and co-operation. J. H. O. Smith said, "The reason our 'anti' churches do not cooperate, is, that they have had no part in forming the co-operation. Let us begin to organize our districts, by asking every church, 'anti' included, to appoint a representative on the District Board. We will then begin to grow a co-operation to which the antis cannot object. Mrs. Laura Delaney Garst represented the C. W. B. M. National organization at the convention. The Disciples have 125 churches and 84 preachers in Arkansas.

A Treat for Iowa Pastors.

Every pastor, elder and deacon of every church in Iowa should be interested in the Rural Life Conference to be held at Iowa State College at Ames June 22 to July 3, inclusive. A strong program has been arranged and this program is graced by the names of some men of national reputation, among them being ex-Secretary James Wilson, Ernest Seton-Thompson and Dr. Luther Gulick. Perhaps the most valuable lectures for ministers and church officers, however, will be those of H. N. Morce, a former minister who is now in county improvement work in the East. He will give a lecture each day dealing with Religious Education in the community. There will be no fees for attendance upon the conference. Rooms will be provided free for ministers provided notice is sent at once. Any making application for these should indicate the church to which they belong. L. C. Harris, pastor at Ames, and his people will do their best to provide for all if word is sent in at once.

Buffalo Church Loses Leader.

R. H. Miller, pastor at Richmond Ave. Church, Buffalo, reports the death of one of the most useful members of this congregation, A. B. Kellogg. Mr. Kellogg's entire business life has been spent in Buffalo, as editor and agent for many large estates. To the Richmond Ave. Church of Christ Mr. Kellogg's death comes as a great loss. He had been a trustee of the church almost from the date of its founding in a chapel. During all the years of the church's growth and expansion he had been director and confidant of the congregation in every phase of its affairs. During the years in which many men accumulated a fortune Mr. Kellogg distributed his income in benevolences and church work. He dedicated his genius for business management to the church and was the chief factor in its development from a little chapel to the present modern structure on Richmond avenue. When the community-house was built in connection with the church in 1910 Mr. Kellogg arranged and directed the whole financial scheme. He was also for many years a trustee of the New York State Christian Missionary Society and a liberal contributor to the general missionary agencies of the Christian church.

F. W. Emerson Keeps Busy.

F. W. Emerson of Albany, Ore., is a busy man. He was recently re-elected president of the Oregon State S. S. Association at both Albany and Pendleton. The twin conventions will meet as one in Portland next year. On the 31st he preached the baccalaureate sermon for the Albany high school, on the 7th of June, delivered the Memorial sermon for the Modern Woodmen and on the 8th he left for the East to fill a series of lectures and Chautauqua dates. He will be gone about three weeks.

Noted Hymn Writer Passes Away.

Mrs. Helen L. Dungan, noted as a writer of hymns, died Sunday at her home in Indianapolis. She had been for years a member of the Executive Board of the C. W. B. M., and was an active worker. She is survived by her husband, Prof. J. M. Dungan, and her sister, Mrs. Mary Woods, of Los Angeles.

Besides his manifold cares as the pastor of the greatest church among the Disciples in Oklahoma, and one of the greatest churches in the Christian brotherhood, H. E. Van Horn has been having as many as three commencement addresses in one week.

W. B. Zimmerman, pastor of the church at Pleasantville, Iowa, will spend the months of July and August on the Chautauqua platform, as manager and Bible lecturer. He is with the Midland Lyceum Bureau of Des Moines and this is his second year.

Doctor Powell, in his article on "Religious Unrest and Heresy," published in last week's Century, was made to misstate himself in the first line of the second paragraph. The little word "not" should be inserted after the word "would."

S. R. Hawkins was recently elected president of the Portland Ministers' Federation for the coming year. This organization has a membership of about 300 preachers, residents of Portland and vicinity.

If you expect to attend the convention at Atlanta send to E. E. Elliott, R. A. Long Building, Kansas City, Mo., for booklet telling of the fares and routes.

Walter M. White, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, writes that all eyes are now turned toward Colfax, the Jerusalem of the Iowa disciples, for the week of July 13-19.

Arkansas Disciples are arranging a special train to run through from Little Rock to the Atlanta convention. The fare is $18.65 for the round trip.

Grant W. Speer, pastor of Central Church, Toledo, O., is expected home from a tour of the Orient about July 1.

On a recent Saturday "Pinkerton Day" was observed in honor of the retiring pastor at Kenton, O., T. W. Pinkerton.

ATLANTA IS PREPARING.

Perhaps the largest supper ever served in the First Christian Church, of Atlanta, Ga., was that of Monday night, May 18, when about two hundred sat around the festival board. The supper was the first of several to be given between this and October, when the great convention will convene in Atlanta.

The feast finished, L. O. Bricker, general chairman of the local committee, called the assemblage to order, and stated the object of the gathering. The chairman of each committee gave a talk on the duties of his committee, and the progress made so far. The reports show that everything is most encouraging and the chairmen have the duties of their committees well in hand.

The great Shriners' Conclave, just closed, has the remarkable record, in the Railway Bureau, of handling 500 Pullman cars per day, and during this conclave not a person was killed or injured by the railroads. Over 60,000 shriners and about 40,000 outsiders were in Atlanta and so thorough was the system adopted and followed by the Railway Bureau that so far as known not a person was injured.

Foreign Society Commission to Far East

On July 21 a Commission of the Foreign Society, consisting of Secretary Stephen J. Corey, Prof. W. C. Bower of Transylvania University, and R. A. Doan of Nelsonville, Ohio, will sail for the Philippine Islands, China, and Japan. This step is taken in response to frequent and urgent requests from the missionaries and the native churches.

The society is to be congratulated upon its good fortune in securing these able men for this important task. Secretary Corey is an acknowledged leader in any group of missionary experts. His ability to see things worth while, and his power to picture to others what he does see, is well known. Almost 10,000 copies of his book on the work in the Congo were sold, and a similar journal may be expected from his pen upon his return.

Prof. W. C. Bower is an experienced missionary pastor, a teacher of missions in the department over which he so ably presides, a man of broad information, sound judgment and withal possesses a consuming passion for the world's evangelization.

R. A. Doan is a consecrated business man, the teacher of one of the largest men's Sunday-school classes in the world. His reputation as a successful business man is known far and near. Honored and loved in his own city, he is looked to as a leader in all social and religious and business enterprises.

This step marks a new epoch in our missionary history. This is the experience of a number of other older missionary societies. The work now bulks so large, its interests are so varied that careful administration is a problem of growing importance.

Modern missions to the non-Christian world requires schools, colleges, training-schools, hospitals, orphanages, publishing plants and other institutions. With the growth of these avenues of service, all of which are truly evangelistic, comes the necessity for careful planning and the wisest possible administration. The work must be projected into the distant future and solidly builded.

The cheer to the missionaries and the churches on the fields and the more intimate information brought back to the Board of Managers will repay manifold for all the time and trouble expended.

It is expected that all the expense of the commission will be met outside of the regular missionary funds.

Mr. Doan, in company with his family, will continue his journey on to India and around the world, and will be gone a year or more. However, Messrs. Corey and Bower are expected to return to San Francisco by December 20 next.

the Atlanta convention being the largest in the history of the Brotherhood. The local committee are each day in receipt of information which is indeed most encouraging for a great crowd. Every one wants to come and see "Dixie;" and well they may, for it is a wonderful country. Over 60,000 Shriners from everywhere have just left singing the praises of Atlanta and the South. Here is what the newly elected Imperial Potentate of the Shriners, a man of caution with words, a man of experience with cities, Dr. Frederick R. Smith, says:

"This aggregation of 140,000 to 150,000 extra population Atlanta has received, housed and entertained with a completeness of program and an absence of hitches that is not short of astounding. We knew to expect much from Atlanta, for the reputation of Atlanta stretches as far as the English language is spoken on the North American continent. But expectation was extinguished in a flood of reality when the plans your people have made on a colossal scale were materialized, and when you took us all into your hearts as friends and brothers."

The very same reception and hospitality await the brotherhood, and Disciples will never be sorry they came to Atlanta.

CHURCH COLLEGE.

Christian College at Columbia, Mo., closed its sixty-third year, June 2, with a week of splendid programs. Thirteen graduates from the school of Arts and Science received the degree of Associate in Arts. There were twelve graduates from the School of Music; six from the School of Expression; two from the School of Art. Nine certificates were granted by the Academy which prepares for entrance to standard colleges and universities.

On May 28, the annual art exhibit was held in the college studio. Nearly all the work in ceramics was from original designs by the students, and the display in black and white, water colors, and oils was of a high order. The thoroughness of the work in the School of Art is indicated by the fact that a total credit of four hours is granted by the University of Missouri.

On May 29, occurred the annual meeting of the board of trustees in the spacious new library room of Dorsey Memorial Hall. That evening undergraduates in the school of expression gave a program of readings and scenes from "David Copperfield." In November, students of this department gave the Greek play, "Alkestis" with the same musical setting as used by the students of the University of Michigan. By a recent affiliation, all work done in the School of Expression will be given full credit at the Emerson College of Oratory in Boston.

On Saturday night, May 30, occurred the closing concert by graduates of the School of Music. A brilliant program was given. The University has examined the work in the theoretical courses and has granted four hours of college credit in these courses; 256 students have been enrolled in the School of Music during the past year. On May 31, baccalaureate services were held at the Christian Church. The sermon was preached by Benjamin L. Smith of Moberly, Mo. The speaker took as his theme, "The Loom of God," and his forceful, eloquent address was heard by an audience which taxed the capacity of the church. A beautiful musical program was rendered by college talent.

Historic class day was celebrated by the college seniors the morning of June 1. A clever program was given beginning in the college auditorium and closing with the processional to the campus where was given the ivy oration followed by the ivy planting.

Dr. Edward Alfred Steiner, Professor of Applied Chemistry at Grinnell College gave the commencement address the morning of June 2. Doctor Steiner's subject was "The Challenge of the American Spirit." President St. Clair-Moss gave a brief closing address on the "Value of the Junior College for Women," and conferred the degrees, diplomas and certificates. Immediately following commencement the annual alumnæ luncheon was held, covers being laid for almost one hundred.

The college has enrolled during the year 256 students from seventeen states and from Australia and Canada; 165 have been registered in the boarding department. To accommodate the demand for rooms, a residence hall across the street was leased, and the dormitory and this annex have been filled all year. More dormitory space will have to be provided or late applicants refused for lack of room.

The college records the loss of its oldest, and one of its most valued trustees, Mr. William H. Dulany, who recently passed away at his home in Hannibal, Mo. Brother Dulany was a strong friend of Christian College and gave generously to it at a time when this help was greatly needed. The trustees will announce in the near future a memorial to Brother Dulany by one of his family.

The outlook for the next year is of the brightest. The fact that students may do their first two years of college work under the careful supervision of a junior college, is bringing to us the best and choicest of young women.

INDIANA MOVES FORWARD.

Truly, a new day has come to our state work, with aggressive new leaders at the helm.

Keep your eye on Indiana, for she is determined to do some big things in the near future. State educational institutions and Bethany Park Summer Assembly are to be chief beneficiaries in the new advance and development. Large things are also being planned for Butler College.

Terre Haute Convention marked high achievement for the first year under the new regimen in state missions. Marshall T. Reeves is standing back of our Indiana work with the spirit of a generous philanthropist.

The presence of Dr. C. C. Morrison in the convention was most helpful and he was enlisted for some spiritual and soul uplifting service while with us.

These things are to be wrought out in Indiana under the state board, viz.:

(1) Thorough supervision of the entire state under the five district evangelists.

(2) Close and effective organization of each county in the state.

(3) Generous encouragement to Bethany Park and educational interests in the state.

(4) The more thorough development of the School of Methods idea for our state gatherings.

(5) The permanent establishment of new churches before state aid is withdrawn.

(6) Strategic and vital mission points given first preference.

(7) More time and deliberate attention given to reports of committees and regular business in future conventions.

(8) New propaganda for conservation of rural fields and forces to be wrought out.

(9) New slogan, "Forward with Christ with unity and harmony for all interests in the new advance."

(10) To make this the greatest year in our Indiana Mission work of enlargement.

ABOUT BETHANY ASSEMBLY.

The Knights of the Holy Grail will camp at Bethany Assembly this year. Several hundred boys are expected. The use of tobacco is prohibited; profanity will not be tolerated; fighting will not be permitted under any circumstances. Dr. Edward Powell, founder, will direct the camp this year as usual.

The C. W. B. M. Rally will be held August 4 at Bethany Assembly. There will be addresses, conferences together with messages from district, state and national officers. In the evening H. J. Derthick, Indianapolis, Ind., will give a lecture.

The National Association of Evangelists will conduct a ten days' School of Methods at Bethany Assembly, July 21-31. Each day from 8 to 9 a. m., there will be a round table upon "Modern Evangelism." The 9 to 10 a. m. period will be the "Sermon Period," at which time vital subjects will be considered. At 3 to 4 p. m., there will be a mass meeting in the auditorium each day. The subject for the first five days, July 21-31, will be "Isms in Religion," while for the second five days, July 27-31, the subject will be "Sunday-school Methods and Evangelism" which will be discussed by R. M. Hopkins, national superintendent of Bible Schools.

There will be a conference of evangelists and pastors at Bethany Assembly, at 4 to 5 p. m., each day from July 27-31. "Methods in Evangelism," "Relationship of Evangelists and Pastors," "Recruits for the Ministry," "Conservation of Results" and kindred subjects will be discussed.

Our young people should not overlook the "Life-work Meetings" that will be held each day at Bethany Assembly from 6:45 to 7:30 p. m., from August 4-14. Bert Wilson will be the leader. This hour should be the best of all the periods in that many will be directed toward that which they will make their life-work for the Master.

John D. Zimmerman, Topeka, Kans., will deliver ten lectures at Bethany Assembly, August 4-14, at the 2 to 2:45 p. m. period on "Christian Endeavor Methods." These ten days are especially directed toward the needs of the young people, and there should be not fewer than 500 taking these courses in the Bible School, the C. E. and Mission departments of this, the second term of the Summer school.

There will be a Basket Dinner at Bethany Assembly, Sunday, July 26, under the direction of the Rural Church Department of the Summer school. J. W. Street and "Only Ever" Kelley will be in charge. Special addresses in the afternoon by eminent speakers.

The Rural Church Department is arranging for a debate at Bethany Assembly on July 27. The subject is, "Resolved That Our Churches are Injured More by the 'Railroad Minister' Than They are Helped." There will be something going on at the C. W. B. M. cottage at this hour, 8 to 9 a. m., if we mistake not.

The music at Bethany Assembly will be a feature this year. Singing evangelists to the number of 100 are expected. All of these will be heard in concert and in other ways, such as opportunity will afford. There will be an orchestra organized by Prof. J. E. Sturgis, teacher of orchestral instruments in the Summer school. All who play small instruments are requested to report as soon as possible on July 20. Schools will do well to send their entire orchestra to Bethany these ten days and let them be trained under this great leader.

ELDRED MEMORIAL BUILDING.

On Lord's Day, May 24, the Church of Christ in Coldwater, Mich., met to consider affairs vital to the continuance of this organization. One of the subjects considered was a church building. At present they are worshiping in a remodeled blacksmith shop. Guy Amaden, an elder of the church and an Angola-Hiram man, suggested the idea of building an Eldred Memorial Church of Christ in Coldwater, county seat of Branch County, where R. Ray Eldred, missionary to Africa, was born, and in which county his mother and father are still living. A few days ago Mr. Amaden, Jas. A. Cargill and wife and the Hull Brothers, who are holding a meeting here, visited the Eldred home and presented the plan of the memorial church, which met with the family's approval. Several of the Eldred family are members of this congregation.

This congregation is not able to build a suitable building demanded by the idea involved, so voted to ask the Brotherhood to join them in such an enterprise. I feel the cause for which we plead, the noble life of the Eldreds, their sacrifice of all for Africa, and the inspiration to missionary heroism, should call forth a quick response to this memorial undertaking.

The Bible Chain Memorial to Mr. Moninger at Bethany College has been an inspiration to the Sunday-school work, and so will the Eldred Memorial to the missionary enterprise. If a church building could be erected here in our home land for every missionary whose life work should win the same approbation as the Eldreds, what blessings would come to the cause of missions and to the heart of our missionaries. Some wealthy Disciple should volunteer to the Foreign Missionary Society for such servi e. Erecting a building in some important or needy place would increase the missionary churches in the home-land which would bless, fill and thrill our members for work at home and abroad. "I am not afraid to die, but wish I might carry on my work," is the dominant thought of the missionary. None of us like to be forgotten after having wrought a noble work. The Eldreds' was noble and royal. During my ministry in Indiana we had the pleasure of the Eldreds in our home and on several missionary trips, where Mrs. Hull and I saw their real heart-love for the redemption of Africa. I feel the Foreign Missionary Society should lead in this enterprise, as it will be a blessing to the society, an uplift and inspiration to our churches to hear of missionary achievements and see the faces and places, near and dear to our workers. Let us pray, plan and act as one man for a worthy recognition of our missionaries and their work.

Under each Federation are indicated its functions and activities, showing the possibilities and opportunities for community action.

Copies of the Directory may be procured at the cost of printing, ten cents each, upon application to the office of the Federal Council, 105 East 22nd St., New York .

ECHOES FROM CHILDREN'S DAY.

The Sunday-school at Charter Oak, Brock, Neb,, sends $30 to support a student in India. The school is very small and this is a fine offering. Mrs. Emma Scrimsher is the Missionary Superintendent.

Lawrenceburg, Ky., through E. B. Bourland sent $86, their apportionment for Children's Day.

Miss Elizabeth Farley, Missionary Secretary of the First Christian Church, Roanoke, Va., writes: "We had a delightful Children's Day program in every way on May 31. Offering $104."

E. S. Cummings, Seventh Christian Church, Indianapolis, Ind., reports a fine Children's Day with an offering of $96.10. They are building a new church and the Sunday-school is meeting in five different places.

The First Sunday-school, Akron, Ohio,sends $525. This school is a living-link and supports Mrs. G. B. Baird at Luchowfu, China.

The Sunday-school at Bachelor Creek, (Wabash) Indiana, reports a splendid Children's Day with an offering orf $164.03.

The little Sunday-school at Pine Grove, W. Va., gives an offering of $28.75. Twenty-one children gave $1 each. This is a fine record for the school.

The Sunday-school at Zanesville, Ohio, doubled their apportionment on Children's Day.

Edgar A. Rice, Superintendent of the Crawfordsville, Ind., Sunday-school sends a noffering of $150, thus reaching their apportionment.

O. H. Curtis of Owenton, Ky., writes:—"We have a new church to build, having lost our old one by fire, but we want to keep in touch with the missionary work." They more than reached their apportionment.

Our Sunday-school will have about $110 towards support of Mrs. Hensey. This will be sent in a few days. We will make full $600 this year. W. B. Hendershot, Central Christian Church, Huntington, W. Va.

The Opportunity, Washington, Bible School pledged $32 last Sunday for Foreign Missions, $5 more than our apportionment. We feel greatly encouraged over such a showing. C. M. Green, Supt.

The Sunday-school at Antioch (Bolckow) Mo., C. C. Eisiminger, superintendent, sends $22.82. This is a great advance over any previous year. STEPHEN J. COBEY, Secy.

OKLAHOMA CONVENTION.

The twenty-third annual convention of the Oklahoma Christian Missionary Society convened in Sapulpa, June 1-4, and has gone down in local history as the best in years.

Sapulpa is a vigorous little city located on the borders of the famous Glenn Pool oil district and its setting is so picturesque that it made an ideal convention city. Careful preparation had been made by the good people of that place, under the capable direction of our pastor, M. F. Ingraham, for the accommodation of the visitors. As our church there is on the verge of building a new house of worship, because of the inadequacy of their present church building, the brethren of the M. E. Church South, kindly opened their commodious church for the sessions of the convention.

The C. W. B. M. session was called to order Monday by the president Mrs. D. A. Wickizer of Norman. This organization has done commendable work throughout the state during the past year.

Monday evening the convention proper opened with a devotional period conducted by T. T. Roberts of Enid, field secretary of Phillips University. M. F. Ingraham of Sapulpa, delivered the address of welcome which was responded to by Frank H. Lash of El-Reno. The convention sermon was preached by R. W. Clymer of Okmulgee.

From this time on to the close of the convention Thursday afternoon the sessions were all of the highest order. Many of our national workers were there including W. J. Clarke of the Bible School department of the American Society, Dr. Garrett of the Foreign Society, Grant K. Lewis, John Bootn and Otis Hawkins who presented the work of the Benevolent Association. R. B. Briney, Cor. Sec. of Missouri was present and gave an account of the state work in that state, and telling specifically of the Missouri plan of organization.

However the major part of the program was furnished by our own efficient corps of workers. Several new preachers to the state were introduced to the convention including J. C. Burkhart of Muskogee, Chas. R. Hulme of Bartlesville, H. E. VanHorn of Oklahoma City, J. W. Umphres of Chandler, Summer T. Martin of Nowata, and M. McCormick of Alva. Bro. Burkhart delivered a stirring address on "The Value of Organization in Church Work," and Sumner T. Martin brought a timely message on "Christian Union."

One of the features of the convention was an old fashioned round table with reports from all the churches represented. An encouraging growth and wonderful prospects were reported almost without exception.

The Bible School session, under the direction of H. S. Gilliam, our efficient State Secretary of Sunday-schools, was a wonderful inspiration. A most excellent report was rendered by the secretary after which addresses were made by G. W. McQuiddy of Oklahoma City, Isom Roberts of Ponca City, and W. J. Clarke of Indianapolis.

The Bible Study periods were conducted by A. G. Smith of Enid and E. T. Lane.

The business sessions were given over to a serious consideration of the needs of the field. Many advance steps were taken and never was more earnest study of our local needs made. A plan of work similar in some points to the Missouri plan of work but adapted to meet local needs and conditions was adopted.

The sessions were ably presided over by A. R. Spicer of Lawton who was present at all the sessions but the first.

The music was in charge of C. H. Altheide, one of our strong singing evangelists.

There were two banquets. A Bible School banquet Tuesday evening with C. H. Nichols of Oklahoma City as toastmaster and a Brotherhood banquet with A. R. Spicer of Lawton as toastmaster. The latter was a great occasion with over 150 plates, while the former was but little smaller and as full of life and inspiration.

Oklahoma City was selected as the place for the convention next year, and Geo. P. Taubman of Tulsa was elected President of the O. C. M. S. with Chas. R. Hulme of Bartlesville as recording secretary.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR JULY 5.

Matt. 20:1-16. Memory Verses, 6, 7.

Golden Text.—He maketh his sun to rise on the evil and good, and sendeth rain on the just and the unjust. Mt. 5:45.

American Standard Bible.

(1) For the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that was a householder, who went out early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard. (2) And when he had agreed with the laborers for a shilling a day, he sent them into his vineyard. (3) And he went out about the third hour, and saw others standing in the market-place idle: (4) and to them he said, Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right I will give you. And they went their way. (5) Again he went out about the sixth and the ninth hour, and did likewise. (6) And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing; and he saith unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle? (7) They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us. He saith unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard. (8) And when even was come, the lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, Call the laborers and pay them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first. (9) And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, they received every man a shilling. (10) And when the first came, they supposed that they would receive more; and they likewise received every man a shilling. (11) And when they received it, they murmured against the householder, (12) saying, These last have spent but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, who have borne the burden of the day and the scorching heat. (13) But he answered and said to one of them, Friend, I do thee no wrong: didst not thou agree with me for a shilling? (14) Take up that which is thine, and go thy way: it is my will to give unto this last, even as unto thee. (15) Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? or is thine eye evil, because I am good? (16) So the last shall be first, and the first last.

Verse by Verse.

BY C. C. BUCKNER

v. 1. That was a householder: The householder represents Christ. Went out early in the morning: The working hour began at sunrise. His vineyard: This represents the world.

v. 2. The laborers: The disciples of Christ. A shilling: The shilling was worth a little less than seventeen cents. It was the regular daily wage.

v. 3. About the third hour: According to our method of reckoning time it was about nine o'clock in the morning.

v. 4. Whatsoever is right: It is always well to leave the adjustment of such matters to the employer if he is a true man. And they went their way: Because of their confidence in the householder they were perfectly willing that he should pay them what he considered their labor was worth to him.

v. 5. About the sixth and ninth hour: According to our reckoning the hours were about twelve m. and three p. m.

v. 6. Eleventh: Five p. m. And he saith unto them, etc.: Note the interest of the householder in those who have no employment.

v. 7. Because no man hath hired us: They were not willing idlers. As Christ's representatives we must be aware that there are many men idle in the great church of Christ simply because they have never had the opportunity to work. Whenever a man comes into the church he should be given a task at once. For, except he has the chance of translating his high resolution into action, it will surely evaporate.

v. 8. Pay them: Every effort which we put forth for Christ is paid for sooner or later.

v. 9. They received every man a shilling: No man was paid less than he deserved.

v. 11. 12. When they received it, they murmured against the householder: We must not fail to see that a very common but subtle form of jealousy is here set forth. It was irritating for them to see others enjoy unusual fortune. There are many men today who make their lives miserable by the development of a sourness on the world because some people enjoy extremely good fortune.

v. 13. But he answered and said to one of them: Several had made complaint but when the householder wished to speak to them in answer to their murmuring, he singled out one and spoke to him personally. We must not fail to note how, on many occasions, Jesus addressed himself to only a part of those in his hearing. This very personal element in the teachings of our Lord is one of the most distinctive. Friend: While he wished to speak without any evasion, yet he would have them know that he bore no unfriendly feeling toward them. How very considerate and kind does the householder show himself to be in this form of address! Didst not thou agree with me for a shilling? It was his own bargain. There is no doubt but that he was perfectly satisfied at the time of the engagement.

v. 14. Take up that which is thine, etc.: While the householder was kind and large-hearted, yet, we see that he was also firm. there was nothing "easy" about him. The man deserved a rebuke and so received it. He was firmly kind and kindly firm.

v. 15. Is thine eye evil because I am good? In this place good means generous, or more than just as in Rom. 5:7. "The evil eye is a phrase of jealousy: Are you jealous because I am generous?" Tarbell.

v. 16. So the last shall be first and the first last: In this great verse is pointed out the unfitness of man as a judge and the perfect fitness of God. Man only guesses at the right. His standards of right and wrong are imperfect; and his judgments of living up to even his own standards are imperfect. But God knows all things. He knows the right and he knows when men are doing the right. And so how perfectly natural it appears that in the afterwhile, we shall discover, that those whom we have been placing first will come last and those whom we have been placing last will come first. Let us not serve God on the wage basis, however. Let us find our pay in the fact of work well done.

BY REV. A. Z. CONRAD, PH.D.

Jesus spake in parables. Truth is many sided. Not a single parable was designed to cover the entire truth of the subject under consideration. The parables of the Kingdom each deal with certain features and phases of the Kingdom, and not with the Kingdom in its entirety. There is much in emphasis. The right thing must be stressed or you lose the import of the parable. The parable of the vineyard touches many points but stresses one. What hope could there be for a nation, a community or individual who had lost the most of the day before the opportunity for service was discovered? The message of the parable emphasizes two points, first, the graciousness of God and secondly, beatitude for the belated. The Jewish nation was first in opportunity but last in response. The patience and mercy of God constitute the supreme miracle of the ages. While mercy avails even for wasteful prodigals the lesson of this parable has particular reference to those who are late in finding the way into Christian service but who have not absented themselves from the "market place." They have been seekers for truth and an element of sincerity characterizes their activity.

THE VINEYARD.

"The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a man who was a householder who went out early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard."

The type of the vineyard suggests the attractiveness of the Kingdom. Opportunity and beauty are the fundamental thoughts associated with it. It is something that has to be cultivated. It is cultivated with the expectation of vintage. The Kingdom does not grow without attention. As the weeds in the vineyard have to be suppressed so manifold evils have to be eliminated in Kingdom growth. Certain fruit must be gathered. Laborers must be secured for this purpose. The laborers did not furnish the sunshine nor the fountain. God must do that. He did the growing. They must do the cultivating and the harvesting in co-operation with him. Rightly understood the most attractive thing in the world is the Kingdom of God. Here the richest fruits of Christian character are to be found. Here the most rewarding service is to be performed. Here the flowering and the fruiting of the truth of God reveal his presence. The Christian religion furnishes the most attractive field for activity and there is nothing more instructive or more inspiring than a study of the Kingdom of Jesus Christ in the world. It furnishes the most charming fellowship, the highest and holiest themes for thought, the mightiest appeals for unselfish devotion, and the kingdom is represented by the church. The philanthropic and humanitarian activities outside the church are only a reflection of the church in her holy engagements and enterprises. High incentive and holy motive are to be found in the teachings of the church of Christ.

OPEN DOORS FOR THE BELATED.

The third, the sixth and the ninth hours the householder is represented as going again to the market place and employing all whom he found ready for service. As a further indication that the door of opportunity is never closed he went at the eleventh hour and through his graciousness and goodness he threw wide open the door of opportunity even for these belated ones. "Why stand ye here all the day idle?" is his pertinent inquiry. It is worth while to note that they had been in the market place and not loafing upon the street corners, or engaged in questionable amusements, or self-indulgence. The parable deals with those who were willing when shown how and what to do. It is not to be construed therefore as indifference to the life which is negligible, wantonly wasteful, and selfishly degenerate. Yet, there is something of rebuke in the inquiry. They had no need to have idled away the time. They could have been searching more diligently for an opportunity to gain employment. Yet, through his graciousness the householder at once employs them. Their replies are illuminating. "No man hath hired us." The householder might well have answered, "You have not been sufficiently diligent in finding one to employ you. A proper zeal would have discovered opened doors." As applied to the church of today both the question and the answer are forceful. The leaders and teachers of religious truth are profoundly impressed with the greatness of Christian opportunity, yet, it is doubtful whether a clear conception of the kingdom has obtained. Both in the leadership and the following there have been confusion and misunderstanding. A multitude of church members have become indifferent and drifted away because "no man has hired them." False ideas of Christian service have led people to believe that, unless they could be doing something in the nature of office holding or of committee work or some specified thing to which a man could send them that they were not working in the kingdom. Now the great and all important truth is that Jesus Christ sets men to work who are willing to work, and that in the kingdom the one supreme task set before every one is, the winning of another soul to Christ. Everything else is subordinate and even unimportant in comparison with this. Furthermore, this furnishes young and old people of all classes and kinds an opportunity for service, for each can reach by persuasive influence certain individuals who are particularly responsive to that especial personality. It is immensely encouraging to those who feel that much of the day has been passed; that even now at the eleventh hour they may enter heartily and with the assurance of divine acceptance into the work of kingdom building. When the vision comes and the right ideal of service is presented and possessed how many there are who, even during the eleventh hour, work with such zeal and intelligence that they accomplish almost a full day's work. This is also illustrated nationally in such countries as Korea, where the pentecostal power has been so wonderfully manifest. This eleventh hour nation is outstripping almost any other nation in exemplifying the teachings of Jesus and in its holy passion for redemption.

TOPIC FOR JULY 1.

Christian Patriotism. Rom. 13:1-7. I Tim. 2:1-4.

Among the men whose names are detested traitors to their country have a conspicuous place. Of those whom the world delights to honor there are many whose patriotism is their most distinguished characteristic. The Christian man, professing to have at heart the welfare of all men, discharges his obligation to the world through service to his own country. He who knows the heart of one people is able to understand the heart of humanity. The detached man is superficial and devoid of noble enthusiasm.

THE LARGER PATRIOTISM.

In his address on the death of Gladstone John Dillon said: "He loved his own people as much as any Englishman that ever lived. But through communion with the hearts of his own people he acquired that wider and greater gift: the power of understanding and sympathizing with other peoples. He entered into their sorrows and felt their oppressions. And with splendid courage he did not hesitate even in the case of his much loved England, to condemn her when he thought she was wronging others, and in so doing he fearlessly faced odium and unpopularity among his own people which it must have been bitter for him to bear; and so he became something far greater than a British statesman, and took a place among the leaders of the human race. Amid the obstructions and the cynicism of a materialistic age he never lost his hold on the Ideal! And so it came to pass that wherever throughout the civilized world a race or a nation of men were suffering from oppression, their thoughts were turned toward Gladstone, and when that mighty voice was raised in their behalf Europe and the civilized world listened, and the breathing of new hopes entered into the hearts of men made desperate by long despair."

THE PATRIOTIC IDEAL.

At a time when men are being accused of fostering the war spirit for their financial gain one is apt to make slighting remarks about the patriotism that never shows enthusiasm until mention is made of the army and navy. We should put over against this false patriotism that of Mazzini, which is the patriotism of all good men. To the young men of Italy he said: "Love humanity. You can only ascertain your own mission from the aim placed by God before humanity at large. Beyond the Alps, beyond the sea, are other peoples, now fighting, or preparing to fight, the holy fight of independence, of nationality, of liberty; other peoples striving by different routes to reach the same goal. Unite with them and they will unite with you. And, young men, love and reverence the Ideal—that is the country of the spirit, the city of the soul, in which all are brethren who believe in the inviolability of thougnt, and in the dignity of our immortal natures. From that high sphere spring the principles which alone can redeem peoples.

PRAYER FOR RULERS.

Rulers are human beings. The worst mayor and the worst governor in the country have some good qualities. Paul could admonish men to maintain a sympathetic attitude toward Rome when Nero was emperor. The Christian minister who denounces men in authority ought to remember that they are his fellow creatures. They may be grievously in the wrong. The denunciation from the pulpit that causes men to think they are listening to a bitter partisan, a disappointed politician, and not to an ambassador of Christ, hurts both church and state. Prayer for rulers is to be more than a formal affair. He who speaks the words must be deeply concerned for the souls of the rulers and of those who must obey the laws. The wrath of the pulpit must be that of love.

EDUCATIONAL TALKS ON INVESTMENT.

Number Ten.—MOST IMPORTANT

How to Invest Lucratively and Safely.

I have attempted to show in the previous nine talks, why it was inadvisable to invest in several forms of security, and have promised in this last talk to show you a way in which it is possible to put your money to work at the highest efficiency compatible with absolute safety.

I wish to point out before I even begin to talk on the type of investment that I believe brings the best results—that if a man or woman expects me to promise them seven to ten per cent per annum on their money, they might as well stop reading right here.

My experience has been that the minute a man or woman began to look for more than a legitimate return of their money, the attendant risks began to count up, entirely out of proportion with the chances for big returns.

THEREFORE TO THE MAN OR WOMAN WHO EXPECTS ME TO PROMISE THEM MORE THAN A SAFE STEADY SIX PER CENT—PROPERLY SECURED—AND SO INVESTED THAT IT IS POSSIBLE FOR THEM TO GET THEIR PRINCIPAL OUT, AT WILL—I SAY—

"This Will Not Interest You."

But to the man or woman who will be satisfied with the above conditions, I wish to point out the manifold advantages of the SIX PER CENT FARM MORTGAGES as an investment.

THEY ARE SAFE.
THEY ARE SURE.
THEY BRING BIG RETURNS.
YOU CAN LOAN ON ANY TERMS YOU WISH.
FARM LANDS CANNOT HELP BUT INCREASE IN VALUE.
THE SECURITY IS MOTHER EARTH.
FARM LANDS ARE THE SOURCE OF MOST FOOD PRODUCTS.
THE POPULATION OF THE UNITED STATES IS STEADILY INCREASING.
THE LAND CANNOT INCREASE IN AREA: THEREFORE IT MUST INCREASE IN VALUE.
YOU CAN INVEST ANY AMOUNTS FROM $300 UP.
I HAVE LOANED MORE THAN $1,500,000 FOR MY CLIENTS WITHOUT LOSS TO A SINGLE INVESTOR.
I CAN FURNISH REFERENCES FROM INVESTORS WHO HAVE BEEN MY CLIENTS EVER SINCE I STARTED THIS BUSINESS.

The MEANING of BAPTISM

By Charles Clayton Morrison 250 pages, $1.25 plus 10 cents postage

The most important work treating of the characteristic teaching of Baptists and Disciples that has appeared in this generation. It deals with a theme that is peculiarly alive to every mind that has had any part in the Disciples' reformatory movement. The author writes with conviction, but wholly without partisanship. He states issues incisively and faces them squarely. He holds an original and independent point of view for the treatment of the subject of Christian Baptism. He accepts the position of the Disciples as to the practice of immersion only, but rejects much of the reasoning traditionally put forth by his brethren and the Baptists in support of this practice. The book is refreshingly frank. Mr. Morrison does not believe that immersion is baptism. In the opening chapter the author puts himself squarely in opposition to Alexander Campbell's argument.

This notable volume is now in press. A very large edition will be run at the first printing. It is expected that the book will have a wide sale throughout the Christian world. Baptists will read it. Pedo-baptists will read it. Certainly every minister and earnest layman among the Disciples will wish to read it.

WHY The Bethany System of Sunday School Literature Demands Your Attention!

1. It is the product, not simply of the talent of our own brotherhood, but of the expert workers and writers of the ENTIRE SUNDAY SCHOOL WORLD.
2. Mechanically it is the most nearly perfect of all the systems of graded literature produced to date.
3. Because the use of the Bethany lessons will make it possible for your school to co-operate in graded union activities. With other literatures, you will be handicapped in such co-operation.
4. It represents a notable achievement in Christian unity, for which principle the Disciples as a people stand. The Bethany literature is the joint product of five Protestant bodies.

We do not ask you to use the "Bethany." We do ask you to compare it with other systems. If it does not prove to be the Best, after a careful examination, use the system that IS the best.

Rev. Finis Idleman, of Des Moines, Will Write for "The Conquest"

Rev. Finis Idleman.

For several months "The Conquest" has been looking for a man who could work out our ideal of what a Sunday School lesson treatment should be. In addition to the Scripture text and a "verse by verse" explanatory column, there should be a straight-from-the-shoulder talk applying the principles of the Sacred Word to today's life. We have found the man who can do it, and is willing to do it. Mr. Idleman will talk to "Conquest" Bible classes just as he talks to his great Des Moines class. His treatment of the lessons will be forceful, inspirational, up-to-date. This feature will begin early in July. Watch for it. Still other new features are to be announced.

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Character Talks

By Austin Hunter, Pastor Jackson Boulevard Christian Church, Chicago

Rev. Austin Hunter.

SELF-CONTROL

Self-control is an indispensable element to a useful life. Great power is of little service unless it is under control. Many a man spoils all the good he has accomplished by allowing his temper to get the better of him. It is no mark of greatness to be high-spirited unless you master yourself. Some insane people are high-strung. We are exhorted repeatedly in the Word to moderation. It is not "Let your self-assertiveness, or your anger, but rather let your moderation be known to all men." Self-mastery is a key quality; it is the secret to steadfastness, to service and to safety in Christian work. How perfectly self-possessed at all times the Master was! Hence nothing ever caused him regret. We are to "bridle" the tongue. This is the organ put in motion when we lose self-control. The perfect man is one who offendeth not in "word." Let every one who would seek to be great understand that "he that controlleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city."

"The Conquest is just what you say it is—'a journal of character-building,'" writes one of our superintendents. "The Conquest" takes itself seriously. That's why its readers take it seriously. Is the paper your school is taking one that emphasizes the things that should be emphasized in a Sunday school—serious Bible study, religious ideals and Christian service? "The Conquest" has as its aim not simply to give schools what they have been used to—small talk of school work; but to publish such material as will actually GROW CHARACTER.

Have you seen "The Conquest?" "Character Talks" is one of its features. J. H. Goldner, of Cleveland, will contribute the "Talks" for July. Send for a copy of "The Conquest."

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

Free With Every Drink

The saloons are given to displaying their attractive signs: "Egg, oyster or sandwich free with every drink." Doubtless many a hungry man is persuaded the more easily to spend his last dime or nickle for a drink because of what he is assured will come free with it.

The saloon-keeper is true to his sign. He does furnish what he advertises free with every drink.

But there are some things which he furnishes and does not advertise. He is so modest about publicity in this matter that we feel impelled to do a little advertising for him. So here is a display of the things that may be had free with every drink, and not a cent do we ask the saloons for this display of what they furnish gratis to their customers.

Not long ago we saw a woman and a little boy waiting at a short distance from a saloon. The woman was thin and trembling and the wind whipped her garments about her. The boy cowered at her side with the fear written on his face that is bred in the home of the drunkard. They were waiting in the hope that they might catch the husband and father before he should enter the saloon and spend his wages. And this fear and dread in the face of the mother and her boy is what is served free with every drink in the saloons.

Yes, Mr. Saloon-keeper, you know that it is not the egg or the sandwich alone that you give your customer for nothing. You know that it is your business that gives the shivering dread to fearful women and causes the nameless terror in the faces of little children. That is the free lunch that you serve along with your whiskey and beer.

Why don't you put it on your sign where it can be seen by every customer: "Broken hearts and awful fear free with every drink."

An overturned automobile lay among the stones in the ditch and the shuddering people pried and pulled at it until they took out the dead bodies of two men and sent two more bleeding forms to the hospital. It was the end of a drunken joy ride and the men got their liquor in saloons which advertised what they gave free with every drink, but somehow forgot to put the whole horrible offering on the sign in the window.

Why not make it read clear and plain, Mr. Saloon-keeper: "Mangled forms and sudden death free with every drink."

The son of a Chicago business man ended his brief career in an Eastern college not many months ago and came back bringing his broken health and the record of his shame with him to a home where all the noblest and best ideals of America are still represented by a sad and suffering father and mother. The wreck was made on the rocks of college punch and liquor bought from men who never advertised all the things that they were furnishing free with every drink.

But why not display the sign so that the college man can see what a splendid bargain he is getting when he buys your goods, Mr. Liquor-dealer? Let it be put up in big letters: "Ruined manhood and broken ideals free with every drink." Then at least the transaction would be honest and you would be doing business on a sound basis.

In a town there was a little home. God sent his greatest gift to it. In a few hours the young mother was dead. A man staggered through life with a crippled soul. He never said much about it all; but he knew. The doctor was drunk. He got a muddled brain and a clumsy hand free with his drink and he blasted a home and ruined two lives.

Put it up on your sign—but you have no sign, Mr. Blind-tiger where the doctor got his. Well, write it on a mental sign where you can read it the next time you sell a quart of whiskey in secret. Make it look like this: "Paralyzed professional skill and dishonor free with every drink."

The saloons are brilliant and warm and filled with the results of the most up-to-date advertising. Somehow they fail to put the real article on exhibition. They put up the base ball scores. But they do not display a tabulation of the amount of crime and pauperism that is caused by their business. It would look attractive. There are statistics plenty to be had and they are the findings of the economists and scientists, not the tabulations of the Anti-Saloon League alone.

Put up the tables and then write a big sign to go alongside it: "Part of the cost of all this free with every drink." This would at least be treating the tax-payer fairly and letting the burden fall where it ought to rest.

We shall claim no copyright on these signs. The saloons are free to use them all. And there are scores of others. You can frame one quickly as a result of your observation of the effects of drink on the bodies and souls of men, on politics and society and homes. How easily they come to mind: "Political corruption free with every drink." And so you go on framing them.

Next time you see the familiar sign in the saloon window, then mentally put another and another beside it. We fear the whiskey men will not do it. They are very modest.

The Modern Revival of Religion

BY THEODORE GERALD SOARES.

That there is any other kind of religious movement rightly deserving to be called a revival save the high-pressure agitation of the church and community such as, for example, Mr. Sunday's work represents, is difficult for some people to imagine. In the following article, which appeared in Religious Education, Doctor Soares, of the University of Chicago, shows how a quiet leavening process of religious revival is now going on under the ideals of religious education.

THERE is a widespread feeling today that we are in great need of the high motive power that comes from a vital religious faith. A university president, recently becoming aware of serious immoral practices among his students, said with much earnestness, "What we need is an old-fashioned revival of religion." He is not an excitable man, his religion is of a distinctly unemotional type, and he added, "Of course the revival would have to be of a different kind." Yet he felt profoundly that the great motive for the godly, righteous, and temperate life need reforms, prosecutions, warnings, instructions, substitution of good activities for evil; but thoughtful men and women are questioning whether these will go deep enough, and whether anything can be ultimately effective but the great religious imperative, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," and the great religious inhibition, "How can I do this great wickedness and sin against God?"

It has become a commonplace to say that commercialism is sweeping us from our moorings, and that nothing but a deep religious experience can make us which is derived from a vital experience of God was what those boys needed to keep them true.

Our social investigations suggest the same need. These are great days for investigations. We have become determined to know the facts of our social life. So there have been examinations of high schools; and they have brought to light in many cases moral conditions, among girls as well as boys, that are appalling. The studies of the experts of the Juvenile Protective Associations have demonstrated that the conditions in which large classes of our youth are brought up render vice and crime almost inevitable. Vice commissions have found a network of organized institutions of demoralization beginning with mere amusement and ending with degradation. Evidently we feel that a man's life does not really consist in the abundance of the things that he possesses. Our ambitious youth passionately desire things. All our wonderful modern industry is producing things. If faith, hope, love, justice, truth, are greater than things we must somehow help our boys and girls to find it out. But does not the desire for things impel us to toil? Would anything but the whip of want and the allurement of acquisition make us bend our backs to bear the burdens of the world? A prominent labor leader said recently that the working men were determined to gain the power to direct industry, but that when they had gained it he could not foresee what motive would remain to drive them to the necessary work. Yet a notable book has appeared with the daring title, "Christianizing the Social Order," an expression of faith that we can actually humanize our big, brutal business life by religion.

THE NATIONS TURNING TO RELIGION.

The Far East has the same hope. They are looking, as we are, for a preservative that the choice fruits of civilization may not be lost. With the hurrying changes of recent years old sanctions are breaking down, old moralities are disintegrating, commercial and official life are degenerating. The wisest men in Japan are burdened with a solicitude for the moral vigor of their young men. With all the wonderful advance in education during the last half century it is probably true that Japan is morally weaker than under the old régime. And they are turning to religion. It was deeply significant that the government should call together the representatives of the three great religions, including Christianity, to confer upon the question, What can religion do to strengthen the morality of the nation?

No less a word has come from the President of China. Doctor Mott has told us of his notable interview with Yuan Shi-kai on the subject of the Christian message, and of the great utterance of that far-seeing man, "Confucius has told men the truth, but your message tells them of a power to enable them to obey the truth." Motive again. The echo from the East of our own hope of a revival of the religious motive.

RELIGION AND EDUCATION.

Are we then to be saved by some miracle? Do the prophetic eyes of these men of vision look for some spiritual upheaval that will take our times, all out of joint, and set them right? Scarcely that. As Joan of Arc said to the Bishop, "The men of France must fight the battles, but God will give the victory." And it will not come in a day. Our youth will not all suddenly be inspired with high ideals. Our victims of evil environment will not be immediately made whole. Our social antagonisms will not be resolved at a stroke. The sanctions of the past will not be replaced by new ones that will immediately have the force of centuries. We may have the expulsive and the impulsive power of new affections. We may see waves of enthusiasm for righteousness, splendid advances of faith, noble responses to the spiritual appeal of our day. But the meaning of life cannot be seen in its spectacular crises alone; it must be seen in the long reaches of ordinary experience. The modern revival of religion is an educational endeavor in all the glorious vital meaning of education.

Lyman Abbott standing between two eras has told us that it was the task of the Nineteenth Century to make education free and universal, while it is ours to lift it to the moral plane. The fundamental faith of the Religious Education Association, the unity of faith that links us all together, is that every influence surrounding youth may be made religious in the broad sense, and that one vital process of education, including every kind of healthy stimulus and worthy activity, may make the men and women that are needed for the tasks of our new day.

This means religious parenthood, involving instruction in the duties of that high office, and co-operation of society and church that parenthood may be possible, healthy, hopeful. That is eugenics, if you please. It means the religious conception of childhood, every child of the race to be thought of as a child of God. And if theirs is the kingdom of heaven they must have it. Whatever the far reaches of that kingdom of goodness may be, its first meaning for childhood is good food, fresh air, plenty of room, joyous self-expression, parental love and discipline. And then good schools, organized to give significance to social living. And churches where childhood is understood and training in unselfishness and reverence is given. The modern revival of religion is the companionship and guidance of youth in the great years of self-realization, so that a fine sobriety shall be victor over self-indulgence, and a noble devotion to some worthy calling, supplanting mere greed and competition, shall give the business of making a living its high significance. This last is industrial education conceived in a generous spirit. It is then a chivalrous respect of man for woman and a modest, gracious bearing of woman toward man so that the young men and maidens may join hands in work and play, and prepare for the life unions that shall last. And through all this, natural as breathing, shall be the fear and love of God, discipleship to Jesus Christ, loyalty to the church, the experience of religion.

NO SACRED, NO SECULAR.

The modern revival of religion means earnest, scientific study of social conditions, an unselfish study, careless of personal consequences, following truth where truth may lead. It means men of opposing interests striving to get each other's point of view, willing to do right as God shall give them to see the right. Believing in this world as well as in the next, it is a great passion to save mankind, to banish poverty and disease, to open the way to life's best values for every human soul.

Such a revival would be a great reaffirmation of the distinction between the sacred and the secular. There is a distinction. Some things are holy, some are very common. Friendship is sacred, selfishness is secular. Ministers, men and women who serve any human need, are sacred, hirelings in any calling are secular. It is not the old distinction, which ran a vertical line through life, putting church interests on one side and human interests on the other. The line runs horizontal through all life's interests, through play and prayer, work and worship, schools and church, kitchens, factories, market places, through all the ways of artisans, business men, prophets, poets, priests. Everything that is fine and human and good is above that line and is sacred, and all that is selfish and mean is below and is unsacred. We must teach our boys and girls that everything good and clean is sacramental, revealing God, in whom we live and move and have all our being. That is the process of religious education.

This revival is not the dream of a few enthusiasts; it is actually coming by the efforts of earnest people at the present time. Churches are being organized as educational institutions. The needs of childhood and youth are becoming understood. Activities engage the eager interests of boys and girls in healthy self-expression. Multiplying opportunities for kindly, unselfish service teach the young people that religion is doing deeds religious. There is seemly companionship of young men and women, recognizing their interest in one another, and lifting amusement out of danger into purity without making it banal. Boy Scouts and Camp-Fire Girls are inspired with ideals of honor, service and reverence.

RELIGION IN RELATION TO LIFE.

Religious instruction has been given new meaning by its adaptation to the needs of the growing pupils. We have not reached an ideal curriculum, and it would not solve all our problems if we had. But we have gained something in recognizing that Sunday-school lessons must be based on the needs of people and not upon the demands of theology. To be sure a religious orator has warned us that the Lord took the floods in his right hand and devastated Ohio, and the cyclone in his left hand and desolated Kansas because nature study had been introduced into the Primary Department. But even so we are learning that the religious education of children is in their appreciation of this world, which is God's.

Schools and colleges are developing courses of religious instruction. The denominational colleges are waking up to realize that they have forgotten their very reason for existence, and they are now beginning to offer courses in the Bible, in sociology, in philanthropy, in Christian Missions. The state universities are realizing that many subjects fundamentally religious are simply human, real humanities, and entirely within their proper sphere. When I went to college there was one such course! now there are many. And some of our larger institutions are offering to their students opportunities of religious education equivalent to a fourth of the entire curriculum. At least two prominent publishing houses have now in preparation a complete set of textbooks in religion for college use. Theological seminaries are actually beginning to train the ministry for the educational work of the church. Some interesting experiments are being tried in co-operation between church and state in religious education. The North Dakota plan is notable, where a certain amount of biblical study is accepted for high school credit, the study being carried on in the churches under the natural religious leaders, an examination being set by the state to determine the intellectual quality of the work. There are possibilities here of getting an attention to religious studies and a superior grade of instruction that are full of interest.

RELIGION IN SOCIAL SERVICE.

More important even than instruction in religion is the increasing opportunity of practice in religion. The Christian associations in many colleges are organizing unselfish service. Students are teaching foreigners the English language and making ties of friendship with these new Americans. They are seizing the opportunities offered by the Social Settlements for the expression of neighborliness. Older students are taking responsibility in steering younger students into good activities and away from dangers. Student commissions are concerning themselves with the moral standards of the colleges. The students of many colleges support missionary representatives abroad and in some cases are maintaining missionary institutions. Young men and women are learning the spirit of him who went about doing good, and, being willing to do the will of God, they are finding the truth.

Our young people's societies, which have too long been organizations for the oral expression of piety, are coming to include other expressions of religion. Young men and women are helping boys and girls. Young people are investigating charities, learning conditions of social life, and helping in endeavors of amelioration. They are not giving up their prayer-meeting. This is not a movement away from spirituality. They are meeting for definite prayer that the good that is being done may be blessed of God and that more efficient means may be found to end all evil.

A new demand is coming to us from our foreign missionaries, who are so often in the van of progress in these days. They want men and women trained as experts in social service, that our religion may be presented to the non-Christian peoples in the spirit of Jesus Christ, the minister to human need. We have long presented this humanitarian character of our faith in medical missions, but the demand is made that we shall take all our socially beneficent activities to these less privileged lands. Our better equipped theological seminaries are heeding this demand and are now at work preparing students for such duty.

MOVEMENT IN FOREIGN LANDS.

The mission colleges are already enlisting their students in social service. Courses of study are offered in China, Japan, India, giving to those students the technique of social investigation and amelioration. And hundreds of young men in those lands are practicing Christianity as they are teaching their fellow countrymen the principles of hygiene, the obligations of citizenship, and setting themselves to abate some of the immoral customs that have the sanction of the centuries.

This is not the substitution of social service for religion in missions. It is the finding of religion in human service. Do we want evidences of an interest in personal religion? In China alone thousands of students have promised to make a study of the gospels and to seek the leading of God that they may find the truth. One thousand have recently been baptized or are ready for baptism. And in that land where lucrative positions are waiting for college men as soon as they are ready, one thousand of them have pledged themselves to become ministers of the gospel of Christ at the meager salaries which the Chinese churches are able to pay.

I am not presuming to offer grounds for self-congratulation upon the achievements of the new religious education at home and abroad. We are all too much impressed with the measure and the gravity of our task to feel very much inclined for that. But we have the right to feel encouraged. The longing for a new religious experience in the conditions of our modern life is significant. And something has been done to bring the desire to fruition. Some principles are clear. Some methods have been vindicated. Some definite ways of advance are before us. Though much is still to be learned, yet we know enough and the steps ahead are clear enough, so that we can move on with confidence that genuine religious education may bring a new revival of religion in our generation.

Assur, the First Assyrian Capital

Some Facts the Archæologist's Spade Has Revealed.

BY EDGAR J. BANKS.

ARCHÆOLOGISTS seem to vie with each other in their efforts to discover the oldest cities of civilized man. Earlier explorers have taught us much of ancient civilizations, but during the past decade we have been uncovering the very beginnings of things. The once supposed mythical Menes, the first king of Egypt, has left us his tomb and his inscriptions. Sargon, the first known Semitic king of Babylonia, has bequeathed to us his history recorded on tablets from his very day. The life of the cave dwellers, who were apparently the first people to live in Palestine, is portrayed in their pottery and tombs and implements of war, and now the city of Assur, the first Assyrian capital, is being excavated, and is revealing the beginnings of that great nation. The Germans, representing the Deutsche Orientgesellschaft, will soon bring to a close their wonderfully successful work of eight years among the ruins of the oldest of the Assyrian cities.

The City Gate at Assur.

BUILDING OF THE CITY.

Some time not far from 2000 B. C., a colony of Babylonians, probably crowded out by over population, migrated to the north, up the Tigris valley. There, halfway between the modern Bagdad and Mosul, they built the city of Assur and worshiped a god of that same name. The colonists, later known as the Assurians or Assyrians, developed a civilization distinct from that of their mother country. For about eight centuries the Assyrian kings lived at Assur. When the royal residence was moved north to the later cities of Nimrud and Nineveh, the old capital continued as a sacred city to the end of the empire in 606 B. C. The recent excavations have revealed the oldest Assyrian city walls, the methods of defense, the palaces and temples, the paving of the streets, the water system, the drainage, the private homes and shops, the tombs of the kings and nobles, and the monuments erected in the public square.

The mound into which the city turned lies on the west shore of the Tigris. Along the river is a massive embankment of square brick masonry, which protected the city and still protects its ruins from the swift current. The ruin, some over half a mile in length and nearly as wide, rises sharply up from the plain. Near its northwest corner a tall conical mound marks the site of the ancient temple tower. The excavations along the edge of the mound have revealed the city walls, which are the best preserved of any yet discovered in Mesopotamia. The walls were double, and separated from each other by a considerable interval, and the space between them was filled with private houses, possibly the homes of the soldiers. The foundations of the walls were of cut stones to resist the attack of the battering rams, and to prevent the enemy from undermining them. Upon the stone foundation the walls of unburned bricks were carried to a considerable height. Along the outer side of the city wall near the summit ran a parapet or walk about six feet wide. Here the defenders of the city stood, and protected by a low wall along the edge of the parapet, they discharged their arrows down through almost vertical loop holes at the enemy below. A score or more of the loop holes are perfectly preserved. Along the outer edge of the wall ran the moat which is now filled with debris.

GATES AND TEMPLES.

Three of the city gates have been cleared by the excavators. According to a common Oriental custom, the gate ways were crooked, so that one standing without could not look through into the city. On each side of the gate way were small chambers for the guard, just as in the gate ways of the walls of Constantinople, and from them led steps to the summit of the walls. The arches over the gate ways have fallen. Probably also above were other chambers for the guards. In the masonry at the sides of the gate ways were large grooves for holding the wooden gate posts. As the city stood on a mound, an inclined plain winding along the wall where it might be easily protected led up from the street without.

A short distance from the main gate way, in the level plain without the city, were found the foundations of a temple. The temple contained the outer and inner shrines, with the usual surrounding chambers for the priests. It was to it that the statues of the gods were carried in procession on feast days, according to a religious custom. The temple stood in the center of a large park, but the soil of the park was so hard and barren that it could produce no vegetation, nor does any grow there at the present time. The ancient gardener overcame the difficulty by digging large holes several feet in diameter and about four feet deep, into the clay, and filling them with rich loam. Hundreds of the holes have been found, all in rows running in both directions, and covering several acres in extent. Water was carried to the trees in trenches. It is uncertain just what trees were planted there, but it is likely that they were the date palms which are still common a little to the south.

A STREET THAT WAS STRAIGHT.

Running from the western gate directly through the city was a straight street about ten feet wide, the only straight street which the excavators discovered. It was paved with stones, upon which was a covering of very small flat stones set upon edge, and laid so firmly that in places they are still in a perfect condition. Along the sides of the street were the shops, small, square structures of bricks not unlike the shops of a modern Oriental town. Their walls were standing to the height of but a few feet. None of the roofing material was found, but undoubtedly the common flat roof, supported by the trunks of mulberry trees, prevailed.

Of special interest was the large house which the German excavators have called the home of the mayor of the city. It faced upon the main street. Like the modern Oriental home, it consisted of two large courts from which several small chambers opened. One of the courts with its adjoining chambers was reserved for the harem. In the brick paving along the edges of the courts were shallow grooves for conducting fresh water into the various chambers. This was the method of piping the house for water. There was one chamber paved and lined with bitumen; it was for storing water; or it may have served as a bath. There were toilets similar to those still employed in the Orient. Beneath the floors was a drain, carrying away the waste water, and connecting with the main sewer of the city.

A SEWER SYSTEM.

The city sewer system was an arched drain of bricks, showing conclusively that the arch is not, as we have long been taught, of Roman origin. Several of the Babylonian cities, as Fara and Tello, dating from the fourth millennium B. C., were provided with arched drains which would be a credit to any city. The arch with the keystone was commonly employed during every period of Babylonian and Assyrian history. The sewage of Assur was emptied into the Tigris river.

A little to the north of the main street the Germans uncovered the houses of a crowded residential district. To it they have given the name of Pompeii because the streets are so narrow and winding, and the houses are so small and crowded. Only the bases of the house walls have survived. Many of the houses were scarcely more than four feet square, too small for one to lie full length to sleep.

In the very center of the city, where they might be protected from the grave robbers, were the tombs of the kings and nobles. Among them the Germans at the present moment are making most interesting discoveries. The tombs, which were imposing structures, chiefly of stone, would do credit to any modern cemetery. They were rectangular in shape, measuring in the interior about four by eight feet. The walls were of cut stone, and surmounting them was the arched roof of square, burned bricks. The roofs of many of them had fallen in; others were still perfect. At one end was a heavy stone door, which, in some instances even now, turns upon its stone door post. The tombs were entirely filled with dust which has filtered in. A vast amount of pottery was discovered in them; the pots contained the food and drink supposed to be required by the spirit of the dead. Stone and glass beads also appeared in great abundance, but there were few seal cylinders or inscribed objects. In some were a few fragments of bones. It seems that several bodies were buried in a single tomb.

Along the Summit of the City Wall. Through the Holes in the Foreground, Arrows Were Discharged.

A Gang of Men Clearing the Tombs.

THE PUBLIC SQUARE.

By far the most interesting discovery at Assur was made in an open place adjoining the southern wall of the city. There was a public square devoted to the monuments erected in honor to the kings and nobles of the empire. Fully a hundred of the monuments were found standing in their original position. They were monoliths of various stones and sizes; some of the larger were eight feet high, with flat sides and rounded tops. Without exception they all bore on one side near the top a short Assyrian inscription containing the name and titles of the person to whom the monument was dedicated. When the inscriptions are published considerable new light will be thrown upon the earliest period of Assyrian history. A translation of one of the inscriptions begins: "The column of Sammuramat, the palace wife of Samsi-Adad, king of the world, king of Assyria, etc." Sammuramat is the same name as Semiramis. Until the discovery of the monument it was believed that Semiramis, who tradition says was nourished by the doves, and who, upon her death, was transformed into a dove, was a mythical being. Now, as Queen of Assyria, she has resumed her rightful place in history. Hers is the only name of an Assyrian woman of high position which has appeared on the monuments.

When Things Went to Smash

A Story Found In the Ancient Records of one Rev. Dr. Jeremiah.

BY WILLIAM E. BARTON.

WE were telling, as you may remember, about the Rev. Dr. Jeremiah, a minister in good standing but not popular, who preached years ago in Jerusalem. It seems a pity to have to tell in each of these stories how he was always predicting doleful things. Let us remember to his credit that he was at heart an optimist. How do I know? Bless your heart, the Bible tells about it.

The city of Jerusalem experienced one of the severest reverses in all history. It was captured and destroyed in 586 B. C., and Jeremiah was there and saw it all, and kept on preaching. That is one solemn thing about it. Whether times are good or bad, Sunday comes 'round again, and the minister is there with his sermon. The minister has all his plans made to preach a sweet little sermon, and down goes the Titanic, or the rivers rise and cities are overwhelmed with a flood, and he sadly throws his sermon into the waste basket and begins a new one, endeavoring to interpret to men the strange ways of God. And do you yawn through that sermon, and pick at it with your toothpick after your Sunday dinner, you reprobate? I know where you would have stood in Jeremiah's day!

Well, things happened then; and every time a bank failed, or a good man went wrong, or the king made another blunder, Jeremiah preached about it. He just had to preach; didn't I tell you about that? And don't I know? I read it in the Bible, and I have been there myself.

But when the first great calamity came, and a multitude of people were carried away captive into Babylon, Jeremiah was left in Jerusalem, and he preached regularly; but he was interested, too, in the captives. He wrote out at least one sermon and sent to them.

GOOD ADVICE FROM DR. JEREMIAH.

Somebody told him about the people in Babylon, that the young folks wanted to get married, but that older people said, "No, these are the times of God's displeasure, and you must not marry." Somebody told him that there were favorable opportunities in Babylon to buy land and build homes, but that religious people thought that might be a sin. Jeremiah wrote them a letter, and he said, "If you have a good opportunity to buy land, buy it, and prosper. If you have money to build a home, build it, and enjoy it. If you know a nice girl and love her, and she loves you, marry her." That is the kind of letter Jeremiah wrote.

Moreover, he said, "If you have opportunity to get elected to office, do it. Get into politics. Keep good men in office. Seek the peace of the city where you are."

Some of them took his advice, and the names of Daniel, Shadrach, Meshach, Abednego, and other gentlemen of the ghetto appeared on the ticket, and carried the full Jewish vote in their wards.

It is interesting to know that at least one of those optimistic letters is preserved, and I want you to read it:

Build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them. Take ye wives, and beget sons and daughters; and take wives for your sons, and give your daughters to husbands, that they may bear sons and daughters; and multiply ye there, and be not diminished. And seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captive, and pray unto Jehovah for it; for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace. For thus saith Jehovah of hosts, the God of Israel: Let not your prophets that are in the midst of you, and your diviners, deceive you; neither hearken ye to your dreams which ye cause to be dreamed. For they prophesy falsely unto you in my name: I have not sent them, saith Jehovah. For thus saith Jehovah, After seventy years are accomplished for Babylon, I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you, in causing you to return to this place. For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith Jehovah, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you hope in your latter end. And ye shall call upon me, and ye shall go and pray unto me, and I will hearken unto you. And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart. And I will be found of you, saith Jehovah, and I will turn again your captivity, and I will gather you from all the nations, and from all the places whither I have driven you, saith Jehovah; and I will bring you again unto the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive. Jer. 29:4-17.

THE UNMERITED TITLE OF PESSIMIST.

Now you have skimmed over the book of Jeremiah, and have noticed that he wept and complained, and have called him "the weeping prophet" and have supposed that that was all you needed to know about him. Take off your hat in honor of that old optimist! For he was an optimist. He preserved his faith in God throughout all the evils which the folly of other men brought on his generation, and when everything went to smash, there he was, smiling when he saw men prospering, happy when he saw someone buying a home, and throwing rice all the way from Jerusalem to Babylon when a nice young couple got married. Do you call that pessimism? You don't know the meaning of the word. Jeremiah was the optimist of his time. And you never knew it? Then it is time someone told you what I am telling you; and if you will read your Bible you will discover which of us is right.

"It's easy enough to be pleasant
  When life flows on like a song;
But the man worth while
Is the man who can smile,
  When everything goes dead wrong."

That man's name was Jeremiah. He had his faith invested where it held when everything else went to smash. Have you your faith invested there? If not, it is time you established your faith on the God of Jeremiah.

The prophet Jeremiah began his ministry a diffident and reluctant young man. He shrank from the publicity and the peril of the ministry. He did not want to preach. But he knew he must preach. And he did preach. He passed through moods of doubt and struggles of soul to complete self-conquest and settled confidence in God.

He was not friendless. Prominent men sometimes protected him, and gave him the willing shelter of their homes. Kings admired and sometimes counseled with him. Great men were his companions, so far as he had companions. But his was a lonely life. He was compelled to live in an age that witnessed the crash of established institutions, and to answer to his own heart and his nation the question, "What is left?" It is a hard question to answer; and he answered it bravely and worthily.

God and righteousness were left, he told the people; and that being true, they were to face life calmly and bravely, trusting God and doing good. His letter to the exiles in Babylon, dying of homesickness, was not the letter of a misanthrope, out of sympathy with the normal joys of human life, but the sincere expression of a genuine human, sympathetic man, capable of a happy life had duty permitted. He was a pessimist only so far as pessimism was necessitated by his steadfast honesty.

He refused to accept the external evidences that proudly were forced upon his attention to prove that things were going on as they ought. He knew that Josiah's reformation was hollow because it proceeded from the will of the king and not from the heart of the people. He refused to rest his faith on the whim of a king, or on the external authority of the newly discovered law, or on the nation's pride or on the ritual of the temple. He knew that religion, if it has any reality, must be a thing of the heart.

JEREMIAH'S LASTING FAITH.

One by one external props gave way. The nation slowly sank to its doom, and at last went down with a crash, and it never rose again. The temple was destroyed. The priesthood was scattered. The king was blinded and led away in chains.

What was left?

God and righteousness, and the prophetic word were left. The law within the heart was left. The sure value of goodness and the supreme worth of spiritual ideas were left. All these were left. The doom of nations had not shaken them.

So Jeremiah, of all men in his time and land, so far as we know, was alone in apprehending the spiritual value of the things that were left. That is heroic optimism. He built his faith on something that could not be wrecked. More than any other one man in his generation, he saved the faith of the future.

And you never knew this about Jeremiah? And you supposed you had read your Bible? You never have really read it. It is time for you to begin.

THE COST OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Recent figures compiled by F. G. Blair, state superintendent of schools for Illinois, show that in six counties of Illinois the cost per student of a year's public instruction is less than $10. In six other counties it is above $30. The cost in the ninety remaining counties ranges between these low and high figures. The total number of teachers in the public schools in 1913 was 30,565. The average length of school term was 7.6 months, the average cost per pupil enrolled was $27.70, and the annual salary of teachers averaged $662.07. In Cook County the 8,218 teachers were paid an average salary of $1,163.87.

The Sunday School Convention

International Association Forces Assembling at Medinah Temple, in This City.

BY A. G. FEGERT.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL leaders from all over this continent are gathering in Chicago for the fourteenth International Sunday-school Convention, to consider the conquest of North America for Christ.

Four thousand four hundred regular and alternate delegates will bring credentials from their respective state and provincial Sunday-school associations. Other thousands will attend to avail themselves of the opportunity afforded them of participating in the monster parade in which 50,000 men are expected to march Saturday afternoon, June 27.

"Jesus shall reign," the keynote of the convention, will be sounded in the songs that will be sung by the great choruses and in the addresses that will be delivered by Dr. F. B. Meyer, of London, Marion Lawrance, Bishop J. C. Hartzell, J. A. McDonald, editor of the Toronto Globe; Fred B. Smith and a host of other speakers.

Not only will the new Medinah Temple, Ontario and Cass streets, with its seating capacity, filled to its limit of about 6,000, ring with the slogan of the convention, but twelve of the largest churches in Chicago and suburbs will be the scenes of the simultaneous duplication of the convention program the evenings during the convention. Thus the people of Cook County who desire to hear the speakers of the convention will be enabled to do so.

Every phase of Sunday-school activity will be considered in the various conferences of the convention under the guidance of the experts of the International Sunday-school Association and of the denominational Sunday-school boards. Besides these regular conferences to consider graded lessons and the work of the different departments of the Sunday-school, there will be conferences on evangelism, rural Sunday-schools, Sunday-school music, social service, temperance and purity. Special conferences will be held for workers among college students, among foreign speaking people, for ministers, superintendents and field workers.

In preparing the program, the program committee kept in mind the varied needs of the seventeen million members belonging to the 173,459 Sunday-schools spread over the whole North American continent, and directed by 1,670,846 officers and teachers. Fred A. Wells is chairman of this committee and Marion Lawrance, recognized as the best informed Sunday-school man in the world, is the secretary.

Only once before, in 1887, has the International Sunday-school convention been held in Chicago. Chicago Sunday-school history is interesting. The first Sunday-school institute was held in Chicago in 1865; the first system of Uniform Lessons issued in North America was produced in Chicago in 1866; the first Sunday-school Teachers' Journal was published in Chicago in the same year; the first General Secretary in North America to give his full time under pay to Sunday-school work was employed by of the Cook County Sunday-school Asso-tion, of which Chicago is the larger part; and the first central offices of the International Sunday-school Association were located in Chicago in 1907.

SPECIAL FEATURES OF THE CONVENTION.

A Sunday-school exhibit showing all the devices employed to increase attendance at Sunday-school, the work of graded students in the Sunday-school and the literature available for Sunday-school workers will be displayed in the lower part of the convention building.

A festival concert will be given Friday night, June 26, under the auspices of the Cook County Sunday-school Association in the Auditorium Theater. The May festival chorus of a thousand voices, said to be the largest ladies' chorus in the world, will sing special selections composed for the occasion.

A historical pageant will be given Saturday night, June 27, in which twenty-seven Sunday-schools will participate, showing by tableaux and by performances the methods employed of teaching the scriptures from the time of the patriarchs to the present time. Reunions, banquets, denominational rallies have been arranged for Saturday night.

Sunday-school sermons will be preached all over the continent Sunday, June 28, and a specially prepared responsive service will be used in thousands of Sunday-schools. Special Sunday-school services will be held in the Chicago churches Sunday night.

The most spectacular feature of the convention will be the parade along Michigan Boulevard, Saturday afternoon headed by an escort of mounted police; 50,000 men are expected to participate. Ten reasons why the parade is being held are published on a card issued by the Parade Committee. They are as follows:

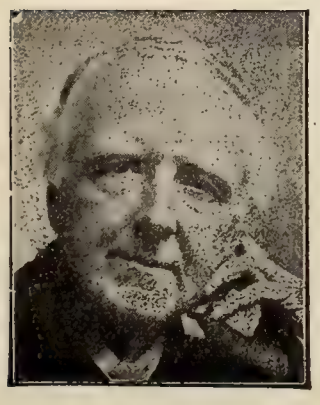
1. To give a united witness for Christ.
2. To promote a continent-wide movement for Christian conquest.
3. To provide a tonic for Bible study in the churches.
4. To present a mighty challenge to the men and boys of Chicago.
5. To strengthen public sentiment for civic reform.
6. To help Christian men to discover their combined strength.
7. To furnish a proper reception for the adult Bible class guests from all parts of North America.
8. To increase the number of men teachers in the Sunday-school.
9. To impress the continent that more than 3,000,000 men are attending the Sunday-schools of North America.
10. To enlist the men of America in a campaign to win the men of the world to Christ and Bible study.

A preliminary convention will be held Monday, June 22, the day preceding the opening of the great International Convention by the Illinois Sunday-school Association in Medinah Temple.

One of the most prominent and interesting characters in the convention plans is Marion Lawrance. Forty years is the length of time Mr. Lawrance has been active in Sunday-school work. He started as a teacher in the Washington St. Congregational Sunday-school in Toledo, O. Three years later, in 1876, he became superintendent of the Sunday-school and held the position for thirty-one years, until his removal to Chicago in 1907. The Sunday-school which he served so long and faithfully is now known as the "Marion Lawrance Sunday-school," and has an enrollment of two thousand members. It has become the pattern for Sunday-schools the world over, for efficiency.

For four years he was the American General Secretary of the World's Sunday-school Association. The association of which he is the general secretary, through its subsidiary state, provincial and county associations conducts annually approximately 20,000 conventions, has about 300 paid workers who devote all their time to Sunday-school organization activities, 1,800,000 volunteer workers who serve as superintendents and teachers in 173,459 Sunday-schools with an aggregate membership of more than 17,000,000 persons.

A Group of People Prominent in the International Sunday School Association



Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, England, former President of the International Sunday-School Association, a convention speaker.

E. K. Warren, chairman of the Board of trustees and one of the principal speakers of the Sunday-school Association.

Marion Lawrance started as a teacher in a Congregational Church in Toledo. Now general secretary of the Association.

W. C. Pearce, Associate general secretary and superintendent of the Adult Division of the Sunday School Association.

Mrs. Mary F. Bryner, who is prominent in Sunday-school work in connection with the Elementary Department.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

GOOD WILL TOWARD RELIGION.

ONE thing more than any other came out in connection with Go-to-church movements. It was the latent good will of the whole community toward the church. It was the easiest thing in the world to get the help of all sorts and conditions of men in a movement for the widening of the influence of the church. The butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker put cards in their windows announcing the movement, and tied up their packages in go-to-church wrapping paper, and talked about it, and wished it well. The street cars proclaimed it; the milk wagons started to advertise it at three o'clock in the morning. Every pot was holiness unto the Lord, and the very bells of the horses rang out a message in consonance with the church bells. We have not always utilized as we might this latent good will. "Peace on earth among men in whom is good will." Where the good will exists, let us make the most of it. The church has more friends in the community than it sometimes realizes. Let us find them and make them our own.

BARS AND BOYS.

THERE is an essential connection between them. Bars cannot be successfully maintained unless there is a constant company of boys being recruited to drink at them. The old topers are a short-lived race of customers. The hope of the bars is in the boys.

Some people seem to think that boys are cheaper than bars, or at least that they are not worth so much. These economical citizens rate the income from the bars as more precious than the outgo of boy life that is required to bring in the profits to the bars. So they license the institution that destroys the boys and use up all the money that the bars pay in to support the jails and asylums that care for the product of the bars. It is a wondrous system of calculation.

Of course the wise men expect that the boys are to belong to someone else than themselves. If it were their own boys whom the bars were to ruin they would feel less confident about the value of what the bars are supposed to yield to the state. But it does not come so close home when the boys belong to someone else. Occasionally one of our own boys is sacrificed. Then we see more clearly what the bars cost in terms of boys.

THE PRESIDENT'S SUMMER HOME.

LAST summer President Wilson donned his white flannel suit and stayed in Washington well into the summer. Let us hope Mrs. Wilson will shake the suit out from the moth balls, press it into shape, and see that Mr. Wilson wears it again this summer. The white flannel suit is a blessing. The only fashions more foolish than those of women are the fashions affected by men in summer. What man in his right mind, and left to his own judgment, would ever have put on a stiff bosomed shirt, impervious to ventilation as a sheet of armor plate, and choke himself with a stiff collar, melted down at the back into an idiotic pulp? And then a black suit, and a stiff hat! How much farther could folly go if it tried to be foolish? Let Mr. Wilson blazon the white suit on his escutcheon, and send it far and wide as a fashion plate.

But something more than a white suit is needed if a man is to do business. The President has been under necessity of staying in the White House, which in summer is a kind of whited sepulchre, or of renting from the public a house at his own expense. It probably is best that the government should not attempt to provide a summer capitol, though there is something to be said in favor of that plan. This summer the White House is to dwell in a tent set up on the White House lawn. So let it be. This going forth of the President like Abraham of old, dwelling in tents, has good historic precedent; and we hope Mr. Wilson will enjoy it. If he wants to move his tent to a pleasanter place than the White House lawn, we can provide him a place to pitch it, and show him where there is good fishing between times. If we were going to live in tents the White House lawn is not the place we should choose, for we know several nicer ones.

THE VALUE OF VERACITY.

ONE reason some newspapers are untruthful is that their readers do not want the truth. They want their own prejudices confirmed by their reading. Newspapers are coming to an increasing estimate of the value of truth. At the Connecticut Editorial Association a few days ago Mr. Chester S. Lord gave an address in which he said: "Every honest newspaper editor will join me in saying to you: Print your edition in red ink if you like; print your edition in job type if you like; print your edition with headlines a foot long if you like, but—stick to the truth!

"It is for you to say whether you will make your edition cheap, or whether you will hold to your high ideals. And it is for you to decide whether you are to follow the people, or the people are to follow you; but in either conclusion I commend the words of our old friend, 'the poet,' who wrote:

> "'There's an adage as ancient as Adam,
> If not as old as the sun,
> The early birds don't gather in herds,
> They get there one by one.
> And the moral of that is as certain
> As the moral of this is true,
> If you wish to succeed, you must take the lead,
> And the world will follow you.'"

The Brooklyn Eagle prints this address in full with hearty words of commendation.

ED HOWE STILL AT IT.

WE ARE glad to notice in the May American that our genial friend, Ed Howe, is still coining pungent sayings. The following country saws are his:

"Every country town man who goes East has his picture taken with Niagara Falls for a background.

"There is usually enough of everything on the table except cream.

"The position a man gets away from home is never as good as his folks at home say it is.

"When a man is trying to sell you something, don't imagine he is that polite all the time.

"Whenever a boy comes anywhere near his mother, she says to him, 'Look at your hands!'

"When a man tells his friends that he has 'accepted' a new position that was offered him, he doesn't fool them any. They know from experience that the position was not offered him, but that he hounded it for months. Not one man in twenty ever had a position offered him."

A WHITE-ROBED THRONG.

TWO trunks for each woman was the estimate of the railway people, and that meant a total of something like forty thousand trunks. Not without labor were they transferred from the railway baggage rooms to the hotels and other lodging places of the assembled multitudes. The weather was hot; Chicago, shamelessly indifferent to her reputation as a comfortable summer resort, sizzled in August weather born out of due time in early June.

What those forty thousand trunks contained we will not attempt to guess; but of one thing we are persuaded, each of them held inter alia a clean, soft, fluffy white dress. And when those 20,000 women had looked into those 40,000 trunks each one of them found that white dress, and wore it, together with white shoes. So Chicago blossomed on the occasion of the Biennial General Federation of Women's Clubs in white-robed women.

They looked cool and comfortable and attractive. They looked the precise opposite of a hot weather convention of men.

We have seen in Chicago not a few great conventions. Repeatedly have we sat in the Coliseum and witnessed a great political convention nominating a candidate or president. They were hot, steaming hot. They sat in hot coats for a time, then tucked handkerchiefs around their wilted collars and finally removed their coats and sweltered in their shirt sleeves.

Also we have witnessed religious conventions not a few—such as the Laymen's Missionary Convention and the recent Presbyterian General Assembly. So far as we recall, they all had less torrid weather. The sun, though it shine on the evil and the good, somehow spared these good people its fiercest attacks. Anyway, they kept their coats on, and looked as cheerful as crows in a coal bin.

But with the women it was not so. The first thing the papers noticed about them was their attire, and perhaps that was the first thing they thought of. Anyway, they thought to a good result. They put on their white dresses, and the Auditorium bloomed all in white.

In some respects women's dress is even more stupid than that of man, but let it be remembered that on these hot days when men swelter in penitential garb or go about in dishabile, women don their cool, sensible and becoming white frocks, and put us to double shame for our ugliness and stupidity.

A NEW PAN-AMERICANISM.

AS SOON as this Mexican matter is settled, the United States owes it as a solemn duty both to itself and its neighbors to set about the cultivation of a new Pan-Americanism. South of us lie an important group of American republics, and we do not know them nor they us. We do not trust them nor they us. They are American in geographical location and republican in government; but they are Spanish in language, German in trade, and we go to England to get them.

There is abundant reason why we should know them and they us. There is now one more reason than there ever was before—the Panama Canal. It is great odds to us whether the republics north and south of our new water-stairway across the isthmus are our enemies or our friends.

But there is a reason even more important. We are the big brother of all republics the world around. China is a republic because she has faith in us. Turkey is a constitutional government because she has learned something of self-government—albeit far too little—from America. These other American republics, born out of due time, have constitutions closely patterned after our own. We taught them to aspire to self-government. Now, let us teach them to use it. Let us be a big brother to all struggling republics. Let us weld all America in the bonds of a new Pan-Americanism.

THE EVILS OF POLITICAL BANKING.

THOUSANDS of small depositors were thrown into a panic last week when state officials closed a string of four banks owned by former Senator William Lorimer and C. B. Munday. These banks were not members of Chicago Clearing House, and for months rumors of their financial soundness had been freely current; but the City of Chicago, the Sanitary District, the Clerk of the Probate Court and the Clerk of the Superior Court all had deposits there, the aggregate of public funds being upward of a million. It is said that all these deposits are fully secured, but why were they ever deposited there? Every banker in Chicago has known for months that conditions in the Lorimer banks were not above suspicion. Who can believe that these particular banks were chosen for the deposit of these public funds because they were known or believed to be the strongest or soundest in the city? There ought to be a complete divorce between politics and the money of the people. The founding of banks on political favor and the securing of deposits of public money through political pull ought forever to cease. That the city is secured in ways that private depositors are not is not an answer to the charge. Public money should not be deposited with institutions that take the money of the people and do not return it. The entire system is wrong, and the question whether these public funds are secured is quite incidental. No matter how secure they were, they ought not to have been deposited in an unsound bank.

CUBIST POETRY.

AT LAST the world knows what literature would be if daubed on with the big brush after the manner of the cubist. Gertrude Stein has issued a book called "Tender Buttons." It is a sort of trilogy on "objects," "food" and "rooms." Here is a sample of the way she does it.

A Cloth.

Enough cloth is plenty and more, more is almost enough for that and beside if there is no more spreading is there plenty of room for it. Any occasion shows the best way.

More.

An elegant use of foliage and grace and a little piece of white cloth and oil.

Wondering so winningly in several kinds of oceans is the reason that makes red so regular and enthusiastic. The reason that there is no more snips are the same shining very colored rid of no round color.

A New Cup and Saucer.

Enthusiastically hurting a clouded yellow bud and saucer, enthusiastically so is the bite in the ribbon.

A Leave.

In the middle of a tiny spot and nearly bare there is a nice thing to say that wrist is leading. Wrist is leading.

Suppose an Eyes.

Suppose it is within a gate which opens is open at the hour of closing summer that is to say it is so.

All the seats are needing blackening. A white dress is in sign. A soldier a real soldier has a worn lace a worn lace of different sizes that is to say if he can read, if he can read he is a size to show shutting up twenty-four.

Go red go red, laugh white.

Suppose a collapse in rubbed purr, in rubbed purr get.

Little sales of leather and such beautiful beautiful, beautiful beautiful.

Little sales ladies little sales ladies little saddles of mutton.

A Shawl.

A shawl is a hat and hurt and a red balloon and an under coat and a sizer a sizer of talks.

A shawl is a wedding, a piece of wax a little build. A shawl.

We could comment on the foregoing but we forbear. We leave the matter to the tender judgment of our readers.

RATS!

WE ARE glad the scientists are getting after a little larger game. They have had us hunting microbes till we are weary, and want something nearer our own size. They are coming our way. Once the bacillus was our worst foe; then it was the housefly; now it is the rat. Farm and Fireside quotes a writer in the Technical World as saying that there are five rats for every human being. "There are, then, in the United States 500,000,000 rats. They all eat, and what they eat is less than what they destroy. On a basis of weights, allowing two pounds to the rat and a hundred pounds to the average persons, the rats weigh one-tenth as much as the people; and without any allowance for waste by rats their maintenance costs us a tenth as much as our own food. The rat is the most destructive of all beasts. If any animal ever gets the upper hand of the human race on this earth it will be the rat. They are demons of cunning, and can live in any climate."

This writer declares that the rat is humanity's worst enemy. Whoever wants our five rats may have them.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

United Brethren Men Meet.

The United Brethren Church recently held a convention for men at Dayton, Ohio, the headquarters of the church. This convention was modeled on the lines of the Convention of Methodist Men held in Indianapolis last autumn. Reports showed an increase in membership of 6,500 members last year, but this is offset by 24,000 members lapsed during the year. Reports also show that during the last year five hundred churches, some of them among the largest of the denomination, did not receive a single member on profession of faith. The convention, like that in Indianapolis, was a time of great inspiration.

Noted Preacher on Christian Unity.

Rev. Robert F. Coyle, famous as a Presbyterian preacher, is reported to have expressed himself in a Denver paper, on the subject of Christian unity. His words are as follows: "If I were just beginning my ministry, instead of ending it, I would strive to unite all Protestant faiths into one great catholic church, united and all-embracing. Creeds and dogmas are relatively unimportant. It does not matter whether a man believes in foreordination or immersion or infant baptism; if he believes in Jesus Christ he is a Christian, and he should be in the church, and it is a crime to keep him out of the church simply because he refuses to accept all the doctrine."

Chicago Methodists in Notable Work.

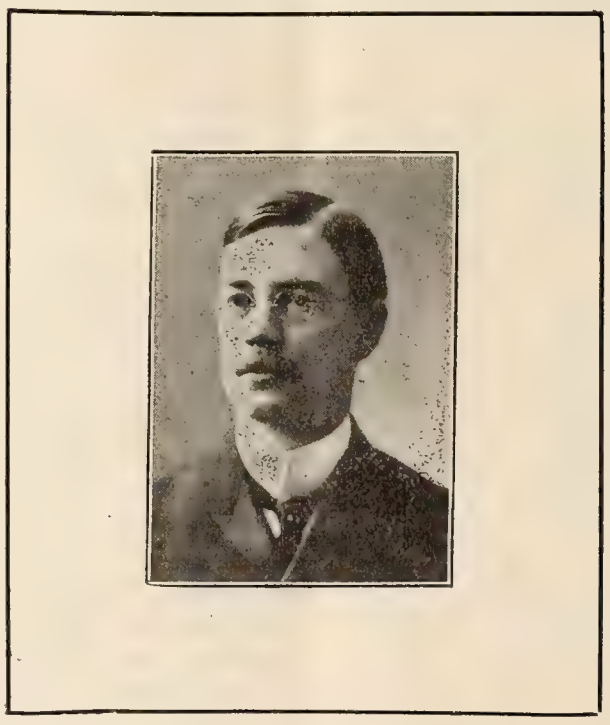
The Methodist Episcopal Church, Chicago, will build a $1,000,000 skyscraper at Washington and Clark Streets, in the heart of the downtown business district. The building will be on the site of the historic First Methodist Episcopal Church and will contain a new First Church, a bookstore and offices of the Methodist Book Concern. Two hundred thousand dollars additional will be expended in the erection of a printing plant in one of the manufacturing districts of the city.

Labor Sunday, September 6.

The Federal Council Commission on the Church and Social Service has, according to the usual custom, designated Sunday, September 6, as Labor Sunday with the additional recommendation that congregations which have not returned from their vacations on that Sunday give recognition to the day on the nearest possible following Sunday. A pamphlet of suggestions for the observance has been prepared and may be obtained upon application to the Social Service Secretaries of the various denominations. Abundant informational material may be obtained from the year book of the church and Social Service which is supplied by the Federal Council Commission at the cost of printing, which is 30 cents, and which may be obtained from the Book Department of the Federal Council, 105 East 22nd Street, New York.

Noted Unitarian Says "No New Name."

There was published recently in this department of The Christian Century the statement that there has come a demand from some Unitarian leaders for a new name for the church. The old name was declared out-of-date and of an unpleasant association in the minds of the people. It seems that Ex-Secretary John D. Long is opposed to a change. We reprint the following from one of the Unitarian publications: "May we not say, then, that the prejudice against the name is, slowly indeed, becoming a thing of the past, together with the prejudice against the faith of which it is the name? Having fought the good fight thus far, it is hardly the thing to give it up now, when education, literature, science, philosophy, and progress in every field of thought are opening the public mind, liberalizing it, and preparing it for our appeal to reason and conscience. For this appeal what better background than the faith, literature, teaching, and all the enlightening and enlarging influences for which the name Unitarian has so long and so bravely stood, and with which it is identified as no other name can be? Shall we not, as a matter of consistency and practical good sense, and not merely of sentiment, keep it? Any attempt to adopt another will only lead to infinite dispute and friction, and, even if a new one were adopted, the prospect of which is hopeless, at the very next meeting of our association there would be an effort to change it. 'The game is not worth the candle.'"



Dr. Henry Churchill King, of Oberlin College, who will be one of the speakers at Bethany Assembly this year.

Has the Church Lost Ground?

In a recent number of "The Nation" appeared an interesting symposium on the question, "Has the Protestant Church Lost Ground in Endeavoring to Make Itself a Social and Sociological Force?" The participants represented the educational and literary worlds and the religious bodies. Those taking part in the discussion were Samuel A. Eliot, president of the American Unitarian Association; George A. Gordon, pastor of the Old South Church, Boston; W. S. Rainsford, formerly rector of St. George's Episcopal Church, New York: Charles F. Thwing, president of Western Reserve University; and Meredith Nicholson, the author. All these men practically agree that the church must be a social force if it would be loyal to Christ and successful in his service.

Southern Presbyterians and Education.

At the recent assembly of the Southern Presbyterians, held in Kansas City, the Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief made the following report concerning the ninety-five educational institutions of the church. There are now in the church six theological seminaries, with property valued at $1,086,477, and an endowment of $1,564,963; 27 colleges with property valued at $4,282,684, and an endowment of $2,022,316; 20 institutes, seminaries and academies, with property valued at $880,025, and an endowment of $104,000; 31 Mountain Mission schools, with property valued at $206,320, and an endowment of $14,700; 11 orphans' homes and schools, with property valued at $740,000 and an endowment of $158,000; making a total of 95 institutions with property valued at $296,320, and an endowment of $3,899,979.

Churches Combine in Congo Work.

One of the most stirring addresses delivered at the meeting of the Southern Presbyterians, in Kansas City, was that of Bishop W. R. Lambuth, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, who told of the founding of the mission of their church in the Congo. This mission was established upon the earnest request of the Presbyterian mission, with its headquarters at Luebo, on the Congo, Africa. Under the masterful leadership of Rev. W. M. Morrison, and the other missionaries who have been laboring there for many years, this has been the most prosperous mission of our church. Chiefs of savage and cannibal tribes have come during the past five years a distance of seven hundred miles from many directions, asking that teachers be sent to point them to God. So frequently have these requests been made, and so large is the territory to be covered that the Presbyterian Church found itself unable to answer. Possibly never before was work started with more cordial coöperation of two denominations than these prosperous missions in the Congo.

Baptists to Build Hospitals.

A general movement is under way among Southern Baptists for the establishment of hospitals. A fine $500,000 hospital plant has been built in Dallas, Tex. Colonel Slaughter has recently added $200,000 to its property. A second Baptist hospital is operating at Houston, Tex., and another is projected for San Antonio. The Baptist Tri-State Sanatorium at Memphis serves Tennessee, Arkansas and Mississippi. Its plant is valued at $300,000. Jackson, Miss., has its Baptist Hospital. The Georgia Baptists have purchased Dr. Broughton's Infirmary—a plant valued at $150,000. A further movement is now on foot to raise $500,000 for a Georgia Baptist Hospital.

Church Enrolls Sixteen Nationalities.

The First Baptist Church, Chicago, claims to be a church "melting pot" of the first class. The pastor, Rev. Myron E. Adams, states that in the membership of the church, or in some way affiliated with it, are the representatives of twenty-five nationalities. They are: Japanese, Chinese, Korean, Hindu, Cuban, Negro, Jewish, French, Hungarian, Polish, Swedish, German, Norwegian, American Indian, Spanish, Bohemian, English, Irish, Scotch, Greek, Italian, Danish, Dutch, Austrian, and American. Out of the 269 children, enrolled in the kindergarten, there are sixteen nationalities. These children all come from within one-half mile of the church.

New Plan of Evangelism.

It is reported that tentative arrangements are being made for the introduction of a new plan of "neighborhood evangelism" into twenty American cities. The plan comes from London, where it has been tried out, and its supporters declare it means a new era. It completely reverses the city-wide campaign idea used by the Laymen's Missionary Movement and the Men and Religion Movement. Instead of spending much money for halls, expert workers, and attempting to reach a whole city, this plan selects city neighborhoods and holds meetings in the local churches very largely under the direction of the workers already regularly on the field. Not merely evangelism in the narrower sense, but all sides of the work of the Church of Christ are given a hearing. The result is a far greater number of people reached at a much decreased expense.

Canadian Jews Plan Christian Church.

Jewish Christians in Toronto, formerly connected with local Presbyterian churches, have now come together into a "Christian Synagogue (Presbyterian)." Permission to form the first Hebrew Christian Presbyterian church was granted unanimously by the Toronto Presbytery. The meetings of the church are held in the Christian Synagogue, a new building with thirty rooms. Of these, nine are occupied by the medical mission. The synagogue hall seats 350 persons, and there are reading rooms, classrooms, and on the third floor the superintendent's and workers' residence. The building was put up at a cost of $30,000.

Presbyterian Ministers Needed.

More than 1,000 young ministers are needed by the Presbyterian Church in order to man its pulpits, according to the report of the committee on Christian education and ministerial relief, submitted to the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church held in the city of Chicago. While that branch of the Christian Church has made a net gain of 250 ministers during the last 10 years, the increase in the number of churches is 355. At the beginning of 1914 there were 735 churches in the denomination without pastors, and there are now 275 places, aside from these, where there are opportunities to organize new churches. In all, says the report, there are needed at once 1,110 new preachers.

Presbyterianism in Chicago.

A recent study of Presbyterianism in Chicago, the results of which are published in the Continent, brings out these interesting facts: There are 62 Presbyterian churches in Chicago beside eighteen missions and three settlements. There are 22,407 members as compared with 14,298 in the year 1900, an increase of 56 per cent in 14 years. In the difficult downtown section the membership has increased 15 per cent, while Baptists, Congregationalists and Methodists have lost. Fourteen per cent of the Presbyterian churches are in this downtown section, 45 per cent in the older residence section, and 31 per cent in the suburban section within the city limits. Twelve of the 62 churches have parish houses, 17 churches have pastor's assistants, 15 have 32 church visitors, and 25 have church secretaries. Eighty per cent of these churches claim that their work is becoming more difficult for which the following causes are assigned: Thirteen per cent, business coming in; 26 per cent, lack of finances; 30 per cent, inadequate staff; 49 per cent, foreign population; 60 per cent, indifference to religion; 72 per cent, changing population; 79 per cent, removal of members. Other causes assigned are: Fourteen per cent, distrust of the church; 10 per cent, conservatism of the members; 10 per cent, low wages of the people; 7 per cent, new wealth.

Winona Bible School.

The Summer Bible School, held in connection with the Chautauqua program at Winona Lake, Indiana, July 6-August 20, 1914, will be in charge of the Extension Department of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago; and the schedule presents the following teachers: Rev. James M. Gray, D. D., dean of the Moody Bible Institute; Rev. L. W. Gosnell, assistant to the dean; Rev. B. B. Sutcliffe, assistant superintendent of men; Mr. E. O. Sellers, acting director of the Sunday-school course; Miss Ella E. Pohle, assistant in the correspondence course; Rev. F. N. Palmer, D. D., former director of the Winona Bible School; and the following members of the Extension Department: Mrs. Frances C. Allison, Bible teacher; Miss Angy Manning Taylor, Bible teacher; Rev. Geo. E. Guille, Bible teacher; Rev. Bob Jones, evangelist, and Rev. Parley E. Zartmann, D. D., secretary. Three sessions are held daily and the program will be comprehensive and varied. The Winona Assembly has arranged so that those having the regular assembly ticket need not pay tuition for the privileges of the school. A leaflet of information about the Bible School can be obtained from the secretary of the Extension Department, 153-163 Institute Place, Chicago; and a booklet about Winona Lake and its attractions for the season of 1914 can be obtained by writing to Rev. Sol. C. Dickey, Winona Lake, Indiana.

Mr. W. C. Pearce, International Adult Superintendent, one of the leaders at the Sunday-school Convention held in Chicago this week.

Cardinal Gibbons on "Prohibition."

While Cardinal Gibbons was in New Orleans, a few weeks ago he declared himself opposed to prohibitory methods of dealing with the liquor traffic. An expression of sorrow at this declaration, from certain friends of temperance, resulted in a second statement, in which the Cardinal seemed to favor the abolition of the saloon. Just before sailing for Rome a few days ago, reports the Northwestern Christian Advocate, he was approached the third time to secure, if possible, some definite and incontrovertible statement of his position on the liquor question. He complied, and his authoritative statement, in answer to the query whether his seeming temperance sentiment was of general application, is as follows: "That is only partly true. I am too old now to change my attitude on a subject as important as this, and what I said recently applied only to Charles County, Maryland, where the saloons were not conducted in a satisfactory manner. I declared I hoped the saloons of that county would be abolished, and I still hope so. While I am a strong advocate of temperance, I am certain that prohibition can never be enforced, and if it should be it will make hypocrites and violators of the law. It will also cause the manufacture of illicit whiskey, which is not a good thing, since it will replace a good product, of its kind, with a bad product. It will also rob the government of a legitimate tax and a very considerable one. Prohibition cannot be enforced in any Christian country."

Dr. Francis L. Patton's Successor Named.

As successor to Dr. Francis L. Patton, retired president of Princeton Theological Seminary, has been selected Dr. J. Ross Stevenson, now pastor of Brown Memorial Church in Baltimore, but formerly pastor of Fifth Avenue Church, New York City, and prior to that time professor of church history in McCormick Seminary, which was his theological alma mater. Dr. Stevenson will also occupy the chair of homiletics.

How Christian Union Will Come.

The Congregationalist's prophecy of how unity between the churches will come, is stated in a late pronouncement of its editor. "Our own conviction is that union is likely to come along the line of the least resistance, and between bodies with natural affinities, sooner than between bodies many of whose members still cherish deep-going theological antagonisms or totally different conceptions of the church and the ministry. Already Congregationalists and Presbyterians are united in South India and in China in the carrying on of colleges and theological schools. They ought to come together in many a community where they are competitors rather than coadjutors in the work of the kingdom. They ought in the great cities and with reference to the in-coming foreigners, to frame common plans and in many cases support common enterprises; and there should be at least a bowing acquaintance between our National Council and the great and glorious General Assembly. Beyond that we must trust to the workings of time to develop further points of affinity."

Churches to Give Instruction on Marriage.

The Detroit Pastors' Union, composed of all the evangelical pastors in the city, is planning a two weeks' campaign to teach the young people the responsibility of marriage as a means of combating the divorce evil. The coöperation of civic societies and other organizations is sought in an educational campaign on the subject of "Marriage and Divorce." Books and pamphlets on the subject are to be widely circulated.

Of Human Interest

Bryan on Church-Going.

Secretary Bryan says: "The spiritual part of man is the important part, because it is the directing force. It needs sustenance as much as the body and mind. If spiritual emaciation were as easily noticed as emaciation of the body it would not be so hard to convince people that they need one day in seven for the consideration of those things which pertain to the development of the heart and to the science of how to live. No matter what one's creed may be, or whether he has a creed, he can make good use of the interpretations of Holy Writ which he can expect from the pulpit and of the application which should be made of moral principles to the daily life."

Bad News of Villa.

A depressing news item regarding Villa is reprinted by the Northwestern Christian Advocate. It is the account of a dinner given General Villa of the Constitutionalist Army by the American war correspondents. When, in the course of the evening, it devolved upon him to propose a toast he did so with the following words and with the ensuing result:

"Senores, for the first time in my life I am going to propose a toast and for the first time in my life I am going to drink a toast, and it will have been the first time in my life that I ever willingly let liquor pass my lips, but the occasion demands it. You gentlemen should be proud of the fact that you are Americans; that you represent the press of the greatest nation on earth, ruled by the greatest man alive, your President Wilson. Let me fill my glass to the brim, my friends, so that we may all drink to the health of that great man and president."

All arose and poured the libation, followed by the crashing of the glasses as they were thrown to the ground, General Villa himself setting the example. General Villa was loudly cheered at the conclusion of his speech, the Americans leading. Soon after this a sentiment that seemed to strike the general, now beginning to feel the effects of his cup, brought him to his feet with a yell and a cheer, in which all joined. The Americans then sang "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," gave a number of college yells and three hearty American hurrahs for Villa.

Professor Taft on "Spanking."

Ex-President Taft said recently that he had great faith in the old-fashioned spanking as against so-called modern methods of reproof, which he contended were responsible for much of the present-day disrespect to parents. As an illustration he told the following story as coming from his brother, Horace D. Taft, who has a school for boys at Watertown, Conn.: A schoolmaster had flogged a particularly fractious scholar, who thereupon wrote home complaining of the episode. A few days later the boy's mother wrote: "We cannot tolerate such treatment of our son. At home we have never had to raise our hands against him —excepting in self-defense."

Skimpy!

A contributor to the American Magazine tells the following story:

"A clerk in one of the great jewelry stores on Fifth Avenue in New York City exhibited to a rich and weary customer a lady's handbag, five inches square, made of platinum and fairly well covered on one side only with diamonds. The price was $9,000. The fact that one side only was covered with diamonds troubled the customer. Turning the handbag around and around, and looking at it from all sides over and over, he finally said, 'Very pretty—really. But I don't like one side without diamonds. Honestly the thing looks skimpy—rather skimpy.' At an additional expense of $7,000 this difficulty was removed."

No Insult Meant.

Representative Patterson of Pennsylvania once had a local railway pass for himself and wife, says the Saturday Evening Post. An Irish constituent came to him, smiling, and said, "Mr. Patterson, sor, as a favor would you be after loaning me the use of your pass?" "But, Tim, everybody round here knows me; and they would know the pass wasn't yours." "Oh, bless ye, sor, I don't want it for meself at all. I want it to let me old woman feel sort of grand. Ye see, sor, no one would know me old woman from yours, and so I thought"—Patterson was paralyzed. But then the funny side of it struck him, and the Irishman thought he had been struck with ague he laughed so.

Adlai E. Stevenson in Public Life *

BY EDGAR DEWITT JONES.

FOR more than two decades Bloomington, Illinois, has been known the nation over as the home of Hon. Adlai E. Stevenson. Because of him more than any other man the name of the city we love has gone the world around. Verily it is true that "none of us liveth to himself and none dieth to himself." In the life and death of Mr. Stevenson his fame and glory are shared with the nation he served, the state he honored, and especially with the city where his home has been for half a century.

Mr. Stevenson's public career was long, varied and distinguished. Congressman, assistant postmaster general, vice-president of the United States, member of the monetary commission to England, France and Germany, nominee of his party for vice-president in 1900 and in 1908, candidate for governor of Illinois in what was perhaps the most extraordinary campaign of his entire career—such in barest outline was our first citizen's life in the nation.

Singularly strong and praiseworthy were certain qualities in Mr. Stevenson's life as a public man. First and foremost, is the fact that throughout his long and notable career he ever wore the white flower of a blameless life. Active as he was in a political period characterized by campaigns of personalities and incriminations and marred sometimes by methods now discredited Mr. Stevenson kept his heart pure. Through forty years of public service and a score of stressful campaigns he bore his escutcheon unspotted to the end.

Mr. Stevenson was a party man but not a partisan. In a day when prejudice and rancor were rife and party spirit ran riot Mr. Stevenson preserved that fine large charity which "vaunteth not itself" and "thinketh no evil." Here at home in the midst of campaigns of widespread interest and elections fraught with intense excitement he was never known to engage in controversy or arguments with his fellow-townsmen who differed from him politically. Moreover, he numbered among his closest friends many men of political views other than his own. This of itself is an extraordinary tribute to a nature which was large and generous and possessing a perfect genius for friendship.

Mr Stevenson's friends in public life included the most distinguished leaders of the last thirty or forty years. Congressmen, senators, justices of the supreme court, cabinet officers, presidents—with them he mingled alike honoring and being honored. Fortunately these rich and varied experiences are in a measure treasured up for us and for those who shall come after us, in his fascinating book "Something of Men I Have Known" —a volume that will be read with interest and profit by thousands yet to be.

Bloomington was justly proud of her first citizen and delighted to do him honor. No notable event in this city was complete without Mr. Stevenson's presence and participation. How often his voice has been heard at great gatherings, in conventions, at banquet boards, and in memorial meetings. The plain, comfortable homestead on Franklin Park Square has been our city's Golden Milestone, where all our main traveled streets converged. When our friends came from afar their visits were consummated when they had called upon our first citizen. How wide the doors, how generous the hospitality of that home. How unfailing the courtesy of that genial host. How courtly his manner. All in all we shall not look upon his like again.

Whether at home or abroad Mr. Stevenson was a democratic soul, plain, simple and a most approachable man.

"Greatest, yet with least pretence,
Foremost hearted of his time,
Rich in saving common sense,
And, as the greatest always are
In his simplicity sublime!"

And now he is gone! Bloomington can never be again just what it was when Mr. Stevenson was alive. The old homestead on the park square will be eloquent in its loneliness. We shall miss the courtly figure from our street and seek in vain the outstretched hand of greeting. But nothing, thank God, can deprive us of his memory.

Today loving friends and neighbors will lay our chief citizen to rest by the side of the wife of his youth and not far from that illustrious group of his old time friends who have gone on before—David Davis and Matthew Scott; Isaac Phillips and General McNulta; Lawrence Weldon and Robert Williams, and in the years to come what the tomb of Clay is to Lexington, what the shrine of Jefferson is to Monticello, so shall the grave of Stevenson be to Bloomington.

*Besides Mr. Stevenson's pastor, Rev. Dr. Elliott, and his son-in-law, Rev. Dr. Hardin, of Chicago, the family of the former vice-president desired that an appreciative message be spoken on behalf of the wider community of Bloomington, and asked Rev. Mr. Jones, pastor of First Christian Church, to speak at the funeral. We are happy to publish Mr. Jones' message in full.

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

President's Daughter Captures Chicago

If the popularity of Miss Margaret Wilson, eldest daughter of the president, has any bearing on the country's present feeling for President Wilson, it may be taken for granted that the people still have confidence for their national leader, in spite of his present uncomfortable diplomatic situation.

Great was the multitude and great the excitement that centered on the Auditorium on Wednesday evening of last week as the result of the announcement that the eldest daughter of the president of the United States would be one of six young women to respond with an address to this question asked by a body representing one million American women, "What is the greatest service the general federation can render the young women of America?"

"LET'S GET TOGETHER."

Miss Wilson's reply was:

"Neighbors, turn every district schoolhouse in this dear land of ours into a council chamber. There let us get together, there let us talk, there let us learn our lessons in the highest citizenship, there let us fearlesly listen to every idea. 'Socialism even?' some one cries. 'Yes,' I say, and I am not afraid, and you mustn't be afraid. Right ideas will live. The others will perish. The wrong ideas will live for a little while, perhaps, but they will live only as the tares in the wheat live. And when the harvest comes they will be separated from the good grain."

Her subject was "The School-House as a Civic Center."

"Our national, state and city representatives meet in council," said Miss Wilson, "to decide the great public problems. There are no places provided for the citizens who choose these representatives to hold councils of their own to decide who they shall choose for these offices.

"There is no place provided for them to meet regularly and discuss the questions of government and politics. How little the average man discusses the questions which he decides at election. The average man reads his newspaper every morning. He gets incorrect information and sometimes false and narrowly prejudiced judgment. He goes to a few partisan meetings, at which the program is arranged privately by private parties. Then he goes to a rough, undignified place, often the back room of a saloon, to cast his ballot.

PRINCIPLE OF COMMON COUNCIL.

"Isn't it strange that we neglect the great principle of common council? Our forefathers realized the necessity of it, and met regularly in the town hall or the schoolhouse. We today are so absorbed in our little private business that we forget the great public business, government. We have left it for a few to make it their particular business, often for their own private ends.

"The great interests and the political bosses know the value of coöperation. We have forgotten it. We have disintegrated and fallen apart and forgotten government because we are more interested in our own business.

"Every school district has a capitol. We must meet in those capitols. We must meet as neighborhoods and not as partisan organizations. If we meet thus, we shall form public opinion. Our legislators will know what we want. They will not be misunderstood and we shall not be misunderstood.

"Each town must have a civic secretary who shall be paid from the public treasury. His business shall be to promote the organization of citizens. He shall be the greatest public servant. He ought to be the assistant of the superintendent of schools.

"Every neighborhood organization must have its secretary. These should be the principals of the schools, who should be given more money and more assistants to take care of their school work. Every one who believes in free speech and government by the people must believe in these things. Let us all get together with our neighbors and work for justice and freedom and peace."

OTHER SPEAKERS.

The other speakers were Miss Laura Holmes Reilley, of North Carolina, Miss Dorothy Loyhed, of Minnesota, Miss Jessica Briggs, of California, Miss Ruth Bush, of Louisiana, and Miss Agnes Squire Potter, of Chicago.

The gist of Miss Wilson's plea was for "the restoration of the town meeting of our forefathers," and she also put her text thus—"the social and civic functions of school centers."

Sometimes she used the catch phrases of the "first class in civics," as when she said, "If a community has not corporate consciousness it is not well governed," but at other times she would drop into fond and homely phrases like this, "We must sympathize with each other, but how in the world can we do it if we don't get together?"

She referred several times to "the principle of coöperation" and with just a suggestion of tartness she asked the people to remember that if they had "forgotten the principle of coöperation they could be pretty sure that the corportations and the politicians hadn't forgotten it," because they thoroughly understood that it was their life.

"FREEDOM AND JUSTICE."

Here are threee of her most striking sentences:

"The schoolhouse is the political capitol for us all if we only knew it."

"We don't want school buildings to be social settlements, but community centers."

"The greatest thing the Federation of Women's Clubs can do for the young women of America is to show the way they can coöperate with all of the women and men of America in promoting the causes of freedom and justice."

One of the city's journals notes that Miss Wilson "was perfectly conscious of her own best points" and that she referred to them with entire candor as being the best—as when she said, "Now this is a very, very important point." "Saying that," remarks this paper, "she would look up and smile, and when she smiled it was a large smile that showed gleaming teeth. All that was exactly in the manner of her father."

CLUBS APPROVE WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Probably the most important step taken by the General Federation of Women's Clubs assembled in Chicago last week, was its taking official action in favor of suffrage on the morning of June 13. The following resolution was presented by the resolutions committee in a special report and passed by an overwhelming vote:

"Whereas, The question of political equality of men and women is today a vital problem under discussion throughout the civilized world, therefore,

"Resolved, That the General Federation of Women's Clubs give the cause of political equality for men and women its moral support by recording its earnest belief in the principle of political equality, regardless of sex."

At the afternoon session of the same day, a telegram announcing the Illinois Supreme Court's decision in favor of the Constitutionality of the state equal suffrage law called forth a jubilant demonstration. And that evening, at a banquet given by the Illinois Equal Suffrage League to the visiting club women, the double victory for woman suffrage was celebrated. Miss Jane Addams, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt and Mrs. Ella Flagg Young were among the prominent suffragists who spoke.

ABOUT WOMEN.

Maine is the latest state to grant pensions to widows.

Pittsburgh club women are asking for a woman chief of police.

Denver women are asking that they be drawn as grand jurors.

Several women have passed the examination for the bar in Georgia, but have not been allowed to practice.

Kansas has a school district which all women teachers pass up as undesirable because it is infested with rats.

The front page of a Chicago paper tells us that Owen Johnson, author of "The Salamander," believes that women are going to abandon religion and revolt against all accepted standards, while the second page quotes a Young Men's Christian Association secretary as saying, after a world tour, that he believes civilization is advancing.

THE IGNORANCE OF PUPILS TODAY.

A series of questions put to 100 pupils of public and parochial schools of New York City brought answers which show that the average youth knows as little of many other things he ought to know as he knows of the Bible. As reported in the Survey, of these 100 pupils from fourteen to sixteen years of age, ninety did not know the name of the mayor of their own city, forty-eight had never heard of nor had any clear idea of what the governor of their own state had to do. Seventy-four had never heard of the Constitution of the United States. These propective citizens who will be of age from five to seven years hence had no comprehension of the fundamentals of citizenship. Sunday-school teachers who have long had it dinned into their ears that their work is immeasurably inferior to that of the publis schools may find in these facts some ground for encouragement.

Disciples Table Talk

Vacation Bible-school at Lebanon, Ind.

A. L. Ward, pastor at Lebanon, Ind., Central, writes that his church has just completed a very interesting experiment. Last year Mr. Ward conceived the idea of adapting the vacation Bible-school idea, which has been used quite successfully in larger cities, to a smaller city. The Lebanon people have just closed a two weeks' school, and it has been a delight to all, writes Mr. Ward. The teachers engaged in the work, are enthusiastic over the success, and many parents are urging that such a school be opened next year. Ninety-six pupils were enrolled in the school. The classes met for one hour each day, at 9 o'clock in the morning. There was a story period for children from six to ten years old; and two, one for boys and the other for girls, ten years and older. Mr. Ward recommends this plan to pastors.

T. W. Pinkerton Honored at Kenton, O.

May 29 was "Pinkerton Day" at Kenton, O. T. W. Pinkerton, pastor of the Kenton church for sixteen years, who is closing his work for a rest, was honored in seeing the business houses of the town suspend activities to go to a specially arranged ball game and to engage in meetings, parades, gift-presentations in honor of Kenton's beloved citizen and leader. The Masonic order, of which Mr. Pinkerton is a member and the Kenton Boy Scouts were especially active in making the day a notable one.

To Teach in Christian College.

Chicago and California friends of the late E. W. Darst, whose work as missionary evangelist in both these fields is gratefully remembered, will take especial interest in the news that Mrs. E. W. Darst has accepted a call to the professorship of philosophy and education in Christian College, Columbia, Mo. Mrs. Darst has but recently returned to this country after a year's study in Germany.

Two Professors Appreciated.

The return of two professors in whose places they were substituting has released Profs. J. L. Deming and Ellsworth Faris from the faculty of Iowa State University. Both these teachers have made such a place for themselves in the academic and community life of Iowa City that the "Daily Press," the city newspaper, speaks out editorially in protest against their being allowed to go even though the regular occupants of the respective chairs are to return. "These two men," says the "Press," "have been two of the most popular teachers in the university, and have been equally popular in the community outside. Their brilliance in the classroom has been fairly matched by their touch upon community life, and as their abilities have come to be known, they have been called into constantly widening circles of influence in the city and state. The university, if it is to become the strong factor in the life of this state that its friends hope and have now reason to expect, cannot afford to let such men go. The reason given for the release of Profs. Deming and Faris is the return of the two older men whose places they were temporarily filling. Prof. Deming has been teaching in place of Professor Loos, since the latter has been unable to continue his class work; and Professor Faris has been supplying the place of Doctor Starbuck. Everybody rejoices that Professor Loos feels himself able to resume his active duties in the classroom, and that Prof. Starbuck has brilliantly completed the literary labors that have called him elsewhere during the past year. But S. U. I. needs not only to welcome back the old, but to hold fast to the new men, who have proved themselves strong and popular. There have been hints, of course, that a tendency toward reaction has set in—that the board of education, having differed with ex-President Bowman, is inclined to uproot the constructive work he tried to do; and rumor has mentioned the names of others of the new men said to be marked for slaughter. The Daily Press does not credit such inferences, and believes that the board is actuated merely by the feeling that the budget cannot be made to carry the extra expense of retaining both the old and the new teachers. But, for the reasons given, and others which might be named, the board ought to strain a point in the case of Faris and Deming. They ought to be retained at any sacrifice. Interestingly, both Professors Faris and Deming are Disciples, and their friends in the church will be gratified but not surprised to know that their impression upon the Iowa institution has been so deep as the above disinterested comment indicates.

Magnolia Ave. Church, Los Angeles.

Two weeks ago R. W. Abberley closed his first year in the pastorate of this church. During this time 114 persons have united with the congregation, thirty-two by confession and baptism and eighty-two by letter and from other communions. Mr. Abberley writes that he has found the Magnolia Church to contain some of the choicest spirits on the continent, devoted to the cause of Christ. The Sunday-school is averaging about 350 in attendance. Church and school support W. B. Alexander as living-link at Damoh, India. Everything is encouraging, Mr. Abberley reports, in spite of unusual difficulties incident to southern California—"the playground of America." Indications are that a great forward step is about to be taken by the churches in Los Angeles in the immediate future.

Central Church, Rockford, Ill.

Central Church, Rockford, Ill., with the services of Evangelists Wm. J. Lockhart and J. P. Garmong, in a recent meeting, reports that about twenty-five will come into the fellowship of the church from this effort. W. B. Clemmer, pastor at Rockford, writes that the services were held in the unfinished auditorium of the new church, rough floor, no plaster, temporary lights, but roomy and comfortable. The last Sunday Mr. Lockhart made the call for funds to cover the needs for present construction, up to the amount promised by the Church Extension Board. Three thousand dollars was secured which will be increased to $4,000; $5,000 more is needed before the building can be completed, but with a finished basement and some extra Sunday-school rooms, a baptistry and robing rooms, the church can meet its present needs well. Fifty-six persons have been added to the membership during the last twelve months, in spite of the heavy building burden, with services in the court house, mornings only, for eight months of this time.

Offering for the Temperance Board.

The attention of all Disciples is called to the following word from W. J. Wright, President of the American Temperance Board of the Church of Christ. Especial interest is needed now from the fact that the board is without a secretary, just at this important time of the offering for the work. Dr. Homer J. Hall, as stated in a recent issue of The Christian Century, has retired from this work after many years of service, to serve on the "Flying Squadron." Mr. Wright writes that the work is being divided up, and an effort will be made to reach 2,500 of the best churches. "More than all other evil agencies," says Mr. Wright, the liquor traffic retards individual and social salvation, the evangelization of our own and foreign lands, and the general progress of the Kingdom of God. To destroy it is to advance immeasurably and immediately every good work. Seven American states will try to vote prohibition into their constitutions this year and a dozen others seek advanced temperance legislation. They all clamor for our aid. A joint bill is before Congress looking toward writing prohibition into the Constitution of the United States. We ought to be pushing that movement. The time is ripe! To push hard now means to abolish the American traffic in liquor within twenty years. The first Sunday in July is the first time regularly set in the church calendar for an offering for the Temperance Board. Speak out for this nation wide movement. Come to our aid! Take the offering of July 3, and so worthily celebrate our National Independence Day. Our country must destroy the liquor traffic or it will destroy our country. Make all exchange payable to the Temperance Board, and address all communications to Wm. J. Wright, President, Franklin, Ind.

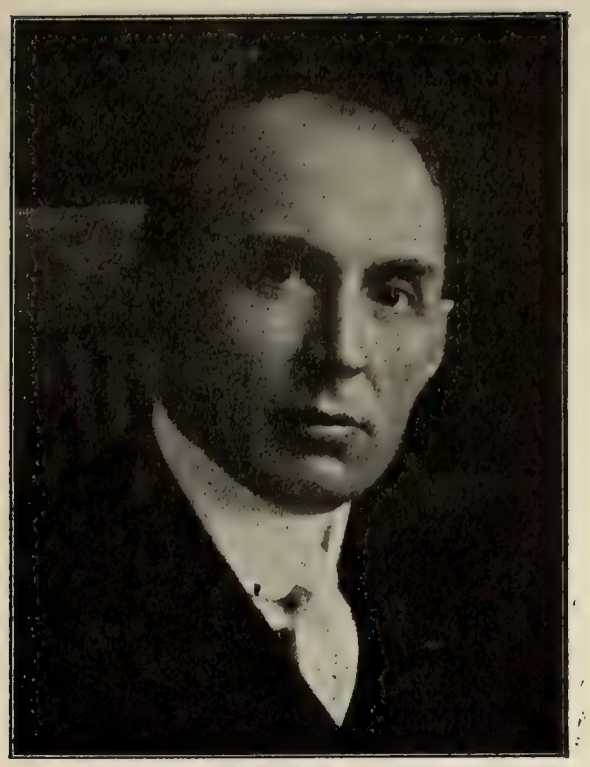
E. N. Duty, pastor at Charleroi, Pa., reports for June 14 an impressive dedicatory service of the new organ, the gift in part of Andrew Carnegie. The church gave $1,200, the Pittsburg magnate $750. Prof. Jean C. Moos, director of the Bethany College School of Music presided at the organ. A successful recital was given on June 12.

W. D. Ryan, pastor at Central, Youngstown, Ohio, reports that Children's day was observed by the Sunday-school there June 14. The attendance was 1,408 and the offering $706.85. The offering will be divided among the various missionary interests.

Associated Press dispatches from Ft. Worth announce the gift of $100,000 in cash and the guarantee of a $30,000 Bible college building for Texas Christian University, from L. G. Brite, of Marfa, Texas.

L. J. Marshall, of Wabash avenue, Kansas City, is summering with has family, in the Great Lake region.



Rev. A. E. Cory, D.D.

Mrs. Ida W. Harrison, LL.D.

Rev. Peter Ainslie, D.D.

The year 1914 has produced a healthy crop of Doctors in Disciple ranks. A. E. Cory and Frank Garrett were given the degree of D. D. by Drake; Mrs. Ida W. Harrison, President Miner Lee Bates and Secretary S. J. Corey received LL. D. degrees from Transylvania; and Peter Ainslie has just been made a Doctor of Divinity by Yale. In presenting Dr. Ainslie for the degree of doctor of divinity, Professor Cross, of Yale, said: "Dr. Ainslie has become, though but midway in his career, one of the most influential men in the church of the Disciples. He is widely known for his labors in the movement toward a universal Christian brotherhood. He stands for that broad, liberal spirit represented by the Yale School of Religion."

The Men's Parade, Saturday, June 27th

Christian conquest, Christian citizenship and civic righteousness will be proclaimed by the demonstration of the Men's Parade, which will be a notable feature of the International Convention this week, at Chicago.

Some of the men's parades that have startled the public in past days are the following: At Louisville, Ky., in 1908, when 1,200 men marched. At Harrisburg, Pa., in 1909, with 8,000 men. At Washington, D. C., in 1909, with 8,000. At San Francisco, in 1911, with 10,000. At Cleveland, in 1911, with 13,100. At Philadelphia, in 1912, with 27,000. Now if Chicago's motto, "I Will," counts for anything, Saturday afternoon, June 27, will see 50,000 men of Christ proclaiming his sovereignty.

The route of the parade will probably be from the Twenty-sixth street, north on Michigan avenue. It is hoped to have on the reviewing stand the governors of Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Kentucky, Iowa, Wisconsin and Michigan. The mayor of Chicago and governor of Illinois have tentatively promised to be present. World and International Sunday-school leaders will also review the parade.

100 AUTOMOBILE STREET MEETINGS.

Speakers in automobiles will precede the parade and at specified streets on Michigan avenue, they will, in short, pointed talks, give information about the purpose of the parade and distribute cards and literature.

The age of the marchers will be fifteen years and upward.

An apportionment of representation has been made for the parade. About 10,000 are being apportioned from outside Chicago, 40,000 from Chicago and Cook County. The following is the apportionment of Chicago by districts:

Districts	Men in Parade	Total S. S. Enrollment

BOAT RIDE FOR DISCIPLES.

On Saturday evening, June 27, from 8 p. m. to 10 p. m., will be given a Lake Michigan boat ride on the large steamer, "United States," secured for this special occasion. This is an effort of our own Bible-schools and churches to afford the out-of-town folk of our denomination (as well as others who wish to go) the privilege of a refreshing and pleasant evening boat ride.

Special music, both instrumental and vocal, will be provided on the boat; and possibly some of our well-known leaders throughout the country will speak.

Our own folks should take advantage of this opportunity to get better acquainted with Disciples both in Chicago and from elsewhere. Tickets for this boat ride (35 cents each) will be on sale during the convention.

ADDITIONS TO CHURCHES

Coshocton, O., C. M. Burkhart, pastor; six in two weeks.

Pittsburg, East End, J. R. Ewers, pastor; 119 since Jan. 1, 78 by baptism; 430 in less than five years.

W. J. Clarke says the men's movement in the Clifton church, Louisville, Ky., is directly responsible for the organization of scores of Men's Bible classes in that part of Kentucky, not alone among the Disciples, but also in the Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian churches. Mr. Clarke is the new adult superintendent of the A. C. M. S., and formerly the pastor of the Clifton Church. This Men's Bible class assists in the financial support of Mr. Clarke in his present work.

The twenty-six Disciple churches in Greater Kansas City publish a combined announcement each Saturday in one of the local papers. The name and location and pastor of every church is thus announced, and kept before the people, and the expense to each church is only 20 cents per week.

In a recent issue of the Century it was stated that S. C. Draper had been called to the Central pulpit at Cincinnati, O. The fact is that the work at Central goes on more prosperously than ever under Claire L. Waite. Larger audiences, larger school, additions every Sunday are reported.

A men's movement has been organized in the Wabash Ave. Church, Kansas City, Mo., where L. J. Marshall ministers. These men meet for an hour preceding the evening church service for prayer and conference.

L. N. D. Wells, of Akron, O., is drawing great crowds to his church by using the paid advertising columns of the daily papers. He had an exhibit of advertisements at the Ohio State Convention.

G. A. Campbell, pastor at Hannibal, Mo., who was called to the presidency of Christian University, Canton, Mo., has declined and will remain at his post in Hannibal.

BETHANY ASSEMBLY NOTES.

A. W. Connor, known as the "Boys' Friend," will speak at Bethany Assembly July 21, 29, 30, 31, and August 5. His subjects are as follows: "Inseparable Lifelines," "The Dignity of the Common Kid," "Jacob and the Boy Problem," "Eternal Friendship," and "The Heart of a Boy."

John H. Booth, Kansas City, Mo., will give five addresses at Bethany Assembly as follows: "An Educational Policy for the Local Church," "The Every-Member Canvass—Why?" "The Every-Member Canvass —How?" "The Challenge of the United Missionary Campaign to the Disciples of Christ," "The Missionary Committee." This gifted advocate of church extension will be heard with great pleasure and profit on these timely subjects.

Pres. E. Y. Mullins' subjects for his Bethany Assembly lectures are as follows: "The Testimony of Christian Experience," "Christ's Response to Modern Thought," "The Leadership of Jesus," "Higher Appreciation of Christianity," and "The Moral Awakening in American Life."

Bethany Assembly will celebrate its thirty-first anniversary on July 28, with appropriate ceremonies. Dr. S. H. Creighton, President of the assembly, and F. M. Rains, Cincinnati, Ohio, will be the chief speakers. Pres. Creighton's address will be historical in character, as well as prophetical in giving the outlook for the future. Secretary Rains will speak upon "The Perpetuity of Bethany Assembly." This will be a red letter day for Bethany Assembly. Some important announcements will be made that day that will cheer every member of the ever-increasing "Bethany Family" now scattered over many states.

The C. E. Cottage at Bethany Assembly will be enlarged and remodeled at considerable expense this year, and will be ready for the evangelistic sessions of the first term of the summer school July 21-31. The Endeavorers will occupy it with their School of Methods August 4-14. The National Christian Endeavor board for the Disciples of Christ now owns this building and will hold annually therein a School of Methods for Endeavorers. Many of the Christian Endeavor state superintendents of different states will meet here annually to discuss plans for the future of this great and growing work among the young people of our churches.

BIBLES FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The following resolutions were adopted unanimously at the last Union Ministers' Meeting held in Chicago:

Whereas, the Bible is regarded throughout Christendom as the very foundation of civilization, social justice, character, morality and religion, and

Whereas, the public school curriculum which includes tales of heathen gods and ancient mythology, but omits the great book which in surpassing grandeur reveals the one true God and inspires in the heart love of all the virtues, deprives the pupils of the most important element in the true education, and

Whereas, although the interpretations placed upon the Bible may be, and in fact are sectarian, we believe that the Bible itself is elementary, fundamental, and no more responsible for sectarianism than the ocean for the battles which rage upon its surface, therefore

Be it resolved, that we profoundly deplore the decision of the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois which makes possible the exclusion of the Bible from our public schools even to the amending of our state constitution.

Done by unanimous vote this 25th day of May, 1914, in Union Meeting of the Protestant Ministers of Chicago at Chicago, Illinois.

W. B. MILLARD,
Executive Secretary.

DRAKE CLOSES SUCCESSFUL YEAR.

Drake University closed its thirty-third year June 10, with the annual commencement exercises. Degrees or diplomas were conferred upon 216 men and women. Honorary degrees of Doctor of Divinity were conferred upon Abram Edward Cory, '99 and Frank Garrett, '96. The commencement address was delivered by Dr. Herbert Martin, Professor of Philosophy, Drake University. At the meeting of the board of trustees it was announced $225,000 had been pledged to the school during the year.

The College of Liberal Arts led in degrees conferred with seventy-five. Thirty-one degrees were conferred by the law school and twenty-one by the College of the Bible. Many students of the Bible department were represented among the graduates of the College of Liberal Arts. The class was cosmopolitan. Six lands and fourteen states were represented in its membership. Four races also were represented. Emily Doris Ware claims Shanghai, China as her home. Arthur George Scambler, Australia; Paulo Claro Palencia and Domingo Jose Samonte are from the Philippine Islands. William Mander is from the British Isles and Frederick Zweers from the Netherlands. The states represented by the graduating class are Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Illinois, South Dakota, Minnesota, Texas, Colorado, Oklahoma, New York, Idaho, Washington, California, Wyoming, Alabama.

Commencement activities were ushered in by the annual baccalaureate sermon by Charles S. Medbury, chaplain of the university. His subject was the place of religion in the new social order. Monday afternoon baseball team of Medical and Liberal Arts Alumni combined defeated a team of Law Alumni 10 to 7. Tuesday morning the seniors defeated the faculty 3 to 2. Senior class exercises and a contest among the children of the alumni filled the afternoon.

Wednesday morning the academic procession, the commencement address, the conferring of degrees on graduates and honorary degrees upon two of Drake's best known sons, with a final word of appreciation by President Hill M. Bell closed the work of the year.

COMMENCEMENT AT WILLIAM WOODS.

The twenty-fourth annual commencement of William Woods College closed with the graduating exercises held in the D. M. Dulany Auditorium on Thursday evening, May 28, 1914. The commencement address was delivered by Judge J. C. Pollock, of Kansas City, Kans., who has attained fame as a Juvenile court judge. Essays were read by Miss Nelle Hawkins of Brumley, Mo., the valedictorian of the class, and Miss Anna Jameson, of Fulton, Mo., the salutatorian of the class.

The commencement activities began with an old fashioned Missouri Barbecue which was held on the campus and to which were invited the students and faculties of Westminster and Synodical colleges. Six sheep and two shoats were cooked to a turn in the afternoon. The class baseball teams competed for the college letter under direction of the instructor in physical education.

On Sunday the bacalaureate services were held in the First Christian Church and Rev. M. A. Hart, pastor of the First Christian Church, Columbia, Missouri delivered the message. In the evening Rev. T. E. Winter, pastor of the Fulton Church, addressed the undergraduates.

Monday and Tuesday evenings were given over to the Voice and Expression Departments.

The Board of Directors held their annual meeting on Wednesday. Dr. W. S. Woods for whom the college is named made a gift of $8,000 to the maintenance fund of the college. It is one of the largest gifts he has made the college during the years he has so generously contributed to its financial support. Our new members of the board were nominated and two old members. The new members are the Honorable Champ Clark, speaker of the House of Representatives, Rev. Robert Graham Frank, Liberty, Mo., President of the State Board of Missions, Mr. W. T. Kemper of Kansas City, Mo., president of the Commerce Trust Company and Mr. Frank C. Stokes, Banker of Auxvasse. The re-elected members are Messrs, J. Harry Atkinson and Don P. Bartley of Fulton.

The board took up the matter of building the J. B. Jones Academic Memorial and decided to co-operate with the alumnae Association which is raising funds for the building. It is expected that this building will be erected and dedicated upon the twenty-fifth anniversary of the college in May, 1915. Ground will be broken for the building this fall. The Board of Directors and their wives were guests at a one o'clock dinner served by the members of the class in Domestic Science under the supervision of Miss Susie B. Kerr, Domestic Science teacher.

The Alumnae Association held its important meeting on Wednesday afternoon and re-elected Miss Jessie B. Farrell of St. Louis as president. Other officers elected were: Mrs. Perry Watson, Fulton, first vice-president; Miss Goldie Murry, Stephens, second vice-president; Miss Nell Jasper, teacher in mathematics, Fulton secretary; Miss Jessie Gooldy, Auxvasse, assistant secretary; Miss Mildred Jones, director of the Conservatory of Music, Fulton, treasurer. The association held a six o'clock banquet and a mass meeting in the evening. Robert Graham Frank was the speaker. The alumnae association plans to erect an academic building to the memory of the late President James B. Jones. It will cost $40,000 and the foundation will be laid this fall.

The new gate—four large ornamented brick pillars with large bronze lanterns upon them—was completed the week before commencement. In connection with this gate a "White Way" was installed on the campus and the display pleased the large group of visitors who attended the commencement. These also were gifts of Dr. and Mrs. W. S. Woods.

The college enters upon a most promising year in the way of attendance and service, having reached the Junior College standards required by the University of Missouri and having been so thoroughly equipped with all necessary books, maps, appliances and laboratory supplies for accredited work. The work done received the approval of standard colleges. There was an enrollment of over two hundred students in the college this year.

The state of Missouri has given to junior colleges the privileges of granting its graduates licenses to teach in the state for two and three years. Graduates taking the teacher training course will receive these licenses without examination. The teacher of this department holds an A. M. degree from Northwestern University of Evanston, Ill.

The Board of directors decided to emphasize the fact that William Woods College is owned and controlled by the Christian churches of Missouri. This is a Christian College and upholds Christian ideals. Besides courses of the Bible which are offered for both secondary and junior college students, there is a flourishing Y. W. C. A. and mission study class. The college and church work together and students attend Sunday-school and participate in the organization life of the church.

"WE SEEK NOT YOURS BUT YOU."

In the Gainesville Convention and other meetings of the Men and Millions Movement in Texas conspicuous above all the charts displayed was an immense banner with the above inscription. Its unanimous adoption and constant use grew out of the first meeting of tne team of fifteen National Workers who went into Texas for the campaign.

R. A. Doan of Nelsonville, Ohio, had been appointed to lead the group in a season of prayer. He read the 12th chapter of 2 Cor. and laid especial emphasis on the central clause of the 14th verse. This was not only instantly and unanimously adopted as the motto of the team, but aptly characterized the spirit in which the Texas work was done.

The addresses in the public meetings were made up not of exhortations and appeals, but of condensed and vital information. No public calls were made for money, nor were any gifts accepted in the meetings.

When one or two members of the team, with the local minister or some other active worker of the congregation, called on any individual privately it was to give more detailed information in regard to the world call of the Christ and the plans of the Men and Millions Movement. The situation was laid before him as an opportunity for investment in the Kingdom of God, and no effort was made to exercise hypnotic influence on any one, or to bring undue pressure to bear. Each individual was left, whether he subscribed or not, a better friend that before, not only of the Men and Millions Movement, but of the Church of Christ and its various agencies. If any regrets followed the passing of the team in any place they are not disappointment over having pledged, but repentance for having pledged so little or failed to invest at all.

The splendid total realized in the Texas Campaign could lead one to think that there could be very few regrets of this sort. The readiness with which the people seized the opportunity was indicated by the fact that one brother became anxious lest no one should call upon him, and had not a pledge but a handsome check ready for the canvassers when they arrived.

In every place it was felt that a great blessing as of a mighty revival had come into the church and every soul and every congregation must hereafter be richer in the things that make for real wealth.

MAKE THE FOURTH SIGNIFICANT.

By Sidney L. Gulick.

Great progress has been made of late in making Independence Day "safe and sane." Why not also make it really significant in our national life? Let us make it, not only a day of commemoration of a glorious past, but also a day constructively productive of a better present and a greater future.

This is not so difficult a matter as might be supposed. Pageants, historical and racial, have already been tried here and there, with excellent results. Can we not go further? Can we not make the day still more significant and valuable? My proposal is as follows:

Make the fourth of July our great national birthday, the one day in the year when new individuals are admitted to citizenship in this Republic. Let the ceremony of administering the oath of allegiance be restricted to a single day, and let the service be dignified and patriotic. And why administer the oath of allegiance only to aliens who become Americans? Is it not important and highly desirable that every young man, though born in the United States and of American parents, shall also in a formal way acknowledge his citizenship and swear his allegiance to the Stars and Stripes?

How impressive and significant would the Fourth of July become if, on this national birthday, all young men who have attained their manhood, together with all aliens who desire citizenship in this land, should take part in a formal service of admission to the rights and duties of citizenship.

Let there be processions, with flags and banners and bands. Let each race carry its own flag to the churches or schoolhouses or courthouses. Let native-born American sons carry pure white flags without colors. Let there be welcome orations by noted citizens; and let responses be made by representatives of the different groups and races seeking citizenship. And when all the preliminary exercises have been completed, let the flags of the nations be lowered, let the Stars and Stripes be raised, and then, with uplifted right hands, let the new citizens pledge with a loud "I do" their loyalty and love for the flag and the nation of which they now become an organic part. Then let miniature American flags with the date upon them be given to each new citizen to take to his home as a life-long souvenir of admission to the great Republic.

Thus shall we make the great and glorious Fourth, not only a day of commemoration of a great past, but constructively productive of a greater future. Let every new citizen, whether native or foreign born, enter upon his citizenship rights and duties only after formal admission to citizenship and public expression of allegiance.

NEWS FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

The returns for the ten days following Children's Day show that the Sunday-schools gave $15,955, a gain of $1,495. The churches, as churches, show a gain of $1,045 during the same time. There was also a gain in the number of contributing churches and Sunday-schools. These are encouraging figures, and they ought to cheer us on to show a still better record.

W. R. Hunt and family are on furlough in England from China.

Chas. P. Hedges, under date of April 13, says: "We are glad to report nine baptisms on April 5. We have just sent nineteen evangelists to thirteen outposts." He was writing from Longa, Congo, Africa.

C. E. Robinson, Sendai, Japan, reports three young men baptized in that district during the past month. The pastor of the Sendai Church, M. Y. Suto, one of the ablest of our preachers in Japan, has been very sick.

A department of missionary training of the University of Nankin, Nankin, China, has been opened. Fifteen students enrolled in the first class. The second class had thirty-six. This promises to be a movement of great usefulness.

The church at Delta, Iowa, will, in the future, support Mrs. Dr. L. B. Kline, Vigan, P. I.

Miss Mary L. Clarke will begin her furlough period in England, her native land, October next.

Frank Garrett of Nankin, China, is planning to spend the month of August in the Rocky Mountains with his children and with a brother and sister. He was in the Million Dollar Campaign in Texas.

It is expected that Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Oliphant of Japan will be permanently stationed at Tsurugaoka.

The Euclid Ave. Church, Cleveland, Ohio, will give the Foreign Society, $2,400 for its work this year.

Miss Edna P. Dale will take charge of the Girls' School in Nanking, China, while Miss Emma Lyon is home on her furlough.

Mr. and Mrs. Thos. A. Young are to be permanently located in Fukushima, Japan. They have been in the language school in Tokyo.

Last week the Foreign Society received two annuity gifts—one from Ohio and one from California.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Bowman now at Nantungchow, China, will be changed to Wuhu, China.

W. R. Holder, Monieka, Congo Free State, Africa, reached Cincinnati, Ohio, June 17. He will remain in America some time on his regular furlough. It will be remembered that he went out from Birmingham, Ala., and was at that time the pastor of one of the churches in that city. He was educated in the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky.

F. M. Rains, Secretary.

Golden Text.—The Son of man also came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.—Mark 10:45.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(32) And they were on the way, going up to Jerusalem: and Jesus was going before them; and they were amazed: and they that followed were afraid. And he took again the twelve, and began to tell them the things that were to happen unto him, (33) saying, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of man shall be delivered unto the chief priests and the scribes: and they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him unto the Gentiles; (34) and they shall mock him, and shall spit upon him, and shall scourge him, and shall kill him; and after three days shall rise again.

(35) And there come near unto him James and John, the sons of Zebedee, saying unto him, Teacher, we would that thou shouldest do for us whatsoever we shall ask of thee. (36) And he said unto them, What would ye that I should do for you? (37) And they said unto him, Grant unto us that we may sit, one on thy right hand, and one on thy left hand, in thy glory. (38) But Jesus said unto them, Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink the cup that I drink? or to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? (39) And they said unto him, We are able. And Jesus said unto them, The cup that I drink ye shall drink; and with the baptism that I am baptized withal shall ye be baptized: (40) but to sit on my right hand or on my left hand is not mine to give; but it is for them for whom it hath been prepared. (41) And when the ten heard it, they began to be moved with indignation concerning James and John. (42) And Jesus called them to him, and saith unto them, Ye know that they who are accounted to rule over the Gentiles lord it over them; and their great ones exercise authority over them. (43) But it is not so among you; but whosoever would become great among you, shall be your minister; (44) and whosoever would be first among you, shall be servant of all. (45) For the Son of man also came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.

By Rev. A. Z. Conrad, Ph.D.

Language is a very imperfect means of communication. It is meaningless without an ability to understand. Words convey thoughts and feelings. There must be a correspondence between two minds before there can be any real revelation of the inner life. The words of Jesus are empty until the soul is responsive to the purpose of Jesus. A man out of harmony with God finds little in revelation either to instruct or inspire. God and his Book are inevitably rejected unless the heart is obedient to the divine will. A purpose to know God's will is the indispensable prerequisite to a direct revelation to the soul. In sundry times and in divers manners God spake to the prophets and the poets and the holy men who were sympathetic with his purpose and thus could understand him. Jesus associated with himself a little company of disciples and among them there were one or two who seemed particularly to understand him. The secrets of the soul can be told only to a soul susceptible to such secrets. Jesus was nearing the end of his public ministry. V. 32. "And they were on their way, going up to Jerusalem, and Jesus was going before them. And they were amazed and they that followed were afraid." There was an atmosphere of hallowed mystery about Jesus. As he neared the end of his earthly mission this seemed to increase. His enemies were awed in his presence and his intimates were amazed at his teaching, his bearing and his personality. He was radiant with divineness.

IN THE TEETH OF THE TEMPEST.

"And he took again the twelve and began to tell them the things that were to happen to him." Why the twelve? They were best prepared to receive the secrets of the "passion." He could open his soul to those who had already learned something of its divine meaning. The wonder is that they could endure the narration which he proceeded to unfold. The prophecy of the coming events was simple and distinct. It was calculated to awaken faith when the fulfilment had declared his supernatural insight. He told them he was to be delivered into the hands of the religious authorities. This was a thing, they thought, to be avoided and much to be dreaded. Calmly he declared the certainty of betrayal. Furthermore, he did not hesitate to declare the certainty of condemnation. He was to be sentenced. For what? He had done nothing but love men into a larger life since the first moment of his public ministry. Yet, he was to be condemned. The injustice of it should have overwhelmed them. Then he was to be handed over to the Gentiles who would mock him, scourge him and kill him. The recital was climacteric. He does not conclude the forecast of tragedy, however, without the triumphant assurance of his resurrection. This is the main point of this revelation. He would soon rise again. Everything is to hinge upon the fulfilment of this prophecy. His coming forth from the tomb on the third day would be the final guarantee of the established kingdom. It would be the promise and precursor of kingdom development. How little we understand ourselves. How insistent is self-interest. The virtue of self-effacement is rare as it is beautiful. The story of the tragedy of the Lord's death was not sufficient to eliminate self-interest. Through their mother, Salome, James and John come and present their request for exalted position in the new kingdom. The prophecy of Jesus regarding his kingdom had made clear to them that the hour was approaching when some striking manifestation of divine power would place Christ upon the throne. He had already told them that the apostles would sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. They would speak for their places now. Poor human nature! How easily it loses sight of the suffering of others in its own inordinate ambition. "Grant that we may sit one on thy right hand and one on thy left hand in thy glory." It must have been like a sword thrust in the heart of Jesus. But no more than are our own expressed or unexpressed ambitions for preferment in the fact of kingdom tragedies. When the call of the cross is most earnest and we are appealed to by every consideration of the redemptive work of Jesus to throw ourselves unselfishly into the saving of men how ready we are to make that secondary, or forget it entirely in our ambition for place. How it condemns our littleness and our leanness. Are we not again and again appalled at some self-revelation of weakness, of pride, or self-seeking. The request was a petition. Not all petitions are answered as desired. Prayer is not prayer unless it has involved in every utterance, "Thy willl be done."

CHRISTIAN ASSURANCE.

The answer of the Sons of Zebedee has much to praise and admire. They answered, "We are able." There was in the heart a high resolve. There was a noble purpose. They were facing the tempest with the Lord. They knew it would break upon them but they were willing to go through it if only afterward they might be near him If they were self-centered, at the same time they were determined. In a large measure they spake the truth. It is true that with others they forsook him and fled. It is equally true that one of them became the first martyr and the other endured untold afflictions for his master's sake. Christian confidence is immensely important. There is a degree of positive assurance as to what we may do and endure, which is eminently desirable. We cannot and will not undertake tasks which try our souls unless we believe we shall be able to endure. But it is quite possible for us to overestimate our spiritual abilities. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." Our confidence must always be tempered with humility and trust.

NO ARBITRARY ELEVATION.

"To sit on my right hand or on my left hand is not mine to give." V. 40. This scripture is easily misunderstood. It is employed by some to make Christ deny his own deity. The meaning is perfectly plain. What they desired was not something that could be arbitrarily conferred. It is proper and probably better to translate it, "Is not mine to give except for whom it has been prepared." They were asking promotion and elevation independently of any worthiness to occupy it. It was not his to give merely as a matter of showing personal preference. Our Lord was teaching this, that all spiritual promotion must have spiritual excellence as a reason. The relationship of honor would depend entirely upon spiritual oneness with himself and the Father. We need not concern ourselves about high positions but we may well leave to our Lord all the rewards of service. It is ours to be occupied with worth and worthiness.

"They which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles lord it over them." As true today as when Jesus uttered the words. Nothing is so easily abused as authority. The dictator degenerates into the tyrant. The world has suffered immeasurably from misused power. This is not less dangerous in ecclesiastical directions than in secular. The whole church has been imperiled by a hierarchical conception of church authority.

SERVICE AND SUPREMACY.

"But it is not so among you. But whosoever would become great among you shall be your minister." The relation of service to supremacy finds emphasis here. True promotion is consequent upon unselfish service. The noblest life is one that serves the most. Over and over again our Lord illustrated and exemplified his own teachings. The incarnation was an act of condescension. Service reached its climax in the death upon the cross. Today, those loved most, esteemed most, are those who worship most devoutly and serve most humbly.

THE PREEMINENT MINISTRY.

"For the Son of Man also came not to be ministered unto but to minister." V. 45. This was the designation Jesus most frequently uttered regarding himself. He never seemed to think his deity would be questioned. His mysterious sayings, his wonderful doings, and his sacrificial dying were enough to establish his divinity. He was the representative man. He sustained a unique relation to all humanity for in his human nature he experienced what each child of the race experiences apart from sin. He stands as the incomparable example of self-abnegation and self-forgetting service. Of all who have ever lived he was most worthy to be ministered unto. Yet ,he never solicited it. He never sought it. He devoted himself unremittingly to serving others. He was much with the sick and the sad and the suffering. There was no ministry like his. Never was one so utterly indifferent to the immediate consequences of his acts of love. He did not wait for approbation nor was he disturbed by condemnation. He simply fulfilled the Father's will in perpetual bestowal of himself. The result was, healing and help and hope wherever he went.

SALVATION THROUGH RANSOM.

"And to give his life a ransom for many." That there was a transactional relation between God and man accomplished by Jesus Christ no one can doubt, who accepts the teachings of Christ respecting himself, and the teaching of the apostles regarding him. The very climax of his ministry was his deliberate surrender of his life on the cross as a ransom. If language means anything it means that the death of Christ has distinct and definite relation to soul liberty. What Jesus accomplished was a real atonement. He changed relations between man and God. He changed them forever. He made adequate provision for the complete forgiveness of the whole human race. The cross is effectualized in each individual instance through the hearty and trustful acceptance of the work of Jesus Christ in its behalf. If we are saved it is because Jesus Christ has ransomed us. "God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself." To those who believe on his name he has given power to become the "sons of God." We are saved to serve.

TOPIC FOR JULY 8.

Paul the Convert. Acts 9:3-9; 26:12-18; 22:6-11.

Interest in the conversion of Paul will continue as long as Christianity remains upon the earth. Harnack has said that "Paul is the most luminous personality in the history of primitive Christianity." "We regard him as Christ's disciple, as the apostle who not only worked harder, but also accomplished more than all the rest put together. It was Paul who delivered the Christian religion from Judaism." If we would understand primitive Christianity, we must study Paul. If we would understand Paul, we must give attention to his conversion.

"WHO ART THOU?"

A vast amount of mischief is being done in the world by conscientious persons. These persons shut their eyes to what God is doing in the world. They take as the standard of truth a few propositions which the experience of past generations has formulated. To modify, add to, or to take from the opinions of the fathers is to deny the faith. Paul was very zealous for the traditions of the fathers. He meant to do the will of God. He was opposed to the disciples of Jesus because he believed they were defying God. But Paul was ignorant of some things which it was his business to know. If we undertake to keep the world from adopting new opinions, we ought to be very careful to know what we are about. It may be that the man we accuse of turning the world upside down sees more clearly than we do and is doing the thing that ought to be done now, while we are trying to uphold an order that has outlived its usefulness. Paul changed his attitude toward Jesus the moment he found out who he was. In later life the apostle deeply regretted that he had been so blind before his conversion. To his credit we can say that he was glad to follow the truth wherever it led him. He did not attempt to change the facts.

"WHAT SHALL I DO?"

New truth modifies conduct. Opinions that have no effect on conduct may be ignored. As soon as Paul learned that Jesus was a very different sort of person from what he had thought him to be, Paul knew there was something to do. He did not say, "I will change my creed a little." He immediately made inquiry about his duty. His knowledge of Christianity was incomplete when he first asked what he should do. It would never have been greater if he had not seen the connection between faith and action. What he said in his writings to the churches about salvation by grace and by faith should be interpreted by the life he lived. The personal question is needed today. We know vastly more about many things than our practice indicates. How shall we make our homes more attractive? How shall we avoid the diseases whose causes we know and can control? How shall we make our influence count for good in every direction? What shall I do to give the church of God its full power over the hearts of men? A prompt use of what we know will bring wider and deeper knowledge.

A CONVERT WITH A MISSION.

A young girl decides to join the Catholic church because of its ceremonies and its mystery. A man unites with the same church because his wife is a member. For business reasons another changes his church relationship. None of these things moved Paul to change his religious associations. Those who unite with church for the reasons mentioned and for others of like nature are usually of small force in any church.

The Modern Superintendent

The old-time Sunday school superintendent often had no other justification for his election to the superintendency than the fact that he was "a faithful brother" and a good man. Sometimes he did not know the first elements of religious education. Perhaps he had little education of any sort. Of the Bible he often knew little, and of the methods of instruction nothing.

This is not saying, however, that there were not superintendents in the old days who were masters both of Bible knowledge and of the principles of teaching. But such men and women were exceptions, rather than the rule.

Times have changed. Today the churches are demanding the very best talent for the critical positions of Sunday school leadership. Many city schools employ paid Religious Directors. These are usually university men, alert to the very best matters and methods of religious education. In smaller towns, where paid leadership is impractical, the superintendent is very often the public school superintendent, principal, or a teacher. In many cases the pastor serves as superintendent, and it is not an uncommon thing to hear such leaders declare that they consider the opportunities of this position the most fruitful afforded them.

This change means much. We believe that if our country is to be saved from the corruption that has destroyed many another nation, the chief reason for its salvation will be that it practices in its life the principles of the Bible, which is and will always be the chief text book of the Sunday school.

These Things the Modern Superintendent Knows

That is, if he is really alive to his tremendous responsibility:

He knows the literature of religious education.

He knows the strong and weak qualities of the various systems of lessons afforded.

He knows WHY HIS SCHOOL IS USING ONE CERTAIN SERIES RATHER THAN OTHERS.

Is Your Superintendent "Modern?"

See to it that he examines the samples of all systems available and that a choice is made for your school that insures the VERY BEST POSSIBLE Instruction in the Truths of Religious Education.

IT IS CRIMINAL NEGLECT NOT TO HAVE THE BEST when you are considering the question of material for SOUL DEVELOPMENT.

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The Whole Duty of Man

Micah set out deliberately to answer the question "Wherewith shall I come before the Lord?" He considered whether any sacrifice could in itself please God. He enumerated various sacrifices, and considered their value in money and in spiritual worth. What was the worth of burnt offerings, calves a year old, thousands of rams, ten thousands of rivers of oil? Had these any spiritual value? If the value of sacrifice depended on its cost to the giver, then perhaps a man ought to slay his own child in the service of God; could these or any like offering please Him?

Here was his unqualified answer: "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God."

It is not easy to reduce duty to a nutshell; yet, here it is. Every being who can think and feel and execute his own purposes must be conscious of duty. Duties on the one side correspond with rights on the other. When God made sentiment beings to share the universe with him, their existence gave them certain rights, and God assumed certain obligations. Having given them life and life needs and moral capacity, God assumed the obligation to seek their best good. God is good because he perfectly conforms to all obligation.

On the other hand, our existence as children of God, and brethren of one another, lays us under obligation both to God and our fellows. These obligations are many, because the rights of others are many. God has a right to our love and loyal service; our fellow men have a right to our co-operation and sympathy and help. We meet those about us in such various relations that our duties are very complex and the resultant duties sometimes seem to clash, though they never do so. They are so numerous as to be confusing, and we sometimes wish we had an epitome of duty.

Our duties to God, also seem many. How many are his requirements in the Old Testament? Shall we ever be able to do his commandments? Shall we ever be able to distinguish the essential from the temporary?

Sinful men always act as though duty were unreasonable. Many a man says he "tries to do as nearly right as he can," but is unwilling to submit to God. He admits that to become a Christian would be right, yet seems to fancy that between doing right and becoming a Christian there is a debatable ground where a man is safe, and that becoming a Christian is something of the nature of supererogation. Israel followed the statutes of Omri and Ahab, and complained that God's ways were not equal. In the prodigal's demand for the portion of goods falling to him, there is a suggestion of what we find in the demand of sin that God shall give us more liberty. After all, there is little required by God. Duty is capable of reduction, in the last analysis, to a few simple rules. The old Testament law contains tons of ceremony and grains of command concerning morality, yet the latter outweigh the former. There are chapters of ritual and sacrifice, yet plain declarations that God has no delight in them. There are volumes of mere ceremony, all rigidly prescribed, and verses of ethics dimly hinted at. Yet all the ritual is the husk to protect the ethical kernel within. There is no righteousness but rightness of heart; there is no salvation that does not save from sin. To save men from sin, to make them holy, to help them to do justly and love mercy and walk humbly with God, this is all there is of duty, and all of religion beside this is a means to an end, or else is some invention of man and not a command of God.

This is what the Bible is for. This is what the Incarnation is for. This is what the Cross is for. It is to teach us to do justly and love mercy and walk humbly with God.

Two cannot walk together except they are agreed. Walking with God is not difficult, but it is not a thing to be accepted too much as a matter of course.

Justice is the rendering to every man his due, the even-handed squaring of obligation with performance of duty. Mercy is kindness toward those over whom we have the advantage. Humility is not that weak and spurious thing that often goes by the name, but is gentleness of spirit and a willingness to submit our own will to the will of God and the good of others.

Everything else is important in proportion as it brings us to this spirit. This is the fruit of real religion.

The World's Greatest Play

The Pageant and Masque of Saint Louis.

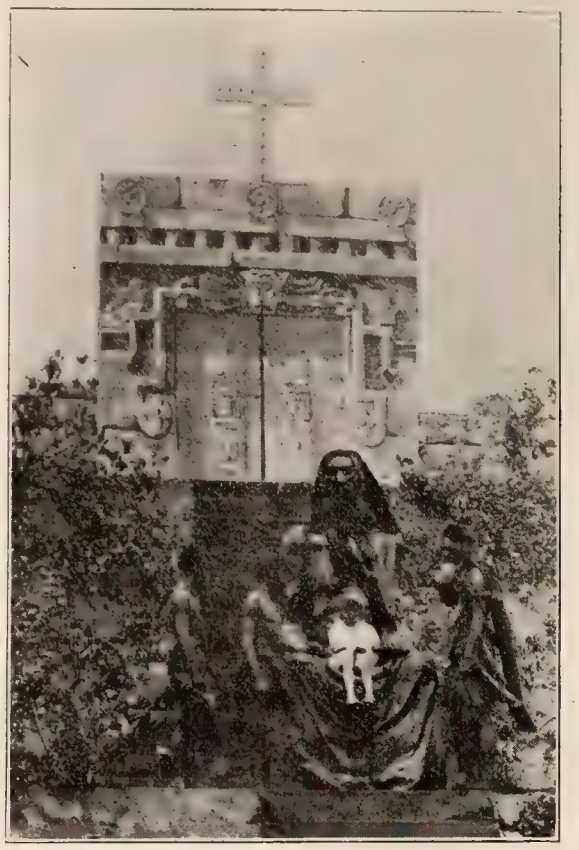
BY HORACE F. HOLTON.

SUPERLATIVE is the best word to describe the impression that has been left in the minds of the people of St. Louis, by the Great Pageant and Masque with which they celebrated the 150th anniversary of the founding of their city, on the 28th, 29th, 30th and 31st of May. In the biggest natural open air amphitheater to be found in any of the great cities of the world, on the largest stage ever constructed for such a purpose, the biggest caste ever gotten together presented the "World's Greatest Play," before what is said to be the biggest crowd that has ever witnessed a similar event. In view of these facts the word "superlative" would seem well chosen.

It started in the public play grounds. Miss Charlotte Rumbold, their supervisor, was planning a great out-of-door exhibition of the work being done in her department. Then some one remembered that the city was about to have its 150th anniversary. This is a very respectable age for a western city to have attained. Why not have a great birthday party, at which the history of the city, from its founding to the present time should be reviewed? And so the pageant idea was born. The little group of people who conceived it were dreamers, dreamers of a better, fairer, more prosperous St. Louis. They were of all creeds, and of no creed, united under the standard of the great army of the common good. Their dream grew and grew until they themselves were almost overwhelmed with its splendor.

THE BEST TALENT SECURED.

They were not dreamers only, they were people of a very practical turn of mind as well. Some one said, "It will be a colossal success or a colossal failure." That it was the former, rather than the latter, is due entirely to the far-sighted wisdom of its promoters. An executive committee was formed consisting of representative citizens taken from all sections and all classes of the city. To this committee was entrusted the carrying out of the details of the plan. They proceeded immediately to secure the best talent available anywhere, to write and stage the play. Thomas Wood Stevens, head of the School of Drama in Carnegie Institute, was asked to write and stage the Historical Pageant. Percy Mackaye, dramatist and poet, was secured to write the "Masque of St. Louis," while Joseph Lindon Smith, a pageant-master of international fame, should stage it, and Frederick Converse, of Boston, should write its music. The selection of these men, backed by the enthusiastic coöperation of the people of St. Louis, insured the production of something really worth while from the literary and artistic point of view.



The Future in the lap of the Past.

Strong business men were put on the finance committee. At first it was estimated that $50,000 would be needed. Ultimately the cost was $130,000, all of which was raised, a part by popular subscription, the rest from the sale of seats. A speakers' bureau and a publicity committee were organized that the people of the city and of the country at large might be fully informed of what was going on. Before it was over nearly ten thousand men, women, and children were giving an immense amount of time and energy to it, and all without pay or personal advertisement.

THE SITE OF THE PLAY.

The site that was chosen was the great natural amphitheater, that sweeps in a long slope from the top of Art Hill, in Forest Park, down to the lagoon at its base. This was the site of the Cascades at the St. Louis World's Fair. Out over the lagoon was built the mammoth stage. Its semicircular measurement was 880 feet, the width at its back was 520 feet, and the depth from the foot lights to the great 50-foot screen of timber at the back, which acted as scenery and sounding board combined, was 200 feet. At either side of the stage to the front, great wooden towers, 40 feet high, were erected; these were used for the light effects, and to complete the decorative scheme. Here also was placed the telephone station of the stage manager, for the stage was so large, and there were so many actors, it was necessary to direct the different groups by phone. A caste of 7,500 people was organized and thoroughly drilled. Great tents were erected as dressing rooms for this immense company. On the hillside across the 200 feet of water that was left in front of the stage, were arranged seats for an assembly of 60,000 people, with a great vacant space, stretching away to the top of the hill, where as many more could stand. One half of the seats were reserved, the sale of these seats going to meet the expense of the Pageant and Masque committee. The division betwen the free and reserved seats was entirely impartial, all seats on the right of the great center aisle were free, while those on the left were reserved.

THE PLAY BEGINS.

When the time came for the opening performance on Thursday afternoon, May 28th, every thing was completely ready. Early in the afternoon the great crowd began to gather, and by the time the performance was scheduled to begin, there was an assembly gathered there such as no one who saw it will ever forget. It was a vast audience of orderly, intelligent men, women and children. So quiet and well behaved was it, that the spoken parts of the play could readily be heard even to the outskirts of the crowd. There were comparatively few outbursts of applause, but rather an absorbed attention which, at times, became positively thrilling as one realized that the people were getting hold of the great ideal that was in the minds of the creators of the play.

Promptly at 6:30 o'clock the Pageant began. This was the first part of the play and consisted of a series of three movements or acts in which the romantic history of St. Louis, from the time of the Mound Builders to the close of the Civil War, was unfolded in a gripping drama. To the spectators the effect was as if they were stationed on the Illinois side of the Great River and were witnessing the growth of the city before their very eyes. First they saw the Mound Builders and the Indians. Then came the discoverers and the gold seekers. They planted the cross on the ancient mound of the former civilization, and went their way. The Settlers followed, headed by Laclede and Chouteau. Then came the period of the French and Spanish occupation, ending in the impressive day of the three flags, when in 1803 St. Louis, by the Louisiana purchase, became a part of the United States. A New Englander, witnessing all this, could not but be mightily impressed with the fact that St. Louis was as strongly Catholic, French and Spanish, in its beginnings, as Boston was Puritan and English. And therein he found much food for thought!

The third and last movement of the Pageant was the most thrilling. One saw the Lewis and Clark expedition departing for the Northwest in 1804. Then came the great stream of pioneers pressing on through the town into the great west beyond. A beautiful scene was that when Lafayette visited the city in 1824. A truly war-like touch was added when Battery A returned from the Mexican War, and the original guns captured in Mexico went rattling across the stage drawn by their full quota of horses. The Pageant ended after representing the stirring period of the Civil War, when the citizens were divided in their loyalty for the North and the South, all rejoicing together when peace was declared.

ST. LOUIS' HISTORY INTERPRETED.

By this time it was 8:30 o'clock and quite dark. The crowd was glad of an intermission of half an hour to get rested in anticipation of the second part of the play, the Masque. This was a spectacular, symbolic interpretation of the history of St. Louis; though by changing the names of the characters it might with equal truth be applied to the history of every American city. The wonderful light effects, the beautiful costumes, the greatness of the poetic conception combined to make the Masque a spectacle of unparalleled splendor and dignity. Perhaps it should be said though, that its meaning was a bit too subtle to be caught by the great majority of the audience. The plot, however, was a simple one. Mississippi brings to Cahokia, the spirit of the mound building civilization, a white child, who is christened Saint Louis. The child passes up the steps of the great temple and in through the gate. After the passage of time, represented by a wonderful living frieze, high up on the top of the temple wall, the gate opens again and Saint Louis comes forth, clad as a youthful crusader with the flaming sword in his hand, and the star on his brow. Then come the pioneers, miners, rangers, calling on Saint Louis to lead them. At this point, Gold, as symbolic of the spirit of materialism and greed, enters the scene and defies Saint Louis. There follows a series of spectacular struggles between the champions of Saint Louis and Gold and his minions. In each case Gold is vanquished. At last there is heard a dirge of women's voices, followed by the wail of Poverty. With her come her children, Shame, Vice, Plague, Dumbness, Despair, and Rebellion, also there comes a mysterious hooded figure, the father of her children. Saint Louis unmasks the hooded figure, and finds his old enemy, Gold. Gold seizes the sword of Saint Louis and rushes up the steps and captures the temple. Saint Louis calls on the cities to form a league to help him. But they all are unavailing against the power of Gold, until Imagination and Love ascend the steps and summon him forth. He rushes out to destroy them, but his sword falls from his nerveless hand when he encounters them, and from that time he becomes the servant and not the master of St. Louis. Here the Masque ends.

Imagination and Love triumphant over Gold.

The play was repeated on four different nights and each time a vast audience witnessed it. The Friday night performance had to be postponed until Monday evening, but even then the crowd seemed to show no abatement to its interest. It is estimated that about 500,000 people in all witnessed the Pageant and Masque.

PUBLIC IDEALISM.

And what was the reason for this great expenditure of labor and money? The committee's official announcement was that "It was given not to make money, or to advertise anybody or anything, but to bring all the people of the city together, to make them know each other, to make them proud of each other as citizens and proud of their city." "If we play together we shall work together," was the way that one of the leading business men of the city expressed it. There was need that the people of St. Louis should learn to work together. There was a free bridge to be completed, a new charter to be adopted, and a new spirit of civic pride and progressiveness to be fostered. We have learned to play together, and there is every evidence that we are now ready to work together as never before. And the promoters of the Pageant and Masque are even more pleased at the manifestation of this new spirit, than they are with the marvelous success of this great plan. It has left us all feeling, as Saint Louis expressed it, in the great closing scenes of the Masque:

"O sisters, brothers, cities leagued by love!
If we are dreaming, let us scorn to wake;
Or waking, let us shape the sordid world
To the likeness of our dreams."

ANOTHER ANTI-SALOON VICTORY.

By a decision of the Supreme Court handed down last week, the greater part of northern Minnesota has been added to the "dry" teritory. A long conflict has existed between federal agents seeking to enforce the laws against the introduction of intoxicating liquors into the Chippewa Indians' country and the saloonists and other sellers of intoxicating liquors. The decision of the court forever settles the contest and many saloons will be driven out.

An Article of Exceptional Authority on a Vital Topic.

BY JUDGE WILLIAM E. CHURCH.

BY a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the state of Illinois in a case which came before it on an appeal of some Catholic parents of school children, from a judgment of the Circuit Court of Scott County, two propositions were laid down and established as the law of this state.

First: That the reading from the Bible, as a part of the daily opening exercises of the school, of certain passages selected by the teacher,—not otherwise described or identified—the repeating in concert of the Lord's Prayer and the singing of a sacred hymn violated the provision of section 3, article II of the constitution of the state, usually called the "Bill of Rights," which declares that "The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination, shall be forever guaranteed. . . . No person shall be required to attend or support any minister or place of worship against his consent nor shall any preference be given by law to any religious denomination or mode of worship."

THE BIBLE A SECTARIAN BOOK.

In the case before the court it did not appear that any further participation in these exercises was required of complainants' children than that during the singing of the hymn they should stand with the rest and that during the reading and prayer they should rise in their seats, with the others, fold their hands and bow their heads. It was held by the court that the exercises described were religious worship and constituted the school room a "place of worship" within the meaning of the prohibitory clause of the constitution.

Second: That the reading of passages selected from the Bible as above described constituted a violation of section 3 of article VIII of the constitution which declares that "neither the General Assembly nor any county, city, town, township, school district or other public corporation shall ever make any appropriation or pay from a public fund whatever, any thing in aid of any church or sectarian purpose."

Upon this branch of the case it was held by the court that considering that there is much of the Bible which cannot be regarded as sectarian, yet that no satisfactory test can be applied by which to distinguish the sectarian portions from those which are unsectarian; wherefore it must be declared that the Bible in its entirety is a sectarian book and as such, without discrimination as to various versions, must be excluded altogether from use in the public schools.

SOME SPECIFIC CASES.

The opinion of the court, written by Justice Frank Dunn, is long, and cites and discusses many authorities from other states, admitting that most of them reach conclusions adverse to those reached by the Illinois court but attributing this fact, to some extent, to differences in the languages of their respective constitutions, which, in my opinion, are not of a character to justify the discrimination.

Two of the justices—Cartwright and Hand—joined in an extended and religious dissenting opinion, in the course of which they declare that the majority of the court have not found, and cannot find, a single authority in support of their opinion; that the judgment is in conflict with the opinions of every court of last resort in the United States which has spoken upon the subject and is inconsistent with and contrary to the principles laid down by the Supreme Count of Illinois in several previous cases.

Most courts—among them the Supreme Court of the United States—hold that the Bible is not a sectarian book. The courts of Wisconsin and Nebraska alone hold that it is not wholly sectarian and that there is no reason for excluding the reading of non-sectarian passages.

DO NOT VIOLATE CONSTITUTION.

None of them hold that exercises of the church described violate the usual constitutional guaranty of freedom of worship. Prominent among the earlier cases in this state are the following:

In one case it was held that the use of the schoolhouse under the permission of the school board, by various church organizations, for stated meetings for religious worship at times when the house was not occupied for school purposes violated neither of the constitutional provisions above quoted.

As to the first of which it was held that the thing contemplated was "a prohibition upon the legislature to pass any law by which a person should be compelled, without his consent, to contribute to the support of any ministry or place of worship."

In McCormick vs. Burt, 95 Illinois, 263, it was held that school directors acting in good faith are not liable in damages for enforcing by expulsion a rule requiring all pupils to lay aside their books and remain quiet during opening exercises consisting in the reading of a chapter from the Bible, and that the rule was a reasonable one.

In North vs. Trustees of the University of Illinois, 137 Illinois, 296, it was held that the constitution was not violated by a rule of the trustees requiring the attendance of pupils at daily religious exercises in the chapel, unless excused for good cause—such exercises being substantially identical with those complained of in the Scott County case.

THE COOK COUNTY POOR FARM.

Until the Scott County case was decided, the foregoing were, I think, all the cases in Illinois in which these questions were chiefly raised, but since that case it has been held by the court in an opinion written by the same judge, that it was not a violation of the constitution for a county board to grant permission to a Catholic bishop to erect on the ground of the county poor farm at Oak Forest a permanent chapel 138x66 feet in size, for the sole and exclusive use of the Catholic Church, for holding various religious exercises according to the forms and under the direction of that church; the title to the building to rest in the county but the church to have the use of it and of the ground free. Richwald vs. County Board, 258 Illinois, p. 44.

Some incidental history will be instructive and illuminating.

Illinois has had three constitutions—one adopted in 1818, one in 1848 and the present one in 1870.

The first two contained provisions relating to freedom of worship, which, for the purposes of this discussion, may be regarded as substantially similar to those of the constitution of 1870.

Neither of these earlier constitutions, however, contained the provisions of the later one forbidding the appropriation of public money for sectarian purposes.

During all this time—sixty years under the earlier constitutions and forty years under the present one—so far as I can ascertain, the practice of opening the daily sessions of the public schools with simple exercises, such as are above described, has been generally if not universally followed under the general supervision of the local school boards, and never has been successfully challenged as a violation of the constitution in any respect until the Scott County case.

EFFECT OF THE SCOTT COUNTY DECISION.

The daily sessions of the constitutional committee of 1870 were opened by prayer, those prayers were regularly printed as a part of the daily proceedings, and the officiating clergymen were paid out of the public funds by vote of the committee, a stated sum for their services. A proposition to add to article VIII a section forbidding the legislative committee to pass any law excluding the Bible from the schools was very extensively debated and was finally, without action, referred to the Committee on Education, where it was buried, but the course of the debate showed two things:

On the part of the advocates of the provision, a solicitude lest some future legislature might be induced to pass an act excluding the Bible from the schools.

On the part of its opponents, the reply that such a fear was groundless; that the proposition to add such a section was unfair as containing an implication that there was some purpose to exclude the Bible, when no such purpose existed and to raise an issue where none existed; that the insertion of such a clause might arouse factional opposition when the constitution was presented to the people for adoption and possibly imperil the whole instrument and that it was better to make no mention of the subject in the constitution, but to leave it where it had always been, with the local school boards.

But the most significant fact is that throughout the whole debate no suggestion or intimation was made by any one, that as the constitution was framed, the Bible was effectually excluded from the schools, nor was any such interpretation ever given to it until the decision in the Scott County case in 1910—in other words, that decision overthrew a contemporaneous interpretation to the contrary and a general public acquiescence therein from the foundation of the state.

SOME CONCLUSIONS.

My own study of the subject has led me to the following conclusions:

That the employment of the exercises described, as a part of the daily proceedings at the opening of the sessions of the public schools, is not a violation of the constitutional guaranty of freedom of worship; that that guaranty was never intended to apply to such incidents, especially where no pupil was compelled to participate actively therein, but was an expression of the determination of the people of this state, as of most of the other states, to abolish that governmental supervision and control of public worship which drove the Pilgrim Fathers to New England, and which they immedi-

Up From Tiberias to Tabor

A Modern Version of the New Testament Story, "Down from Jerusalem to Jericho."

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT, JR.

Some weeks ago there appeared in the Associated Press dispatches the account of a robbery and shooting near Tiberias, the victims being members of the faculty of the Syrian Protestant College at Beirut. We were at that time concerned as to whether Mr. Willett might have been in the party, as no names were given in the dispatches, and he had spoken of a plan to make a vacation trip south from Beirut. The present article tells the story of the occurrence. It is an interesting side light on the conditions prevalent in lands under Turkish rule.—EDITOR.

DURING the spring vaction which covered the period of the Latin and Greek Easters, a party of our staffites set out for a trip through Galilee; they took the boat from Beirut to Haifa, and then by donkey and carriage made their way to the Sea of Galilee.

From Tiberias they set out on foot for a visit to Mount Tabor and Nazareth on their way south to Jerusalem. Two of the men, photographic enthusiasts, started out early in the afternoon to get some sunset effects from the hills overlooking the Sea of Galilee, while the others, seven in number, waited for the shadows of the evening to diminish somewhat the heat for which Tiberias is infamous. (Herod could not have chosen a spot in which to express warmer admiration for his emperor.)

A MISADVENTURE.

About five o'clock the pilgrims set out on their moonlight walk, expecting to reach Tabor in four or five hours. They did not know the road; Arabic was the least of their possessions; and they were unarmed. But strong in the belief that a party of teachers should be safe anywhere, they mounted the slopes overhanging the city, and sought to make their way southwest to the dome-shaped mountains plainly visible in the distance. Direct paths have not been properly arranged for eager travelers, and so from time to time stops to make somewhat labored inquiries where necessary. The Bedawi of the region are not noted for their social instincts, and upon occasion the party was met with insolent or sullen silence from shepherds or farmers, while once those men, mounted and heavily armed, forced the explorers to turn at right angles from their course and strike through a field which seemed to be limitless.

SHEPHERDS WANT "FLEECE."

This misadventure led them behind a small hill which hid from them their destination, and so, after a few efforts to find a path, they approached three shepherds watching their flocks under the rising moon. A civil question was answered by stares; a second by inarticulate grunts, while the natives took stock of the party. Finally one of the men, a negro, offered to conduct them to Tabor for a certain backsheesh, and his aid was eagerly accepted. But when the group started on their way, they noticed that the other two men, armed with revolvers and rifles, were following. Knowing that even if safety did not make it wiser for them to have but one guide, saving of expense did, one of the teachers motioned for the two to go back, and spoke to the authorized guide. He turned to speak to his companions while the party moved on and all seemed to have been arranged when a gun was pointed at the leader and backsheesh was demanded in immediate payment.

A short parley followed, in which the party made it plan that only upon arrival at Tabor would they pay, and, to give force to their refusal, they again started forward. Hardly had they gone twenty paces, however, when a shot rang out, followed quickly by two others, and Scheaner, one of the group, fell just as he was calling to his companions, "Drop; they're going to shoot!" In the excitement which followed the shepherds approached the group with levelled revolvers, and demanded their money. Scheaner was lying on the ground, and beside him fell Brown, pretending to have been wounded. Wilson hid behind a comrade long enough to secrete his gold in his shoes; but Agne, the leader, with a pistol at his head, emptied his pockets and produced two bishliks, all the change he had kept out of the purse stowed away in his helmet. Billmay, seeing this small prize accepted, produced his coppers without hesitation, but Utidjian had given all his money to the treasurer of the party, and fearing that his life would pay for his inability to add to the booty, called out in agonized tones, "For God's sake, Agne, lend me a bishlik!"

ROBBERS GROW BOLDER.

So far the demands had been fairly restrained, for the robbers evidently feared the presence of arms, but now they became bolder. One man's kodak was snatched from him; another was forced to give up his coat. Agne was again approached, and this time disclosed the hiding place of the party funds. Scheaner, who could not move, was brutally kicked and struck with a rifle, while Brown found it necessary to produce a few of his coins, no longer the copper ones, as gold was now demanded.

The whole affair took but a few moments, and even shorter was the time necessary for the thieves to disappear. The wounded man was first attended to, and the bullet hole was found in his back and bandaged, before they attempted to carry him back to Tiberias. When they lifted him, however, and started to walk, even with an improvised stretcher to lay him on, the pain of moving was too severe for him, and they had to lay him down again. He kept repeating his fear that he could not live, and with that cry in their ears, the men planned how to get the nearest aid. Two retraced their steps; two pushed on as best they could to Tabor; while the third pair stayed with Scheaner. All night they talked to him, trying to keep up his courage, and nearly froze because they they were detained by force. The other had to give him their coats. A native woman from a village nearby brought a bowl of milk for him to drink, but nobody else came near.

RESCUE FOR THE WOUNDED.

The two who went to Tabor finally reached the monastery only to be refused help on the ground of danger in going out at night, and when they tried to go back to those waiting for them two reached Tiberias and soon stirred the town to action. Animals were loaded with surgical instruments, clothes and food, and Doctor Torrence, of the mission hospital, along with another doctor and some Turkish soldiers, hurried to the place of the robbery. Their difficulty in carrying Scheaner back I need not describe. Twenty-two hours after the accident the bullet, a slug the size of the end of a man's little finger, was extracted. It had shattered the shoulder bone and one rib, and stopped less than half an inch from the heart.

UNUSUAL OFFICIAL ACTIVITY.

President Bliss of the college, Ambassador Margenthem, Earl Bryce, and the British Consul-General were all close to Tiberias at the time and as a result the Turkish officials outdid themselves in tracking down the thieves. All the soldiers obtainable were sent out to scour the country; whole villages were questioned; the woman who had given Scheaner milk was beaten on the supposition that she had been kind only to turn suspicion from her husband and that she could tell who the offenders really were. One shepherd who refused to answer the questions of a soldier was shot and died shortly afterward. Never had such a hue and cry been raised, though robbing in the vicinity is fairly frequent.

Finally two men were brought into Tiberias, and all the officials present sat as a jury. But instead of having the staffmen identify the prisoners, the latter were forced to identify their victims, telling from which man they had taken various articles, and finally they confessed the hiding place of much of the booty. Under a stone near the scene of the robbery some money was found, and in a pool nearby two kodaks, their lenses broken and bellows torn out. Evidently they had been thought to be the hiding places of gold.

NEGRO NOT FOUND.

The negro, presumably the leader of the party, was not found, though he is a well-known character in the region. Interest died down after the visitors left; backsheesh was evidently set at work, and now it is believed that the matter will never be pushed any further. Scheaner has come back to Beirut and is recovering rapidly, but his chances of claiming damages from the government are small. It was only good fortune that restored any of the property, because there is little doubt that, except for the presence of the ambassador, no steps would have been taken to arrest the robbers. But we have learned not to travel unarmed, and the shops which sell revolvers have done good business since Easter.

An Old Minister in a Hard Field

Recording the Home Missionary Experiences of Rev. Dr. Jeremiah.

BY WILLIAM E. BARTON.

ONCE upon a time there was a minister, whose name was Rev. Dr. Jeremiah, who, after having had a conspicuous pastorate in a large city, spent his last days as a home missionary far out upon the frontier. It is one of the most tragic stories in all the annals of the ministry.

This man Jeremiah was of a good family, he had an excellent education and considerable business ability. There were ways enough in which he could have earned a living, and he never had wanted to enter the ministry, but he began preaching while still a very young man, preached first in a little village, afterward accepted a call to a large city, and late in life became a home missionary.

After the death of Governor Gedaliah, who had been his principal supporter, and some service as pastoral supply in Bethlehem, where he preached in the Chimham Hotel, he accepted a call to a struggling work among some pioneers far out upon the frontier.

HE DID NOT WANT TO GO.

He did not want to accept the call. Jeremiah never did anything that he wanted to do. It was never given him to mingle joy with duty. The hard tasks of the ministry came to him one after another in unending succession. He had some feeling that a man who had lived to be as old as he, ought not to be expected to go so far from home and to take up so difficult a work. He wanted to live and die in his own state, as near as possible to his home city and to the place of his birth, but the only field that offered itself was the frontier field in Egypt, where a colony of his people had gone and where others of his acquaintance were going.

Jeremiah declined the first call, but they brought pressure to bear upon him and he accepted reluctantly. They almost forced him to accept. He had hardly any choice in the matter, so we find the record of his call and final acceptance and one or two fragments of his sermons preached on this home missionary field.

WHAT DID THEY WANT OF A MINISTER?

Now, it is painfully evident in the records that have come down to us that these immigrants for the most part left their religion behind them. It is hard to see what they wanted of a minister anyway, considering how little religion they had. Jeremiah did not have a single church. He had to travel from Migdol, where he preached in the morning, to Tahpanhes, where he preached at night, and now and then he got in a service at Noph and made a good many pastoral visits out in the country in the neighborhood of Pathros. The Year Book of 586 B. C. has his name opposite four separate stations, and the list will be found in Jeremiah 44:1. It doubtless was hard work journeying from one of these fields to another, but that was not the worst of it. The hardest part of it was that hardly anybody came to church. It must be remembered that Jeremiah was a man of ability and education, a man who had had a pastorate in a large city, a man in every way greater than a little frontier community had any right or reason to expect. They ought to have considered themselves exceedingly fortunate to have had such a minister as the Rev. Dr. Jeremiah, but they did not. They said he was a poor old fogy, a back number, and very few of them cared for his sermons.

We have one incident in the experience of Dr. Jeremiah. Some little time after his acceptance of the call to this Egyptian pastorate there appears to have been a picnic in the vicinity of Tahpanhes. They were building a palace there for the Egyptian king, and the Jews who were scattered in several nearby towns decided to hold a gathering in that vicinity and renew old acquaintance and look at the wonders of the new palace. They did not expect to be admitted and were not admitted to the interior of the structure, but the building, which was larger than any they had ever seen, was an attractive feature of the day and helped the excursion committee to round up a good crowd.

THEY PROSPERED.

A good many Jews had been settling in Egypt during these troubleous times, and some of them were already established in business and prospering nicely. Some of them had garages of their own, and on the day of the picnic cranked up their camels and honked over the road to Tahpanhes, while their humbler neighbors riding on Egyptian donkeys came in that less ostentatious but more comfortable fashion.

I wish I knew how Jeremiah got there. Some people suppose that a home missionary minister can never have money enough laid away to ride first class, and I have no reason to suppose that at this time any of Pharaoh's railroads were giving half rates to the clergy, but I somehow have it in my mind that Jeremiah did not walk. I hardly think he was rich enough to afford a camel, and having ridden a camel myself in Egypt I rather hope he did not, but I can see him in my mind's eye mounted on a fleet little Egyptian donkey with a swarthy little son of the desert running behind to keep the animal going. I imagine that Jeremiah went to the picnic on a donkey, and it is the safest and altogether the most pleasant way to travel in Egypt unless one has a boat and can take his journey on the Nile.

I can imagine some of these well-to-do Jews who had established themselves in some one of the four towns where Jeremiah preached, and who had begun to do a prosperous business in second-hand clothing, honking past him on their camels and leaving him in the dust, but Jeremiah got there just the same.

HE HAD NO UNION CARD.

Now after the luncheon, as the people sat around among the dinner baskets, they were interested in seeing the old prophet climbing up the scaffold and going around among the workmen, and they wondered that the old man had the nerve to do it, but Jeremiah moved around unimpeded, no foreman asked him if he had a union card, nobody hindered him or told him to get out of the way. Jeremiah had given an extra piaster to his donkey boy and with his assistance carried several large stones up to an elevation near the entrance of the palace and the Jews all gathered around on that side of the building to see what he was going to do. Jeremiah took the stones and deposited them in the brick work where all the Jews could see just what he was doing. Evidently they built up art outside of the structure in regular courses and filled in the interior with such stones as they chanced to have. He dropped the stones he had gathered into the building inside the outer and regularly laid courses, and the Jews wondered whether they were bombs, but they were not. Jeremiah said, "There is nothing the matter with these stones; they are good, honest stones, but for the purpose of my illustration they might be something else. The point is that the Egyptians are not putting them in here, I am putting them in myself and they will be covered up by the other masonry and last as long as the rest of it. I am no member of the I. W. W. and I am not committed to any act of sabotage but you can see how it would be possible to hide defective stone in here where sometimes its weakness might seriously affect the stability of the building. Now, as a matter of fact that is what is happening in Egypt. You yourselves are an illustration of it. You are essentially a foreign element deposited in the life of Egypt and no organic part of its national life, and Egypt has included in itself a good deal of just such material with no motive to fight for it in time of war and no sympathy with it in its system of government. This is an inherent weakness in the life of Egypt and when the time comes, as it surely will come, that Egypt is in conflict with Babylon, Egypt will get the worst of it for it has no inherent national unity. Then all you Jews who deserted your duty and came down here and invested your money on the assumption that Egypt is a safe, financial proposition will find you have risked your money on a losing bet. The conflict is inevitable and Egypt is sure to get the worst of it and you will suffer with it, whereas if you had stayed in Judah as I told you to and had preserved the pure faith there, you might have suffered some temporary financial disadvantage, but in the end it would have been better for you and you would have had the joy of handing down a legacy of a pure religion to the children who are to follow you. You have lost your religion for the sake of your pocket-books and in the end your pocket-book will suffer also."

GLOOM IN THE PICNIC.

This is the substance of the sermon which Jeremiah preached from the top of the balustrade in front of the new palace at Tahpanhes and it threw something of a gloom over the Jewish picnic there in progress, but the Jews said Jeremiah was an old fogy and a back number and that it would be foolish for anyone to mind him, so on the whole the day was passed pleasantly and late in the afternoon the picnic broke up and the people scattered back to the towns from which they came.

It happened very much as Jeremiah said. Egypt was a long country, strung along the Nile and had a hard enough time unifying itself, and the people who migrated thither from colder climates did not prove a wholly stable part of the population.

And yet I should like to take this opportunity of speaking a good word for those of the Jews who remained faithful. There must have been a good many of them. To them and their successors we owe two very important facts in the life of the Christian church. The first is the Septuagint version of the Bible. The conquest of Alexander the Great included Egypt and brought with it the Greek language and the essential elements of Greek culture. The Jews who were living in Egypt forgot their Aramaic Hebrew and if they read at all they had to read in Greek. For their sake the first translation of the Bible was made from Hebrew into Greek and it is one of the noblest monuments of the Jewish religion. That was the version which Jesus and his disciples used and its influence not only on the Jewish church but on early Christianity is larger than I will now stop to tell.

SOME BENEFITS.

The other thing is the schools of learning which the Jews began to establish in Egypt. Through these they came into such contact with the philosophy of their time that the method of their approach to religious truth was considerably developed. The opening verses in the fourth gospel show something of the influence of the Alexandrian school of thought and a large number of the early church fathers of influence did their work in the schools of Egypt. It is not at all certain that Augustine would ever have written his immortal confession of his treatise on the city of God if there had been no Jews in Egypt in the time of Jeremiah.

Not only so, but the flight of Joseph and Mary into Egypt at the time of the birth of Jesus was doubtless an easier achievement because large numbers of Jews were already there, some of them representing continuous lines of descent from the time of the exile.

So we must not fail to note that while Jeremiah was right on the general proposition it would be a great mistake to assume that everybody who went down to Egypt left his religion behind him.

APPROACHING THE END.

Of some of them just that thing has been told by Jeremiah himself. Do you remember the time when the men decided that religion did not pay and the women went over to Christian Science, a new religion which they thought just too cute for anything? I shall have to tell you about it in the next chapter of this truthful narrative, and that will end the story.

But sometimes when I think of Jeremiah, I feel sorry that so great and good and able and scholarly a minister as he should have been turned out into a home missionary field in his old age; and I should be more sorry if such a thing could happen in these more enlightened days.

The Missouri Idea

How the "Show Me" State is Settling Down to Business in Church Administration.

BY ALVA W. TAYLOR.

THE "Missouri Idea" stands for church conservation, efficiency, closer coöperation and a new era in home missions. The Missouri churches recently held at Moberly the greatest state convention of recent years and many were willing to call it the greatest in the history of the state. So experienced a convention attendant as the beloved A. McLean volunteered the testimony that he had never attended its superior and that he thought more practical things were done at Moberly than at any convention in the history of his experience.

Rev. G. A. Campbell of Hannibal, Mo., elected president of Missouri Convention.

Every theme was a practical theme. It was not a convention revival meeting, nor a mere round-up of the saints, but a business meeting of the churches. The attendance was good though it has been better. The gratifying thing was that no one seemed inclined to judge the worth of the convention by the numbers present. There were some good speeches but no one talked much about oratory or sermons or eloquence. The customary comparisons between the merits of the respective logicians and rhetoricians and defenders of the faith were not heard about the convention lobbies.

SOLID SUNDAY-SCHOOL SESSION.

The Sunday-school session was not a boom nor a rally nor was a word said throughout it about booms or rallies; it was devoted solidly to efficiency and to reports from the men who are overseeing Sunday-school progress in the state. The C. W. B. M. session was the same business-like meeting we have grown accustomed to, with just enough exhortation to add sauce to the solid meat of reports, the discussion of methods and the business of the day.

Social service and the rural church were given a full session of their own. That was something new under the sun but a commission of six had put in a solid year of conscientious work in studying the situation and presented their findings with no overplus of rhetoric and without any sobs or tearful warnings. It is needless to say their reports were received as light upon a new day in religious work by all save just enough of a minority to keep the fires burning.

Instead of the usual series of short speeches for each college with a "rah" and a "boom" for your favorite, there was a studied report upon educational conditions as represented in the schools. Some serious things were proposed and some put into working order, while others were left to run the gauntlet of more serious consideration at the hands of the state board. The sessions will be strictly limited to two and one-half hours next year.

A definite program of legislation was proposed for the Christian citizenship of the state. The convention got squarely behind temperance legislation without a quibble being raised as to their right, ecclesiastical, representative, delegated or otherwise. Christian union was talked squarely both from our own and the viewpoint of others, and we all listened to the other fellow without hint of "making him take it back" or even raising the issue with him—we listened as we would like to be listened unto.

SUBTRACTING SIX HUNDRED CHURCHES.

One of the most interesting things was to see the calm with which the Missouri saints saw some six or seven hundred churches subtracted from their statistical report. There was no declaiming over numbers nor desire to save reputation by refusing to admit the facts. Little was said, in the whole convention, about planting new churches; the fact was clearly recognized that Missouri has too many churches already and that it is more to the honor of the Master to work for unity and coöperation among the religious interests than to go on duplicating an already overdone churching. The missionary interest was one of conservation and nurture. There was little talk about "the sects" and much about "the kingdom."

The "Missouri Idea" is responsible for this transition from a convention rally to a business convention. In the former days a good man was given the task of working with and for the supposed 1,600 churches in the state. He did the best he could, but he never could know that there were not more than 1,000 churches instead of 1,600. His business was to plant churches and to nurture as many as his time permitted. He was expected to get as many offerings as possible for state missions in the hope that somehow or other the wider missionary interests would be thought of and that the churches would remain loyal to Missouri enterprises anyhow.

FIVE SUPERINTENDENTS IN SERVICE.

Today we have five superintendents, each with a definitely limited territory, each with a definite program that includes all missionary and church interests, and each with more to do than to plant churches and straighten out difficulties. These men have found several hundred "dead" congregations and they know where every living congregation is, wheather it has a preacher or not, how many members are on its roll, what its financial record is and whether or not it has a Sunday-school and is missionary in spirit and in deed. They have attended all the county conventions, organized efficiency campaigns, given impetus to the "every-member canvass," connected up preachers and churches, held Sunday-school institutes, and promoted in every church every interest of the brotherhood. These district leaders are not "evangelists;" they are "superintendents," and Missouri Disciples do not fear them nor grow pale over any specters of ecclesiasticism nor have any cold chills at the suggestion that they may fail to call scriptural things by scriptural names. They are good men who carry their Bibles with them and obey all the commandments and fulfill the apostolic function of caring for the churches without exercising any authority over them more than unremitting toil on their behalf wins for their labor of love.

UNITY AMONG OUR OWN CHURCHES.

In many of the counties a closer supervision is being established through county conventions and even county superintendents who visit every church in the county and promote every enterprise of the kingdom, including coöperation between the local congregations, teaching them that they are not many, but one body, and that congregational coöperation well befits brotherly love.

EXCUSABLE PRIDE.

ONE'S clannish pride could not quite be suppressed at a teacher-training conference held last week in connection with the International Sunday-school Convention in Chicago. Fundamental questions were being discussed. They were raised by a committee report prepared and read by Prof. Walter S. Athearn, of Drake University, which advocated a revision of the teacher-training standards and the projection of teacher-training upon much more pedagogical and ideal levels.

Professor Athearn's proposals were criticized on the ground that they were "too stiff," that they assumed more intelligence on the part of the students than the students actually possessed—a criticism that finally found its epitome in the maxim about keeping the cookies on the lower shelf.

In the discussion it was noticeable that every Disciple speaker stood for the higher ideals of teacher-training, and against the incompetent and defective present system. Secretary Robert M. Hopkins, Dr. R. P. Shepherd, Mr. Garry L. Cook and Mr. E. W. Thornton spoke, and all spoke on the side of progress, on the side of higher standards, on the side of real training as against mere playing at training teachers.

It was heartening to hear these men answer the whining complaints of a certain type of field worker and publishing agent. The teacher-training movement is the most significant thing in the modern Church. It will be rescued from what Dr. H. M. Hamill called "fakirism" and commercialism and child's play, and it feels mighty good to know that Disciple Sunday-school men are in the front of the rescuing party.

THE MYSTERY OF LIFE.

DR. WILLIAM HAYES WARD is publishing in The Independent a series of strong articles entitled "What I Believe, and Why." They show not only that fine sense of journalistic penetration which is characteristic of Doctor Ward, but a surprising familiarity—even to those who know of his erudition—with scientific and philosophical hypotheses. In the eighth of these papers Doctor Ward treats of "The Mystery of Life." He says:

"If the powers of life are so utterly different from and superior to those of inorganic matter, one is forced to ask how dead matter came to get life. Physical forces can give us a diamond, a mud-bank or a star; vital forces can give us a lichen, an oak, a star-fish and a man. Physical forces began to act we do not know how many myriads of eons ago; whether with the origin of the nebulous swarm out of which our solar system started, or how much farther back in the first of the possible succession of repeated cosmic evolutions under which worlds exist. We only know that as long as there has been matter in any form its material laws have been in force. But vital force had a beginning in a vastly later time, after the deposition of the Archean rocks and the quieting down of the boiling oceans. How happened it that this new sort of force was added to the old?

"We cannot see that there was any tendency in the chemical forces themselves to develop into vital forces. Thus far chemists have been utterly unable to persuade chemism to blossom into life. Every possible way that ingenuity could devise has been tried in vain. I cannot deny that it may be achieved, but thus far the strong evidence is against it."

After speaking of the marvel of organic life he proceeds:

"Ordinary chemical and mechanical processes cannot explain all this. They can do their part as long as life is present to direct them, but when life ends, although the plant or animal remains the same, the ordinary chemical and mechanical reactions assert themselves, and what was evolved under life is dissolved and decays. All the time there is an end in view, a new organism to be created, just as truly anticipated and worked for as when a man makes a mallet or builds a house. Nothing less does the egg do when it makes a chicken, or the blood when it repairs a broken bone. I say as Prof. Anton Kerner has said before, that this is no operation of ordinary chemistry, that it works only so long as the molecules of protoplasm are swayed by what we call the vital principle, but as soon as that is lost the same protoplasm can do nothing but fall under the forces of common chemical action. There are, so far as I see, only two possible theories for the origination and development of vegetable and animal life on the earth, one by the undirected, accidental attractions and repulsions somehow possessed by the ultimate electrons of matter, and the other by the purposed guidance and direction of a superior, self-existent Intelligence. To my mind the latter seems the more reasonable and likely."

STARVE THE FLIES.

NOW is the time to prevent swarms of flies in midsummer. It is well to swat them, but better to screen them, and still better to starve them. These are the three remedies, swat, screen, starve. Dr. Leonard K. Hirshberg in a popular article, says:

"Epidemics of typhoid, dysentery and those other pests in military encampments have been so conclusively shown to be due to flies that the Japanese sanitarians in the Russian-Japanese war were able to maintain their immense field forces free of these troubles by directing efforts specifically against the fly. A courier of the plague, indeed. Yet many people say, 'Merely a harmless insect.'

"Every fly is the harbinger of disease and possible death. Flies will crowd each other for food and for breeding places. The garbage cans, open gutters, decaying fruits and vegetables, exposed market edibles, the mosses, ferns and decaying leaves upon the caves of your roofs, all of these, as well as green groceries, butcher shops, thatched shingles and all exposed liquids and foods, will be quickly seized upon by the plague of flies that will have already been born before April has waned.

"There is but one chance of obviating the danger and preventing the appearance of these multitudes of microbe-bearing demons. The sole means left to avoid this prospective danger is to start now at once to combat the threatened avalanche. Let every boy and girl, man and woman, resolve instanter to destroy once for all each and every fly that is now encountered. Annihilate them the moment they are seen. Do it now. Begin at once."

THE "DAY OF REST" AND HUMAN EFFICIENCY.

THE refreshing influence of the weekly "day of rest" on a person subjected to the strenuous routine of a busy life is a feature which he himself can duly appreciate in the effects on his "feelings" and "spirits." The efficiency of the working man, the length of the working-day, the interjection of pauses for rest in the schedule of labor for persons of different ages and stations in life—questions of this sort are constantly arising for solution on a scientific basis. Not only in the field of manual labor, but also in the case of the school child, the office boy, the factory girl, the banker and the merchant, efficiency is the keynote of the times. Fatigue is the enemy of efficiency; and to detect and compensate for or overcome it, is the duty of those concerned with the promotion of human welfare.

In view of this says the Journal of the American Medical Association it is of more than passing interest, to know that Doctor Martin and some of his associates in the Laboratory of Physiology at the Harvard Medical School, have been making a careful study of the whole question of fatigue and efficiency from a physiological standpoint. A long series of experiments have been made on first-year medical students who were following a regular routine of school work during six days of each week. The routine was interrupted weekly by the Sunday recess, an interval occupied variously by the students, but in no case in precisely the manner of the week days. The daily observations made on these persons during several weeks show that at the beginning of the week the nerve reaction tends to be high, that from then until the end of the week there is a fairly continuous decline, and that following the interruption of the routine by the intervention of Sunday, it returns to the original high point.

The decline is interpreted as a cumulative result of general fatigue incident to routine. What is even more significant however, is the added fact that a pronounced break in the routine —such as the "day of rest" occasions—may bring about a return of sensitiveness to a high point or, in other words, it restores the nervous tone. Studies continued in this direction should lead to some useful conclusions regarding the maximum of work, with respect to both its duration and type, that should determine the conditions under which the organism of man may be maintained without depletion.

BETTER THAN FLOWERS AT THE FUNERAL.

PROFESSIONAL leaders not infrequently are accorded credit for the achievements of church or school or reform movement, when the greater credit is really due to some patient, generous, loyal layman of the ranks. Drake University's board of trustees, rejoicing in the achievements of the past year, at the recent commencement season passed a resolution appreciatively setting forth the indebtedness of the university to Mr. J. B. Burton, a business man of Kellogg, Iowa, who for many years has given a quality of support to the school which has been the admiration and inspiration of alumni and Disciple churchmen of Iowa. Not by any means disregarding their great debt to President Bell, the trustees insisted upon recognizing the services of Mr. Burton which they did in words as manifestly sincere as they are delicately chosen. This is what the Board said:

> Whereas, there is a type of service that merits large praise and yet always disclaims credit, and,
> Whereas, among us a godly man of marked business ability and of competent personal credit in the eyes of all the community, has labored through the years, and
> Whereas, without reflection upon the services and sacrifices of others, we feel that this man in his quiet, efficient way has been peculiarly our rock of defense, and
> Whereas, we realize that few of even Drake's most loyal friends would have so consecrated their means to meet emergencies, so freely assumed personal obligations to maintain the institution's unblemished credit and so constantly labored in season and out of season to advance the cause of Christian education, and,
> Whereas, as a Board, we believe that love for the living is more precious than flowers for the dead and deserved praise for men in the ranks better than eulogies for the fallen, therefore be it
> Resolved, that the heartfelt thanks of this Board, with our every wish for heaven's sweetest good will, be extended to the unassuming, bravely patient, tirelessly faithful treasurer of Drake University—Mr. John B. Burton.

For years this good man has given himself, his money, his financial credit to Drake University. Through many dark days and long periods of gloom his support has not faltered. In the hour of the university's triumph these words must taste sweet to his heart.

What layman in the ranks working patiently, and too often unregarded, at the seemingly slow-moving enterprises of Church and Kingdom will not be heartened by this appreciative resolution given to Mr. Burton?

MR. LORIMER'S RELIGION.

SINCE the failure of Mr. Lorimer's bank, the following recent statement of his religion will be of interest: "For more than fifteen years I have read every book on the subject of controversial theology that I could get. I felt, at last, that the only thing for me to do was to become a Catholic because of my honest convictions. I have traveled over the same route that many others have gone. I did not want to join the Catholic Church, but I felt compelled to investigate, and the deeper my research the more settled my convictions became. So I am a Catholic in spite of myself.

"I became convinced that when one starts out to find truth in religion one will come at last to the Catholic Church, no matter how strong one's prejudices may be.

"Year after year I read all the books I could get. I studied the life of Cardinal Newman. I devoured his 'Apologia,' and I found out how he struggled for two years after he left the Church of England before he finally did the thing he hoped not to do and became a Catholic. I read of the conversion of Cardinal Manning and many others. And then, of course, I had the example always before my eyes of my wife and children, who were Catholics and attended strictly to their religious duties.

"Recently I have seen upon the billboards pictures calling upon men and women to take their children to church. Catholics need no such appeal. They always go to church as a part of their religious duty in which they cannot fail. I found my admiration growing and my conviction strengthening until at last I, too, had to do the thing for conscience sake that I had struggled against doing, to do the thing I have just done.

"I do not know that I am any better now than I have been. I just feel that I am touching back to apostolic times as a member of the same church that Christ founded and to which he would send his Spirit so as to guide it into all truth."

We hope Mr. Lorimer's religion will be a comfort to him and to his depositors.

THE SACRAMENT OF TIME.

AT FIRST glance it seems meaningless to employ these words in such a league. A sacrament is something very holy. It is the "outward sign of an invisible grace," and has to do with the adorations and reverences of life. But the more deeply we think of it the more accurate the union of the terms appears to be. What can be more sacred than the gift of time? It is God's great talent entrusted to us all, and each must use it as a divine responsibility.

It is just because time is so common that we forget how sacred it is. Only when we come to the supreme moments and the pressing emergencies of life do we realize how precious an hour is. Only when we reckon up what is sometimes gained and lost in a moment are we conscious of the fact that time is truly sacramental.

We often say that time is money; but this touches only the margin of the matter. It is something more than money. It is divine opportunity; it is sacred privilege; it is sacramental test and grace. When we stand in the presence of our time in this mood we are lifted to a new level of joy and we are renewed by the sense of our dignity in being made laborers with God.

THE TRUE NEED.

"We know the path wherein our feet should press;
  Across our hearts are written the decrees;
Yet now, O Lord, be merciful to bless,
  With more than these.

Grant us the will to fashion as we feel.
  Grant us the strength to labor as we know;
Grant us the purpose ribbed with steel
  To strike the blow.

Knowledge we ask not—knowledge thou hast sent;
  But, Lord, the will—there lies our bitter need;
Give us to build above the deep intent,
  The deed, the deed."

—The Spectator.

Of Human Interest

Dr. van Dyke on Grenfell's Work.

"I regard the work that Dr. Grenfell is doing in Labrador as one of the most simple, direct and vital applications of the gospel of Christ to human needs that modern times have seen. He has gone out into that wild country as a man seeking for hidden treasure; not the treasure of gold mines and diamond fields, but treasure of an opportunity to serve humanity and to make known the fulness of the salvation which Christ brings to man's body, mind and heart. He has discovered among the people who live on those desolate shores of the northern sea and among the fishermen who ply their perilous work up there a wonderful chance to do good. They had been living for many years, not only without churches or preachers, but also without a physician to care for them when they were sick or wounded, and without a firm friend and counsellor to save them from the consequences of their own ignorance and from the rapacity of evil men who ministered to their vices, preyed upon their simplicity, and kept them (through a false system of trade) in a state of debt which amounted almost to slavery. For fourteen years Dr. Grenfell has thrown himself into the work of helping these people in Christ's name and in Christ's way. He has healed the sick, clothed the naked, delivered the captive, and taught the people of his thousand-mile parish to understand the love of God through the love of man. He has built four hospitals, and established five coöperative stores where the fishermen get fair prices for their fish, and buy their supplies at reasonable rates; given surgical and medical care and preached the good news of Christianity."

Villa's Genius for War.

In the field, Villa has had to invent an entirely original method of warfare, because he never had a chance to learn anything of accepted military strategy, and in that he is without the possibility of any doubt the greatest leader Mexico has ever had. His method of fighting is astonishingly like Napoleon's, says a writer in the Metropolitan Magazine. Secrecy, quickness of movement, the adaptation of his plans to the character of the country and of his soldiers—the value of intimate relations with the rank and file, and of building up a tradition among the enemy that his army is invincible and that he himself bears a charmed life— these are his characteristics. He knew nothing of accepted European standards of strategy or of discipline. One of the troubles of the Mexican Federal army is that its officers are thoroughly saturated with conventional military theories. The Mexican soldier is still mentally at the end of the eighteenth century. He is above all a loose, individual guerrilla fighter. Red tape simply paralyzes the machine. When Villa's army goes into battle it is not hampered by salutes, or rigid respect for officers, or trigonometrical calculations of the trajectories of projectiles, or theories of the percentage of hits in a thousand rounds of rifle fire, or the function of cavalry, infantry and artillery in any particular position, or rigid obedience to the secret knowledge of its superiors. It reminds one of the ragged Republican army that Napoleon led into Italy. It is probable that Villa doesn't know much about these things himself. But he does know that guerrilla fighters cannot be driven blindly in platoons around the field in perfect step, that men fighting individually and of their own free will are braver than long volleying rows in the trenches, lashed to it by officers with the flat of their swords. And where the fighting is fiercest—when a ragged mob of fierce brown men with hand bombs and rifles rush the bulletswept streets of an ambushed town—Villa is among them, like any common soldier.

A Story of Lincoln.

The last time I saw President and Mrs. Lincoln was in my father's house, writes a contributor in The Continent. They had been invited to meet my mother's cousin, a political friend from St. Louis. In those days the dinner hour was from 12:30 to 1 o'clock and friends were invited most often to supper, which was a very substantial meal. This time we waited and waited for the guests of honor, but they came not. The old negro cook, a family servant who reigned supreme in the kitchen, vowed she wouldn't "wait no longer fur nobody and spile every livin' thing fur supper;" that the beat biscuits "wus already hard as rocks and de fried chicken dry as a bone." President or no President, she was bound she was "gwine to sarve dat supper."

I think my mother feared she would fulfill her threat, but at last the doorbell rang and the delayed guests arrived. Mrs. Lincoln had so evidently been crying that she felt she must explain the cause, and told my mother she had picked up an eastern paper that had been sent her and read a story, marked lest she should miss seeing it, to the effect that she was a most disagreeable tempered woman and wife; that she neglected her children to such an extent that Mr. Lincoln was forced to turn nurse. All of which so wrought upon the lady's nerves that she could not keep back the tears. The floodgates once opened, they could not be shut again. She felt she was too much disfigured by weeping to come, but Mr. Lincoln had assured her she did not look bad, so here she was.

Wu Ting-Fang Advocates Temperance.

Writing in Harper's Magazine, Wu Ting-Fang, late Chinese minister to this country, makes a strong plea for dinners without intoxicating drinks:

"I do not suppose that many will agree with me, but in my opinion it would be more agreeable, and would improve the general conversation, if all drinks of an intoxicating nature were abolished from the dining-table. It is gratifying to know that there are some families (may the number increase every day) where intoxicating liquors are never seen on their tables.

"So long as the liquor traffic is extensively and profitably caried on in Europe and America, and so long as the consumption of alcohol is so enormous, so long will there be a difference of opinion as to its ill effects; but in this matter America, by means of its state prohibition laws, is setting an example to the world. In no other country are there such extensive tracts without alcohol as the 'dry states' of America.

"China, who is waging war on opium, recognizes in this fact a kindred, active moral force, which is absent elsewhere, and, shaking hands with her sister republic across the seas, hopes that the latter will some day be as free of alcoholic poisons as China hopes to be of opium.

"The facts and arguments adduced against tobacco-smoking, strong drink, and poisonous foods are set forth in such a clear and convincing manner in a book written by a talented American lady that soon after reading it I became a teetotaler and 'sanitarian' and began at once to reap the benefits. I felt that I ought not to keep such a good thing to myself, but that I should preach the doctrine far and wide. I soon found, however, that it was an impossible task to try and save men from themselves, and I acquired the unenviable sobriquet of 'crank;' but I was not dismayed.

"From my native friends I turned to the foreign community in Peking, thinking that the latter would possess better judgment, appreciate and be converted to the sanitarian doctrine. Among the foreigners I appealed to, one was a distinguished diplomat, and the other a gentleman in the Chinese service with a world-wide reputation. Both were elderly and in delicate health, and it was my earnest hope that by reading this book, which was sent to them, they would be convinced of their errors and turn over a new leaf. I was disappointed. Both, in returning the book, made substantially the same answer: 'It is very interesting, but at my time of life it is not advisable to change life-long habits. I eat flesh moderately and never drink much wine.'"

Astronomy Not So Much.

Sir Robert Ball, the famous English astronomer, whose death occurred a few months ago, used to tell a little story of an experience that he had when he was at the Dunsink Observatory, states the Youth's Companion. A farmer came to him one day and asked if he might look at the moon through the telescope.

"Surely you can," said Ball. "Come around tonight, and I shall be very happy to let you see it through the telescope."

"Can't I see it now?" asked the farmer, surprised.

"I am sorry that you cannot," said the astronomer. "You will have to wait until night."

"Huh! Then your old telescope is not so great a thing as I thought it was!" cried the man, relieved from his illusion. "I can see the moon at night without it."

Tact and Contact.

In emphasizing the need for the personal touch in religious work among immigrants, the Rev. F. W. C. Meyer, First German Baptist church, speaking before the Milwaukee Ministerial Association, told the following story:

"Two young men had been suitors for the hand of a certain young woman; she refused one and accepted the other, and in due time the two young men met again.

" 'Tell me,' said the unlucky dog, 'how you managed to win her. I sent her candy, I sent her flowers, I sent her books—in fact, I used all the tact a man could possibly use.'

" 'You did,' conceded the lucky dog. 'But you used tact, while I used contact.' "

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

The General Federation of Women's Clubs Endorses Woman Suffrage

TWENTY-TWO years ago, the first Biennial Convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs was held in Chicago, when 297 delegates were present, from 185 clubs, in 29 states.

The great convention just closed in the same city, marks the wonderful progress of the woman's club movement; in this second Chicago Bienniel there were over 3,600 delegates present, representing more than a million women from clubs and state federations from every state in the union.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs is now conceded to be the largest and most influential woman's organization in the country, and the increase in activities has been even more notable than the growth in numbers and influence. When it was organized a quarter of a century ago, the dominant note was culture; and for probably a decade after, history, science, poetry, drama, art, and music were the great themes studied in the meetings. But gradually, the relation of these subjects to the life about them became the point of interest, and the clubs grew to be factors in the promotion of kindergartens, domestic science in the public schools, vocational training, public and traveling libraries, forestry, preservation of birds, conservation of natural resources, pure foods, civil service reform, immigration, prohibition of child labor, protective legislation for women, suppression of commercialized vice, and many other forms of social service. But during all these twenty-five years, with a certain indomitable conservatism, the Federation has fought shy of woman suffrage!

At the San Francisco Biennial, two years ago, a determined effort was made to have the Federation adopt a resolution in favor of votes for women; but the Board of Directors, though avowedly in sympathy with woman suffrage, were afraid it might produce a rupture in the organization—so the movement was defeated, in spite of the wishes of their hostesses, the enfranchised women of California.

When it was decided to hold the next Biennial in Chicago, the leaders doubtless thought that no such pressure would be brought to bear on them as in the "free" western states. But what did the women of Illinois do in the two intervening years, but secure from their legislature full presidential and municipal suffrage—with more to follow! And so, to those on the inside of things, it was known before the hosts gathered in Chicago, that a strong effort would be made to introduce a suffrage plank in the Women's Club platform, with every prospect of success.

On the opening night, in the welcoming and introductory speeches of Mrs. George Bass, president of the Illinois Federation, and of the beloved Miss Jane Addams, suffrage was brought squarely and bluntly before the convention. Mrs. Bass said:

"Here in our beloved Illinois, after first having justified and earned our citizenship, our legislature freely and gladly gave us its crowning privilege, and we entered into co-equal partnership with our men in all the business of life and government."

Miss Addams' address on "Women's Clubs and Public Policies," marked the climax of the evening, when she said:

"Without the franchise, woman is shut suddenly out of the game—the game played all over the world by statesmen who at this moment are attempting to translate the new social sympathy into political action."

The overwhelming applause that greeted her statement was conclusive proof as to how the vast majority of the delegates stood on the question.

The speech of Mrs. Carrie Chapman-Catt, president of the International Suffrage Alliance, on "Woman Suffrage, a World-wide Movement," was a splendid contribution to the cause. The suffrage resolution was not introduced until the fourth day of the convention, and by that time those in charge had so felt the pulse of the delegates, that there was no doubt of the result. When the resolution was finally presented, it was brief and to the point, with only fifty-five words in it—but they were enough! Here it is:

Whereas, The question of political equality of men and women is today a vital problem under discussion throughout the civilized world. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the General Federation of Women's Clubs give the cause of political equality its moral support by recording its earnest belief in the principle of political equality regardless of sex.

When "the little president from the southland," as Mrs. Bass called Mrs. Pennybacker, put the question to the convention, there was an enthusiastic chorus of "ayes," with only a few faint and scattered "noes"—and the deed was done.

And, as though this were not victory enough, on the same day the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois rendered its decision, upholding the constitutionality of the law, passed by the Illinois Legislature last year, giving to the women of the state the power to vote for all officers, except those named in the constitution.

And last month, at its Triennial Convention in Rome, Italy, the great International Council of Women, representing twenty-eight nations, and more than seven millions of women resolved by unanimous vote, that in every representative government, women should be granted full parliamentary and local suffrage, with eligibility to hold office. These three endorsements of woman suffrage, coming within less than one month, show conclusively how fast the sentiment, not only of this country but of the world at large, is moving toward granting to women equal political rights with men. They should inspire the suffragists of the United States to greater activity and a more determined purpose than ever to win the five campaign states at the November election.

I. W. H.

WOULD SPEND THEIR OWN FUND.

At the Southern Presbyterian Convention held recently in Kansas City, the women made a hard fight to secure the right to distribute the missionary funds which they had themselves raised.

In their report, the Committee on Systematic Benevolence, commonly known as the "House of Bishops," declared that the "unity of the whole" must be preserved. From the floor one member said that the women had already done their part by raising their quota of the money, and that it would be better in every way for the central body to handle all the funds, distributing the women's money with the men's. This arrangement would promote unity and efficiency, and the women would be relieved of much unnecessary labor.

The women made a spirited protest. They acknowledged the authority of the central committee, and declared their loyalty to it. But they said that the labor involved in the distribution of their own money was neither unnecessary nor irksome. They were, in fact, willing and eager to undertake it. The women who had contributed the money would be more enthusiastic about raising the next apportionment if they were allowed to distribute the present one. Furthermore, granting the women this right would appeal to their sense of justice and of loyalty, and they would meet the appeal by efficiency and coöperation.

One prominent leader said, in closing her appeal: "It is impossible to finance a church nowadays without placing the heavy end of the burden on women. We are not complaining of this, but we know that we can carry that burden more effectively if we decide many of the details of our work. Two years ago, after a long discussion you granted us the privilege of raising our own funds through a separate organization. You admit that the success of our efforts is unquestioned. We beg of you not to tie our hands by taking away the right of appropriating our own funds."

HIS PREDICAMENT.

Vice-president Marshall's remark, "My wife is against suffrage, and that settles me," has inspired a good deal of poetry. Feargus O'Brien writes:

My wife dislikes the income tax,
  And so I cannot pay it:
She says that golf all interest lacks,
  So now I never play it:
She is opposed to tolls repeal
  (Though why, I cannot say),
But woman's duty is to feel,
  And man's is to obey.
  And Peter Parkins says:
I'm in a hard position for a perfect gentleman,
I want to please the ladies, but I don't see how I can.
My present wife's a suffragist, and counts on my support,
But my mother is an anti of a rather biting sort;
One grandmother is on the fence, the other much opposed,
And my sister lives in Oregon, and thinks the question's closed;
Each one is counting on my vote to represent her view,
Now what should you think proper for a gentleman to do?

Sunday-school Forces at Chicago.

Any person who thinks of the Sunday-school in red penny terms would have his eyes opened were he to attend such a convention as that which is in session at this writing at Medinah Temple in this city. It is the Fourteenth International Sunday-school meeting, and began its sessions June 23. These International conventions are held every three years, although at this meeting steps have been taken toward dating them every four years. That Chicago is taking good care of the guests is indicated by the remarks of the delegates and others in attendance. The only complaint that has been heard has been relative to the restrictions upon attendance at the Temple. Looking forward to a great crowd of delegates, admittance was provided only for the regular delegates: other visitors, with Chicago Sunday-school people, have had to content themselves, largely, with smaller meetings at the churches. However, early in the convention it was decided to throw open the Temple meetings to the public, and E. K. Warren, manufacturer and Sunday-school promoter of Three Oaks, Mich., urged that messengers be sent out to "compel them to come in."

Chicago A Sunday-school Center.

That the choice of Chicago, as the convention point, was a logical one, is indicated by the following facts relative to Chicago's place in Sunday-school history: (1) Here was inaugurated the first campaign to organize every county in a state. For over forty years every county in Illinois has been organized. (2) The first organized Teacher Training work undertaken in any state was inaugurated here. (3) Here was held the first Sunday-school Institute, called "The Northwestern Sunday-school Teachers' Institute." "The Training Class of the Chicago Sunday-school Union" was organized in 1867. These were the forerunners of Sunday-school institute work in North America. (4) The first system of Uniform Lessons issued in North America. entitled "Two Years with Jesus," was issued by the Chicago Sunday-school Union. Out of this grew the Uniform Lesson System which has been in use over forty years. (5) Here the first Sunday-school Journal was established, entitled "The Sunday-school Teacher," and published by the Chicago Sunday-school Union in 1866. (6) It was in a Chicago religious weekly, "The Standard," that the first notes on the Sunday-school Lesson were regularly published. (7) It was a Chicago religious paper, "The Advance," that first published a full account of a state Sunday-school convention. Twenty-five thousand copies of this issue were distributed. (8) The first general secretary to devote his full time to the Sunday-school work was W. B. Jacobs of Chicago. (9) The World's Sunday-school Association was first conceived by B. F. Jacobs, and the first convention was called from his office. (10) The first festival of religious and patriotic songs ever held in North America was inaugurated here, and the concert is still given annually, with the largest chorus of ladies' voices in the world. By request, their concert for this year has been changed from May to June, and will be given next Friday night in the Auditorium. (11) Here the Adult Bible Class Movement was first adopted as a department of organized Sunday-school work. (12) The first Bible Class Athletic Association in connection with the organized work had its birth in this city. (13) The Bible Class emblem, the red button with a white center, was devised by a Chicago man.

"Jesus Shall Reign."

As the theme of the World's Convention held at Zurich, in 1913, was "A World-wide Program," the theme of the current meeting is "Jesus Shall Reign." The title of the sermon preached by Bishop C. P. Anderson of the Episcopal Church at the opening service was this convention theme, which shone above the platform in electric letters. "I have only one fault to find with your motto," Bishop Anderson said. "Jesus 'does' reign, not 'shall' reign. A belief in a living and not a dead Christ is the distinguishing belief of the Christian Church." Bishop Anderson was severe in his denunciation of those who would substitute other organizations for the church. "I believe in ethical culture," he said. "Yes, and I believe in horticulture, and I believe that one is as effective as the other in saving the world. The worth of individuals is not to be judged by the number of theater parties or dinners they can give, but by their spirit of service and of sacrifice. I believe in a religion that causes a streak of light" —here he looked towards the illuminated motto—"across the sky of this world. We have too much preaching and too little teaching; too much exhortation, too little definite instruction; too much mere culture, and too little conversion. Everybody knows that some of the best educated men in the United States are the biggest scoundrels. Our education is losing its religious significance and pure religion is losing its educational ideal. The primary place of teaching religion is in the home. Some say let the public schools teach the child purity. I wonder if it is not time to get back and teach religion in the home. Democracy is coming. It has come to the United States and it is coming to Russia, China, and Japan. Secularity is going."

Fred Smith Throws Bomb.

The reports of the superintendents and secretaries were full of enthusiasm and records of real progress. More detailed account of these will be given next week. It was wholesome for the convention after these reports to hear Fred Smith, famous both as Y. M. C. A. secretary and as a prime factor in the recent Men and Millions Movement. This virile speaker stood before the convention with a prophet's message and told the secretaries that they had reported the several million of men that had been gained for the Sunday-school, but had said nothing about the fourteen millions of men that they had not reached. He said that he had been close, for many years, to men, especially labor union members and business men, and had found it to be a fact that these classes are for the most part sadly estranged from the Sunday-school. "You have been handing out little ditties to full grown men, but they have not been willing to sing them." "The Sunday-school," he declared, "is essentially a man's movement. Its great leaders are men. But the reason why men are not appealed to more by the Sunday-school is because it is too often represented by an 'ossified sissy of a man.' If I were a pastor of a church and had one of these ossified sissies, eternally effervescing," he continued, "I would have him expelled from the church on the ground that the Bible deals with male and female. If the Sunday-school is going to reach those 14,000,000 men, it must have a masculine program. We are in the midst of a great crisis. To the Sunday-school it is a crisis of danger and of hope. The whole commercial and civic world is shot through and through with the principles of Jesus. The head of a great firm sends out 700 traveling men with the admonition, 'Remember that business today has to be conducted according to the principles of Jesus, or you are going to get into trouble.' Again, if the Sunday-school is going to win it must go after the major sins, rather than the minor ones. Dancing, card playing and theater-going are not the major sins."

The New Lesson Committee.

It was felt by the Sunday-school leaders that the big feature of this convention would be the change in the make-up of the Lesson Committee. For several years there has been growing a "denominational consciousness," and with its development a demand on the part of the various churches that the churches, as churches, should be represented on the Lesson Committee. Up to the present time the committee has been the creature of the International Sunday-school Association. With this new idea in mind a Sunday-school Council of Evangelical Denominations was formed to extend this propaganda. To this change the International Association has been entirely agreeable. Last April, at Philadelphia, a conference of the Association and the Council of Denominations was held, in which a basis of agreement was determined, looking toward representation of the various churches and of the Sunday-school Council, as well as the association, in the formation of the Lesson Committee.

The New Scheme Adopted.

This agreement was adopted by the Sunday-school Council, and was adopted by the Executive Committee of the International Association, with the understanding that their action was not final until ratified by this convention. The convention last week adopted the agreement in full. The following are the principal provisions of the agreement: 1st—Unity of Lesson Courses with denominational freedom for any desired modification. 2nd—The joint selection of all courses on the part of the International Sunday-school Association, the Sunday-school Council of Evangelical Denominations and Denominational Agencies. 3rd—All Lesson Courses available for all publishing houses."

Concerning organization and work of the Lesson Committee: 1st—That the International Sunday-school Lesson Committee be created as follows:

(a) Eight members to be selected by the International Sunday-school Association.

(b) Eight members to be selected by the Sunday-school Council of Evangelical Denominations.

(c) One member to be selected by each denomination represented in the Sunday-school Council now having, or that in the future may have, a Lesson Committee.

2nd—It shall be the duty of the Lesson Committee thus elected to construct lesson courses, to be submitted to the various denominations, subject to such revision and modification as each denomination may desire to make, in order to adapt the courses to its own denominational needs.

3rd—No course shall be promulgated or discontinued by the Lesson Committee unless the action is approved by a majority of the members of each of the three sections of the committee.

4th—The Lesson Committee shall be created not later than July 1, 1914, and the Lesson Courses constructed by it shall take effect at the close of the present cycle of Uniform Lessons ending December, 1917.

Thus was ended in peace a fight that has at times been somewhat bitter. The decision semed to be thoroughly satisfactory to the assembled convention.

H. M. Hamill for President.

H. M. Hamill, of Nashville, Tenn., has been elected president of the International Association for the next three years, to succeed W. N. Hartshorn, of Boston. Dr. Hamill is superintendent of teacher training in the Methodist Episcopal Church, south. He was for twelve years identified with Sunday-school work in Illinois before going to Tennessee. He is a veteran of the civil war, having served in the confederate army under Gen. Robert E. Lee. He is at present chaplain general of the Confederate veterans. [The story of the convention will be continued in this department next week.]

A New Force in Church of Scotland.

The Continent tells of a recent movement in the Church of Scotland, which appears to be a kind of protest against the shriveling influence of devotion to mere scholarship and routine adherence to form. It is described as the "new devout school." An exponent of this idea is now in this country—Rev. J. M. Shaw, "a brilliant young scholar who carried off the highest honors in philosophy in Edinburgh University." He has been lecturing in Canada and made a profound impression. "Mr. Shaw's message is a testimony to the emptiness and unsatisfaction of scholarship as a gateway into the meanings of the Bible and religion. He can speak with power on this point, because his own scholarship is so far beyond all disparagement." To him the greatest expression in the New Testament is the phrase, "In Christ." The incarnation, the atonement, and the resurrection are the great fixed points of his faith. "It is well known that a host of the young men of Scotland are in passionate sympathy with him, and the opinion is expressed by sober observers that a movement has begun among the Scotch churches as powerful in the surge of its purposes as was the Oxford movement a half century ago in the Church of England."

Noted Sunday-school Leader Dies.

Sunday-school workers throughout the world are saddened by the news that Sir Francis Flint Belsey, of London, passed out of this life on May 25, 1914. His loss will be keenly felt. Sir Francis began his service for the Sunday-school at a very early age. At sixteen he was secretary of the British and Foreign schools at Rochester, England, and for sixty years he has been an active worker in the Sunday-school. He was president of the first World's Sunday-school Convention, held in London in 1889; he was chairman of the council of the Sunday-school Union of Great Britain, representing over 700,000 Sunday-school teachers. Because of his distinguished services on behalf of the Sunday-schools of the Old World he was knighted by King Edward in 1910. His remark on the occasion of his knighting is typical of the man. "It is the Sunday-school that has been knighted," said he, "and I am proud to be its representative and to accept the honor on its behalf."

Bible Society Gives Villa Bible.

The American Bible Society has made presentation to General Villa, the hero of the Mexican revolution, of a copy of the Bible . It was done by the pastor of the Mexican Presbyterian Church in Dallas, Texas. Several passages in it were marked, including the Sermon on the Mount and the fourteenth chapter of John. The Bible bore the following inscription: "Senor Francisco Villa. This Book has made the United States and England great. And this Book will save Mexico."

Philadelphia Presbyterians in Campaign.

The Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia has launched a great city campaign for home missions, agreeing to raise the sum of $100,000 to finance the movement. That church has seventy-five congregations and nine missions, with a membership of 42,865 within the city. A committee of one hundred ministers and laymen have gone forth to raise the needed money.

A "Year Book of Social Service."

The commission on the Church and Social Service of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has issued a comprehensive "Year Book of the Church and Social Service" by Harry F. Ward, associate secretary of the Federal Council Commission. It contains a complete directory of church Social Service organizations, a historical chapter on the Social Service movement in the churches, a very full description of the various denominational and interdenominational organizations, a list of their publications, and a series of Social Service bibliographies. The various secular organizations are described as coöperating agencies and a complete list of national organizations for charity and social work is set forth with descriptions of the work done by each. The two most helpful chapters are those on "Methods and Programs" and "The Voice of the Churches." The first of these gives important instructions for every type of community service on the part of the churches, and the second the utterances of the Federal Council and the various denominational assemblies upon industrial and social conditions, social justice, civic activities, capital, labor, industrial democracy, wealth and property, and social redemption. This volume, which should be in the hands of all pastors and church workers, may be obtained at the cost of publishing which is thirty cents in paper and fifty cents in cloth, upon application to the Book Department of the Federal Council, 105 East 22nd St., New York.

Roman Catholic Missionary Figures.

The Catholic churches of America gave $440,000 to world missions last year. This is extremely meager when compared with the contributions of the Protestant churches to the same cause. However, it is a great increase over ten years ago when the Catholics of America gave only $45,000 to world missions.

THE BIBLE IN THE BUBLIC SCHOOLS.

ately re-established on their own behalf.

That even although it should be conceded that certain parts of the Bible are of a sectarian character, as tending in themselves to inculcate sectarian dogmas, yet that the Bible being in reality composed of several independent books, collected and combined to form the Sacred Cānon, and many of these books being confessedly non-sectarian, at least so far as civilized people are concerned, is not in its entirety a sectarian book and that in no view of the constitution of Illinois ought it to be held to be excluded in its entirety from the schools of that state.

That the Bible is not mentioned in the constitution, that the expression of any purpose to interfere with the then existing practice of reading it in the schools was designedly avoided, and that any interpretation of either of the questions quoted, and especially of section 3, article VIII, which imputes to them any such purpose or effect, is fundamentally unsound and can only be reached by reading into the constitution what was purposely omitted.

That it is quite impossible to reconcile the decision of the Scott County case with the principles clearly laid down in the earlier cases cited and which the court intimates no purpose to overrule, and equally imposible to reconcile it with the later opinion in the Oak Forest case.

That sixty years of contemporaneous practical interpretations of the provision of the two earlier constitutions and forty years more of practical interpretation of the provision of the present constitution, making one hundred years of unbroken acquiescence in the practice of reading the Bible in the public schools under the supervision of the local boards, ought to have been considered by the court an impregnable barrier to such a change as was wrought by its decision and that for the sake of the peace and welfare of the whole community the court ought to have replied to the complaint of these two or three trouble makers, as did the Supreme Court of the United States in a very early case, "Of course the question is at rest, and ought not now to be disturbed."

In my judgment, the people of the state at large were entitled to that disposition of this important question, and it seems to me peculiarly unfortunate that in a proceeding of this character it should now, and I think unnecessarily, be turned loose to vex and disturb the peace of all the community.

Although as a lawyer and a good citizen I must affirm the binding force of the judgment to the extent to which it operates, I must also as a lawyer and a citizen regard it as a judical amendment to the constitution.

Disciples Table Talk

Becoming a National Institution.

Bethany Assembly at Bethany Park, near Indianapolis, seems about to become an institution of national character for the Disciples of Christ. There is evident purpose on the part of the program makers as well as the managers of the institution to give this summer's sessions a breadth and richness of quality far surpassing the gatherings of previous summers. The engagement of Pres. H. C. King, of Oberlin College, and Pres. E. Y. Mullins of the Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., will assure every minister and thoughtful layman that his time and money will be profitably expended if he includes Bethany Assembly in his vacation plans. The sessions begin on July 19 and continue until August 14. The School of Methods for Sunday-school Workers, under the deanship of Garry L. Cook is an especially attractive feature. This comes in the closing days of the Assembly.

Character Builder Builds Church House.

A forty years' ministry devoted to the building of Christian character has for the first time borne fruit in the building of a house of worship. The pastor at Albion, Ill., Thomas J. Clark, is leading his people in that city in the erection of a $15,000 building which will be dedicated on July 5. George L. Snively will assist Pastor Clark at the dedicatory exercises. This pastor's career is one of the most interesting and inspiring among the Disciples of Christ. By very quiet methods Mr. Clark led the church at Vincennes, Ind., from 1872 to 1894, growing it from a congregation of fifty members to one of six hundred. In 1894 he was called to Bloomington, Ind., the seat of the State University, and served in this field for fourteen years. Since he left this work he has shepherded the flock at Albion. His spirit is that of a true shepherd. He is an apostle of Christian character, and his ministry works on the principle that leaven works.

To Oklahoma Disciples.

The following note comes, signed by Virtes Williams, Stillwater, Okla., chairman and A. G. Smith, Enid, Okla., Secretary, exchange committee of the Oklahoma State Board:

"At a recent meeting of the state board it was decided to combine the interests of our state missionary society, state Sunday-school and state Christian Endeavor society under the supervision and direction of the state secretary. All schools and Christian Endeavor societies will therefore send their offerings from this date to W. A. R. Lovell, state treasurer at Medford, Okla. The executive committee plan to enlarge the effect along both lines of work in connection with state missions. Let all schools and societies send in a liberal offering at once so that the work along these lines may be pushed immediately."

Mr. Settle Assumes Constructive Task.

The resignation of Mr. Myron C. Settle from the state secretaryship of Ohio to become director of religious education for the Disciples of Gary, Ind., is an event which indicates the great significance of the new departure in the public school system of that young city of 40,000 people. Some months ago Superintendent Wirt, in charge of the Gary schools, backed by his board, offered to release children one hour each day for Biblical or other form of religious instruction to such churches as parents might designate. No opposition to the plan developed. Catholics and Jews have the opportunity to care for their own, as Protestants. The system in less clear cut form is in use in Germany. Mr. Wirt has sought to improve on the German method, and has at least thoroughly Americanized it. The Disciples of Christ have three churches in Gary, the Central, Tolleston, and Glen Park. All are splendidly located in respect to the public schools. Our Sunday-school at the Central is the largest in the city. Mr. Settle therefore faces a magnificent opportunity in connection with this experiment. He will direct the whole program of religious education including the Sunday-school work, in the three churches. Deputations from many cities have visited Gary to learn the plans. When the experiment has demonstrated its success many cities throughout America will probably offer the churches the same opportunity. We are yet too close to the initial stages in the movement to predict results with assurance. From the present outlook it would seem one of the most significant movements in the field of religious education which this generation has witnessed.

Sunday-School Reorganization at Atlanta.

Nearly a thousand scholars and friends celebrated Reorganization day at First Christian Sunday-school. It was the largest crowd assembled in this school since the attendance contest last year. A complete new corps of officers was placed in charge, which, under the leadership of Dr. L. O. Bricker, bids fair to put the school in the front rank in Atlanta, for efficiency and in point of number of scholars.

Dr. Philputt Visits Former Parish.

J. M. Philputt, of Central Church, New York City, recently addressed his former congregation, at Union Avenue Church, St. Louis, and delivered himself of some straight-from-the-shoulder remarks regarding some "new sins." Doctor Philputt introduced his subject, "Thy Kingdom Come," by telling of various needed reforms suggested by a popular canvass in New York recently, as to what would be the greatest reform possible at the present time. One had suggested the abolition of the liquor traffic; another, the abolition of child labor; a third, the end of war. "I mention these things," said Dr. Philputt, "to show that the minds of men are turning toward better social conditions. Men are thinking and saying that things must be made better. Conditions which give rise to disease and oppression and injustice and cruelty must be put away, and it must be done in the name of Jesus of Nazareth. The church is waking up to the fact that she must broaden her view. She must face, not the evils of the past, but the evils which confront us now. The church needs constant readjustment to predict results with assurance. New varieties of sin have sprung up in our day—varieties not known in the Bible or the prayer book. They come in the garb of virtue, and it is sometimes hard for us to discriminate their real character. They wear respectable clothing, they are thoroughly fumigated, there is no brimstone on their garments. They are not individual sins; they are social sins. The old highwayman said, 'your money or your life.' It was a clean proposition, and we understood him. But the modern highwayman says, 'Your money or you can not have the necessities of life.' It is more intricate. Here is a man who would not steal your overcoat, but who will so manipulate the market as to squeeze out a multitude of small holders. Here is a dealer who would not take a spoon off your table, but who will sell you a gold brick and clean you out, spoons and all. Here is a man who would condemn Herod for killing little children, but who in a factory breeding disease, ill ventilated and insanitary, will kill off the little ones, and their mothers also; quack doctors, patent medicine vendors, directors that use the securities of their stockholders for their own benefit, the railroad official that grants secret rebate for private graft, the labor leader who instigates a strike so that he may be paid for calling it off—these are the gentlemen that we have to deal with in these times. These are the men that are dangerous in our society."

Washington, D. C., Church Rejoices.

Sunday, June 7, the Thirty-fourth St. Christian Church, Washington D. C., burned its mortgage. The occasion was one of great rejoicing. Dr. Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore delivered the address. The day was ideal and a crowd assembled which taxed the capacity of the building. The church was started as a Sunday school about twelve years ago in the home of the Bondurants, who are still active and valuable members. The school grew rapidly and soon a church building was erected. The Sunday-school outgrew the building and forced the church to build larger and better quarters, the building now occupied. The school is again pushing for room. The Sunday school has enjoyed a steady growth under the leadership of H. L. Stanforth, the efficient superintendent. On last Lord's Day 309 were present. The church has always been self-supporting. Two of the former pastors of the church, writes the present pastor, Harry L. Ice, deserve much cerdit for the unselfish work done here; C. C. Jones, now of Phoenix, Ariz., and C. C. Waite, now of Paulding, O. Mr. Ice's ministry began here two years ago. During this period more than $1,200 has been raised above the running expenses of the church. One hundred additions, a good portion of them men, are reported. The Sunday-school has been practically doubled. The pastor's salary has been increased twice.

H. J. Crocker to Leave Kansas Work.

H. James Crocker, after three and a half years as pastor of First Church, El Dorado, Kans., has resigned, resignation to take effect Aug. 1. During his pastorate, 275 members have been received into the fellowship, nearly 200 by baptism. The membership now is 500. The congregation is a great force for righteousness in the community. This year the church supports Miss Edith Russel in living link work among the Chinese in Frisco, besides keeping up their usual contributions to other missionary enterprises. Mr. Crocker's plans for the future are not definite yet but he expects to take a pastorate about Sept. 1.

Cedar Rapids, Second Church.

Second Church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., under the ministry of Perry Schuler, has made commendable progress for the past few months. The building is taxed to its full capacity both for the Sunday-school and preaching services. The men's Bible class has been obliged to take refuge on the outside under an awning. The day for a new building for this congregation is near at hand. Mr. Schuler is in Washington state this summer, for a two months' engagement on the Chautauqua platform.

Champ Clark Trustee of William Woods.

Speaker Champ Clark, member of the Bowling Green, Mo., Disciples' Church has been elected to the Board of Trustees of William Woods College, at Fulton, Mo. The new trustees include W. T. Kemper, president of the Commerce Trust Company of Kansas City; Robert Graham Frank of Liberty and Frank C. Stokes of Auxvasse. Dr. William Woods of Kansas City, benefactor of the college for several years and for whom it was named, has recently made it a gift of $8,000 for maintenance.

Notes from Missouri Convention.

E. E. Elliott sends the following notes picked up at Moberly last week:

Frank Garrett said at the Missouri Convention that President Yuan Shi Kai is sending his children to the mission schools of China.—The Nanking University is receiving grants of land from the Chinese government, according to reports of the Missionaries of the Christian Church.—"We have been accused of counting numbers, and we have been guilty," said Mrs. Atwater, in her address at the Missouri convention.—Emory Ross said, "I'd rather be sent as a missionary to Africa, than to be chosen by the United States government as Ambassador to the greatest nation on earth."—Mrs. R. S. Latshaw, state president of the Missouri C. W. B. M. was unable to attend the State Convention at Moberly on account of illness. At last accounts she is reported as recovering.—Mrs. J. H. Garrison presided at the sessions of the C. W. B. M. of which organization, she is vice-president.—"The man who never made a mistake died a long time ago and left no children," said Chairman B. L. Smith, at the Moberly convention, in explaining that mistakes might be made in assigning people to homes for entertainment.

Drake Sends Forth Workers.

There were six young men and two young women of Drake University formally set apart to the ministry and the mission fields is year: Mrs. Verna Waugh, Chillicothe, Mo.; Miss Margaret Darst, Oklahoma City, Okla., both of whom expect to go to China in the near future; Hugh C. Guy, Kansas City, Mo.; George O. Marsh, who is just graduating from the liberal arts department of the University; Oscar Joneson, Coffeyville, Kan.; Walter Girdner, Mercer, Mo.; William Mander, Birmingham, Eng.; Charles B. Tupper, Woodbine, Ia. In all, twenty-three are going out from Drake this year into the active work of the ministry, some of whom have been ordained elsewhere.

Jasper T. Moses Leaves Colorado Field

Jasper T. Moses has closed a twenty months' pastorate at Grand Junction, Colo., and June 1 took the work at Fowler, Colo., succeeding Lin D. Cartwright, who will begin a year of post-graduate work at Chicago University with the summer quarter. Mr. Cartwright took the Fowler Church upon its organization four years ago by State Superintendent C. W. Dean, and has made it one of our best village churches in the West. The religious education work of this church is almost a model under the aggressive superintendency of C. W. Buck, editor of the local newspaper. The church has a cozy brick building thoroughly adapted to educational and social work. Regarding the departure of Mr. Moses from Grand Junction, the Daily Sentinel of that city says: "He has been a strong factor in the continued growth of the church and has been a great force in the spiritual uplift in this city." Complimentary reference is also made to his work as president of the city Ministers' Alliance, member of the Board of Managers of the Colorado Christian Missionary Society and president of the Western Slope Missionary District.

EASTERN SCHOOL OF METHODS, JULY 15-24.

No more fitting place for the Eastern School of Methods, arranged by the Sunday School department of the American Society, could be chosen than Keuka Park, N. Y., one of nature's beauty spots. It is nestled among the hills of western New York on Lake Keuka. Ample room for all sessions of the school will be provided in Keuka College. The College dormitory will provide rooms for more than one hundred persons, while additional reservations have been secured in the neighborhood.

The faculty consists of the following lecturers.

Geo. W. Kramer, New York City—"Sunday school Architecture." Miss Hazel A. Lewis, of the American Christian Missionary Society—"Missionary Methods." Prof. R. J. Bennett of Keuka College—"Religious Pedagogy." R. H. Miller, Pastor of the Richmond Ave. Church Buffalo—"Church Efficiency" and "Boys' work" Miss Cynthia Pearl Maus, of the Christian Board of Publication—"Girls' Work." Mrs. Jessie Brown Pounds, Hiram, Ohio—"Story Telling." Dr. Conrad H. Moehlmann of the Rochester Theological Seminary—a series of studies in "Paul's Life and Letters." Arthur Braden, Pastor of the Central Church, Syracuse—a series of studies in the "Teachings of Jesus." Robt. M. Hopkins of the American Christian Missionary Society—"Organization and Management." President Jos. A. Serena of Keuka College, will be Dean. John E. Pounds, of Hiram, Ohio, will deliver the Commencement address. There will be fifty-two hours of study work. An international certificate will be awarded to those satisfactorily completeing not less than thirty hours of this work. A special feature will be the sunset devotional prayer meetings conducted by C. H. Barnett, State Bible-school Superintendent of New York. The afternoons will be free for recreation and will be in charge of W. J. Clarke who has given this matter much though. Sunday, July 19, will be a special day. Dr. Charles H. Rust, pastor of the Second Baptist Church of Rochester will preach twice during the day and a great Demonstration Bible-school will be held. The expense of the school to those in attendance will be but $10 for ten days.

DR. MEDBURY IN BACCALAUREATE ADDRESS.

June 7, was baccalaureate Sunday for Drake University. Chaplain Charles S. Medbury preached the baccalaureate sermon in the University Place Church auditorium at 3 P. M. His address gave emphasis to the new idealism that is coming to permeate the thought of the higher education of the age—the religious ideal that marks and is more and more to mark the age. Spite of materialism there is a palpitating interest in the things of the spirit, a quickening of interest in the altruism of the kingdom of heaven. It was a summons to the young men and women who are going out from the University halls to the things of the higher life and to a grappling with the problems and tasks with a faith and a fidelity and the fortitude that overcomes the world.

Chaplain Medbury called attention to the fact that Drake University has always stood for the thing dear to the Christian heart. It has always advocated the linking of education and religion and stood against any conflict between faith and enlightment. The tendency nowadays, he said, is to humanize religion and to religionize politics. "These things," he declared, "are inseparable, and the modern idea is to link them inseparably together." "Religion without education easily becomes a superstition," declared Dr. Medbury, "and education without religion as easily becomes superficial and ineffective. We must have both in our lives in order to reach that standard of life which the world would have us reach, and that we may be able to answer the call of the social order, which is nothing more or less than the call of God."

He emphasized the fact that God has not been idle or absent through all the years waiting for science and modern standards of sociology to make it possible for him to take his place in the affairs of man. "He has always been God," said the speaker, "and has ever been at watch over humanity."

"It has sometimes been claimed that God is not practical," he said; "it has likewise been claimed that the church and the preacher have been impratical, but if so, and I admit that the preacher may not always have been practical, lay the blame to the preacher and not to the One whom he proclaims."

"It has always been a pleasure to me to preach the baccalaureate sermons to the outgoing students of Drake University," he said, "and it is a great pleasure for me to do so to-day, and I would call you of the graduating class to that old battle cry, 'God wills it,' that cry of the crusaders; that cry that reaches far back of the crusaders to the time of God watching over Israel. I would ask that you do all that you do in the name of Him whose call it is.

"You who have riches to give, riches far greater than public libraries to communities all over the world, or to distribute wealth broadcast for the benefit of charity. You have the riches of a culture that breathes of the spirit of Almighty God, and these riches it is your duty to disseminate throughout the world.

"Politics has been separated from religion and many persons think this a progressive step, but such is not the case. Politics for the people cannot be separated from religion, for the world is governed of God, and with this knowledge, and with these riches you have to give, leaving us now, we bid you God-speed."

OHIO SECRETARY'S LETTER.

The Bowling Green Convention marks the turning point between the old year and the new. It was a satisfying convention. The large number of delegates present was a gratification. From beginning to end there was no occurrence to mar the perfect fellowship of the gathering. The program was rich in good things and was received with zest by an eager congregation. Those who brought messages gave their hearers something rich to treasure in their hearts. For all these reasons it was a satisfying convention.

We face the next year's work with high hopes of making it the best year in our history. We labor under no delusion, however, as to the problems involved. Our obligations are many and only the strenuous endeavor of every wide-awake church and minister will enable us to measure up with our duty.

The Evangelistic Committee of the convention issued a call for 10,000 additions to the church, all to be reported in our state paper, "The Ohio Work." Drop a card to this office on the last Monday of each month and report additions for the month. We are well able to make it 10,000.

Now that Ohio Disciples number at least 100,000, we should be aware of our power and should perform service commensurate with that power. A call will soon be sent out for fresh statistics. We are earnestly hoping that we shall hear from all the churches promptly in response.

In the office preparations are making for the District Conventions, which are to come. The schedule is at present made out and will be published in the very near future. It provides for conventions from Aug. 28th to Oct. 30th, covering every portion of the state. The schedule requires strenuous work on the part of the state workers. An effort will be made in the program to carry some of the best things in inspiration and method to workers in every church in the state. See that your church is adequately represented in your District Convention this fall and get in line for the best things in your local work.

Among all the good things, we have occasionally to call attention to some phases of the work that are less pleasant. At this time we have to report the unwelcome news that Myron C. Settle, who two and one-half years has been our efficient Sunday-school worker, has been called by the American Christian Missionary Society, to be the Director of Religious Education among the Churches of Christ at Gary, Ind. This new work appealed to him very strongly and we are compelled to relinquish him from our work in Ohio. In his stay among us, Brother Settle has endeavored to do a substantial type of work that would result in the permanent uplift of our schools and his efforts have been appreciated by his fellow workers in the state, who will greatly regret his loss from among our forces. However, we shall all bid him God-speed in his new and important enterprise and, profiting by his instructions while among us, will endeavor to continue Sunday-school work in Ohio upon a high plane.

NEWS FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

D. E. Dannenberg has moved from Nankin, China, to Chuchow.

Arthur Bowman and wife have been appointed missionaries of the Foreign Society. They are now on the field doing a most splendid service. They are located at Wuhu, China.

The city records show that our kindergarten in Osaka, Japan, begun in the M. B. Madden home, is the first Christian kindergarten in that city nearly as large as Chicago.

A. E. Cory started on his trip to Russia June 23. He will be back in Cincinnati by August 25.

Last week a friend in Michigan sent $4,100 cash as a direct gift.

The Children's Day receipts have gained over those of last year almost every day since June 7th. We must reach the $100,000 from the Sunday-schools. We cannot do the work demanding support without it and the Sunday-schools will be blessed in giving it.

"Missionary Programs and Incidents" is a most helpful Sunday-school volume just from the press. It has in it fifty-two fifteen minute missionary programs for the Sunday-school and fifty-two five minute missionary incidents. This covers every Sunday in the year. We know of nothing so helpful as this book for superintendents and missionary secretaries. It is a wonderful handbook of ready material for practical use. It sells for 50 cents and the Foreign Society can furnish it.

The Commission of the Foreign Society to the mission fields, which sails July 21, expects to bring from the fields some fine moving picture films of the work in China, Japan and the Philippines. These pictures will be most helpful in presenting the missionary work to the churches.

Eight hundred young men from the colleges of the Central West gathered at Lake Geneva the last of June for the annual college Y. M. C. A. Conference. Thirty of these were Disciples. These summer meetings are very significant as in them a large number of students volunteer for the foreign fields. A. McLean represented our people at the Conference and reports that the interest and impression made was wonderful.

THE ATLANTA CONVENTION.

Preparations for the Atlanta Convention are going forward in the most encouraging way. The various local committees have their work well in hand. We are assured of the very best possible arrangements for the pleasure and success of the convention. The programs for the various sessions are being worked out. These programs will be up to the usual high standard of our National Conventions. E. E. Elliott, Executive Secretary in Charge of Transportation, is making unsurpassed arrangements for special trains and good rates. The committee on arrangements is doing all that can be done in the work assigned to it. The Attendance Committee, of which Prof. Colby D. Hall is chairman, is preparing to keep the convention prominently before the churches in the hope that every church will take sufficient interest in the convention to select and send representatives to it. Prof. W. E. Hackleman will be in charge of the music for most of the sessions and will have a large chorus for the evening sessions. Robert E. Speer will make the leading address on the first night. The Pastors' Session, a new feature of our convention program, will be held on Wednesday morning of the last day of the convention. B. A. Abbott is in charge and is providing a rich program. Simultaneously with this session, there will be a Conference Meeting of Ministers' Wives, another new feature thoroughly in keeping with the spirit of our age. This conference will be conducted by Mrs. Walter M. White, Cedar Rapids, Ia. The last night of the convention, there will be an address by Col. John Temple Graves and probably one by Speaker Champ Clark.

A rich feast is being prepared for us in Atlanta. A new day of co-operation on the part of all the churches has dawned. We confidently expect more churches to be represented in the Atlanta Convention than were ever represented in any convention of our people.

The dates of the convention are October 7th-14th inclusive.

Graham Frank,
Cor. Sec'y. of the General Convention.

J. A. Barnett, minister of the Third Church, Danville, Ill., has been active in community affairs in spite of the hot weather. He recently delivered a patriotic address in one of the large public schools and at the National Soldiers' Home. On July 21, he delivered the memorial address for one of the local fraternal orders, and on the next afternoon took part in the ceremonials at the laying of the cornerstone of the splendid new Y. M. C. A. building now in course of erection in that city.

Among the Colleges

CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY.

The total impression made by the program of commencement week was that we are preparing students as never before for world-wide citizenship and service. Almost every exercise made a direct contribution to this impression. The three addresses by W. A. Shullenberger, Mexico, Mo., on baccalaureate day; W. G. Alcorn, Monroe City, Mo., on Bible College day, and C. M. Chilton, St. Joseph, Mo., on Commencement day, all harmonized in this impression. Larger men are being prepared for larger life and service.

Twenty-one diplomas were granted. Eleven received the A. B. degree, five the A. M., two the diploma from the Department of Music in piano, and three the diploma in Religious Pedagogy. Seven are preachers, and the remarkable thing about all the graduates is that they have all, with one or two exceptions, assumed the active Christian attitude, and upon occasion enter the pulpit and speak.

The alumni were much in evidence during the week, and their growing earnestness to more adequately equip the laboratories and libraries gave purpose and delight to their gatherings and banquet speeches.

Five of oru teachers are studying this summer, one of them in Europe and four in three universities of this country. The members of the faculty are vigorous and are seeking to realize their ideals of the highest service.

President Carl Johann, who came to Christian University in 1902 and who because of failing health has been unable for active service for a year and a half, presented his resignation to the board of trustees. The resignation was accepted and he was elected president emeritus with salary. Professor H. M. Garn, who has been acting president during President Johann's illness, declined to continue in that capacity so that he might give all his time to the work of teaching. Therefore, we are ready for a new president, and the position calls for one of the largest men. The possibilities of the school and its importance demand the best that we have. Such a man may be obtained in a short while, but if not, we have a firm conviction that we should wait till we can get a man of adequate equipment and size. Rapid developments here await the right man.

HIRAM COLLEGE.

President Bates' baccalaureate sermon was in his happiest vein and breathed throughout the spirit of Christian democracy and Christian service. On Sunday evening, President Charles T. Paul, of the College of Missions, Indianapolis, addressed the joint anniversary meeting of the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations on "Christianity and the Student World Movements." He also gave the Commencement day address. His theme was "The Age, the Task and the Workers." Always an eloquent, inspiring speaker, President Paul is at his best among his old friends at Hiram, where he spent ten happy, fruitful years.

The outgoing class numbers forty-two. Including two who took their Senior work elsewhere, forty-four received bachelor's degrees and two Master's degrees. Twenty-five of the forty-six are young men. A goodly number will enter the ministry, five or six going to the foreign field.

Six cash prizes are awarded each year: a Freshman prize of $25, a Sophomore prize of $50, a Junior prize of $75 and a Senior prize of $100, all based on scholarship. The committee were unable to report the names of the first three recipients commencement day. The Senior prize went to Mrs. H. N. Vanvoorhis whose husband graduated two years ago. The Mrs. Abram Teachout prize of $50 to the best all-round young woman went to Miss Lillian Collins; the A. R. Teachout prize of $100 to the best all-round young man went to Howard Fram, both Seniors.

An interesting feature of Class Day exercises has come to be the presentation to the college of some substantial memorial of affection. Last year's class presented a fine tower clock. The class of '14 presented a pair of elegant bronze electric light pillars with clustered light globes, flanking the entrance to the main college building.

During the year Hiram has won the intercollegiate oratorical contest and both debates in a dual intercollegiate debate.

Among the distinquished guests was the Hon. A. H. Pettibone, of Birmingham, Ala. He is the sole surviving charter member of the Delphic Society, which held its sixtieth anniversary this year and of which the late R. Moffett was the first president. The society issued a beautifully artistic souvenir booklet containing the names of charter members, present living members, a roll of Delphic soldiers in the Civil War and a history of the society.

One of the gratifying events of the year has been the completion of the $50,000 fund for the Almeda A. Booth Memorial Chair for Dean of Women.

Some changes in faculty are to be noted. Professor Snoddy, Class '96, Chair of Philosophy, goes to Transylvania. Through eighteen years of service at Hiram he has grown in power and into the hearts of his students and co-workers in a rare degree. Hiram's best wishes go with him and his family to their new field, and Transylvania is to be felicitated in their acquisition of so valuable a man and teacher. The new teachers at Hiram so far as now determined are Albert A. Crecilius, Professor of Public speaking, Barton Haggard, Chair of Economics and Sociology; Ralph C. Goodale, Chair of English, and Miss Salome Wetterholt, teacher of Piano. Mr. Crecilius comes to us from Ohio Northern University and the Curry School of Expression; Mr. Haggard from Drake and Harvard; Mr. Goodale from University of Michigan and from Minnesota University where he has been teaching; Miss Wetterholt from New York City, where she has been continuing her studies since finishing the musical course at Hiram several years ago. All come to us with enthusiastic recommendations. Additional teachers will be announced later. A Chair of Education is also announced, the incumbent yet to be chosen.

Hiram, O. B. S. DEAN.

TRANSYLVANIA UNIVERSITY AND THE COLLEGE OF THE BIBLE.

The 116th commencement of Transylvania and the 49th annual commencement of the College of the Bible was held in Morrison Chapel, June 11, and marked the close of a most satisfactory year's work in these institutions, writes President R. H. Crossfield. There were thirty-nine graduates, twenty-four bachelors, five masters, and ten graduates in the English and classical courses in the College of the Bible. Twenty-three were given diplomas in Hamilton College, the Junior college for women. The class representatives were Mr. Hugh Calkins and Miss Elizabeth Roff, both of whom delivered well prepared and very thoughtful addresses. The annual address to the class was given by President Miner Lee Bates, of Hiram College. This message, on life's call and preparation, was one of the great and significant utterances that have been heard in Morrison Chapel. President Bates was at one time a student of Transylvania, and his introduction was a most happy allusion to the experiences of those days. After the degrees had been conferred upon the graduates, the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon President Bates, Sec. Stephen J. Corey, and Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison. In naming the latter a Doctor of Laws, the presiding officer stated that this was the first time such an honorary degree had been given a woman by a Kentucky college. The attendance was large, taxing the capacity of the chapel, and was composed of representatives of more than a dozen states.

It was announced by the president that the year 1913-14 had been the most prosperous in the recent history of these institutions in point of attendance, college spirit and enthusiasm for the highest ideals, and financial showing. The College of the Bible had not incurred a deficit, but would have about $1,800 to pay on the indebtedness. Transylvania was entirely out of debt excepting a small deficit incurred recently. This report was received with applause by the intimate and financially interested friends in these colleges. It was explained, however, that these exceptionally good financial reports were due to the fact that these institutions had received some unusual gifts during the year. Such may not be counted upon for another year. The churches of the state of Kentucky gave during the year $1,800 to these colleges. It is hoped that the congregations of the state will soon be contributing at least $5,000 to assist these institutions in Christian education. The address delivered by R. E. Moss, of Eminence, Ky., on the baccalaureate occasion at the Woodland auditorium, and that given by H. C. Winders, of Indianapolis, at the Hamilton College commencement were of a high order, and were greatly appreciated by large audiences.

THE MILLIONAIRE.

Speak kindly to the millionaire;
Perhaps he does his best;
Don't try to drive him to despair
With rude, unfeeling jest.
Don't laugh at portraits which display
His face with comic leer,
And, when he gives his wealth away,
Don't take it with a sneer.

Speak kindly to the millionaire;
He has a right to live,
And feel the sun and breathe the air
And keep his coin or give.
You may be rich yourself, you see,
Before your life is through.
Speak kindly, and remember he
Is human, just like you.

BLIND BARTIMÆUS.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR JULY 19.

Matt. 20:29-34. Memory Verses, 51, 52.

Golden Text.—Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb shall sing.—Isa. 35: 5, 6.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.

(46) And they come to Jericho: and as he went out from Jericho, with his disciples and a great multitude, the son of Timæus, Bartimæus, a blind beggar, was sitting by the way side. (47) And when he heard that it was Jesus the Nazarene, he began to cry out, and say, Jesus, thou son of David, have mercy on me. (48) And many rebuked him, that he should hold his peace: but he cried out the more a great deal, Thou son of David, have mercy on me. (49) And Jesus stood still, and said, Call ye him. And they call the blind man, saying unto him, Be of good cheer: rise, he calleth thee. (50) And he, casting away his garment, sprang up, and came to Jesus. (51) And Jesus answered him, and said, What wilt thou that I should do unto thee? And the blind man said unto him, Rabboni, that I may receive my sight. (52) And Jesus said unto him, Go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole. And straightway he received his sight, and followed him in the way.

BY REV. A. Z. CONRAD, PH. D.

"The Son of Timaeus, Bartimaeus, a blind beggar, was sitting by the wayside." The perils of poverty are many. Extreme destitution is pitiful. It involves deprivations which often seem disastrous and which are always difficult to endure. We may gloss it over as we will and consider all the relieving facts and preach about the valuable lessons which are learned, and extol the virtues which sometimes grow out of it, we cannot conceal the real nature of extreme poverty. This man on the outskirts of Jericho was dependent upon the charity of his fellow-men. Evidently his own name and the name of his father were well known. It is probable he was what we would call well connected. His destitution may have been no fault either of his own or of his family. Qualities of his character are revealed which would lead us to believe that the great reverses suffered were not due to any personally degeneracy. Nothing is more evanescent than wealth. It is much harder to keep it than to gain it. The man without money soon discovers himself to be a man with very few friends. The influence of a bank account upon professed loyalty and love is wonderful. One of the tests of reality in professed friendship is a continuance of loyalty through enforced poverty.

Add to poverty the deprivation of vital faculty and you have multiplied the misery of the situation. Bartimaeus was not only poor but he was blind. He lived in a house without windows. The closing down of the curtains of night leaves the physical world dark, indeed.

PASSING CHARIOTS.

The sound of passing multitudes was not so unusual. Blind Bartimaeus had heard the measured step of passing caravans again and again. The tramp of moving armies, the rushing by of multitudes in quest of pleasure, with all these things he was familiar. An unusual event was transpiring. The pilgrim throng on their way to the Passover feast did not particularly interest him. A friendly voice told him that in the throng the miracle worker of Galilee who had opened the windows in many a darkened life was passing by. In his own conscious suffering Bartimaeus had dwelt much upon the stories which had come to his ears concerning Jesus of Nazareth and now he had come! It was not as though his passing was at intervals or that anytime he might call upon him. This was his only chance. It was the only time. It was not as though there were many ways in which he could receive his sight. There was but one way and this the only way. If he were ever to see, if the joys of the physical splendors were ever to be his it must be now. Precisely the same is true of spiritual sight and insight. Men dare not neglect the opportunity of God's passing chariots. There are times when God is peculiarly near. We recognize the fact of his omnipresence. There is no moment that God is not near to us, but there are times when there are special manifestations of his love and power.

THE IMPORTUNATE PLEA.

Does heaven have to be bombarded before help will be granted? Is God deaf to whispered entreaty? Certainly not. Yet our importunity is an indication of our sincerity. The definiteness and dominance of our desire is largely determining as to what God can safely give us. "Jesus, Son of David, have mercy on me." The cry was pathetic, piercing, persistent. The address indicated his recognition of the Messiahship of Christ. But is there not a suggestion of a feeling of the bond of sympathy which existed between them. He does not say, "Jesus, Son of God." That was taken for granted. Otherwise he could not expect the miracle of healing. He said, "Jesus, Son of David." Not only was Messiaship suggested but furthermore his humanity, consequently his kinship, his sympathy and compassion. If he was the son of David his humanity was not to be questioned. He could enter into the infirmities and afflictions of his fellow men. The appeal indicates the spiritual insight of Bartimaeus into the very nature of Christ. His cry for mercy indicates his confidence, the tenderness as well as the triumph of the Nazarene.

INTERRUPTIONS AND IMPATIENCE.

Only great souls continue patient under interruption. We speak of the broken thread of discourse, of interference with the flow of mind. We treat too often with brusqueness and expressed impatience those who seem to intrude upon the sanctities of contemplation. Those accompaning Jesus rebuked the poor beggar. They did not seem to realize that they were interrupting the deep desire of a needy man more than he was interrupting them. They were quite in desiring to protect Jesus from unnecessary intrusion, but they did not understand him or they would have recognized that this was no intrusion, that Jesus delighted more than in anything else to be able to manifest his power in giving wholeness to the broken life.

LOVE'S MANDATE.

"And Jesus stood still and said, 'Call ye him.'" Jesus was too great to be disturbed by interruptions. He coveted the opportunity to indicate his exhaustless friendship. We are too busy to pause in our mad rush for pleasure, for wealth or for fame. God Almighty is never too busy to give attention to the cry of need. It was to the credit of the multitude that they had too much sanity to tell the blind man he was not blind; that nothing was the matter with his eyes, that it was a mere delusion. They recognized his calamity but regarded it as hopeless. This was stupid of them in view of what Christ had already done in like situations. The commands of love are always kindly. Jesus was imperial but never imperious. The man must be brought to the fountain before he could drink. He must connect himself with the eternal power before he himself could be made whole. He must indicate confidence before his ailment could be conquered.

THE ENTHUSIASMS OF SPIRITUAL RESPONSE.

The real glow and glory of living has never been experienced until one has heard the call of Christ and recognized in Him their Saviour and Lord. Blind Bartimaeus quickly threw aside his outer garment. Nothing was of any concern to him now but the one matter of sight restoration. "He sprang up and came to Jesus." The very eagerness of his action indicated his hope and his faith. His act puts to shame the dilatoriness, the shrinking and the shirking which is characteristic of many who have to be pulled into the presence of their Lord that he may end them with heavenly gift. It seems strange that there should not be a larger enthusiasm in responding to every divine call, in obeying every divine mandate. The heart should sing for gladness and be consciously filled with good cheer from the very fact of the royal invitation.

THE HEART'S DOMINANT DESIRE.

Jesus demanded of him a definite request. He asked the controlling purpose and wish of this man whose cry had been a burning appeal for mercy. "What wilt thou that I should do unto thee." Hear his answer, "Rabboni, that I may receive thy sight." This is the kind of a petition which will secure a response. This is the prayer that will have answer. It is a concentration of purpose and desire at a single point. Now that the rays of the sun have focused we shall see the flame. Now all the lines of his life are converging upon one point. How little we appreciate the value of our faculties until deprivation makes its own revelation. It is only the individual who suffers that can properly appraise the common things of life. How sporadic and uncertain are our prayers. We must become definite. We must become intense. We must become irresistible.

THE VISION SPLENDID.

"Thy faith hath made thee whole." And straightway he received his sight! What a flood of glory flashed upon his vision. The world was instantly transformed. His own life was changed. His attitude toward all things in the world was changed. Faith in Jesus became adoring worship. It is always so. When our spiritual eyes are opened the Bible ceases to be an ordinary book. Jesus Christ is then seen as the Son of God and as a Divine Saviour. What were before mere coincidences now become providences. Where before there was monotony there is now beauty and attractiveness. The supreme vision, the real vision splendid is seeing Jesus as he is. We enter the realms of the spiritual with our eyes blinded by sin. We are prejudiced. We are easily disturbed in faith. Indeed, it seems there is no faith worth while. When we become conscious of our need and cry, "Jesus thou son of David have mercy on me," our eyes are opened. Life still has its stern duties, its disappointments, its afflictions, but, the view point is changed. Nothing appals, nothing overwhelms, for the vision splendid ever presents to the soul Him who overcame the world, who is now the satisfying sufficiency to every child of faith.

There is a definite relation between faith and every achievement worth while in life. Faith so relates us to God that divinity becomes available. Faith is a loving belief that not only accepts the great facts of revelation and the testimony of consciousness, but having accepted them it obediently seeks to fulfil the call to a holy life. As the rambler rose clings to its trellis and rises ever higher sending out its beauty in every direction, so faith with its delicate tendrils clings to Jesus Christ and is rooted in the revelation of God's love and grows into an ever increasing beauty.

FOLLOWING THE GLORY AND NOT THE GLOOM.

Hitherto blind Bartimaeus had been in the could he become the strongest witness, as least, to follow the gloom and not the glory. The giving of sight studded the world with the very glory of heaven. It did more. "His eyes were opened and he knew Jesus," nothing could separate him from his Saviour and benefactor. "And he followed him in the way." With what warm devotion, with what close affiliation, with what intense adoration he clung to Jesus Christ. Thus could he best show his gratitude. Thus could he becomt the strongest witness, as Friend and Healer. We have not received less than Bartimaeus for we too have been given the vision splendid through faith. If it grows less it will be because we fail to "follow him in the way." If finally we lose sight of him it will be because we have permitted ourselves to be allured from that holy pathway which never pauses until it reaches the Glory Land. The Light of the world is Jesus. Until he opens our eyes we are in darkness. His touch gives wholeness. He will grant more than we ask. When our eyes are opened to see him we see the Father. We see in Christ all we shall ever see of God and all we could ever understand of God. In every new spiritual obligation, and every dividing of the way, at every study hour when we are seeking to learn his will from his word, our cry should be, "Lord. that I might receive my sight."

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR JULY 15.

Paul the Missionary—First Journey.—Acts. 13-14.

"He is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles and kings, and the children of Israel: for I will show him how many things he must suffer for my name's sake." We are to have three studies in the ministry of Paul. We shall follow him as he goes from place to place with the testimony of Jesus. We shall try to understand his motives. If we are wise, we shall observe carefully what things he suffered for the truth he loved; we ought to know what it cost to give the message of Jesus to the world. We like to meet the successful man. We may at times pay honor to those whose success is only in appearance and who possess none of the heroism of the men who agonize for the salvation of the world.

AT ANTIOCH.

It was not an accident that Paul ministered to the church in Antioch. "And he went to Tarsus to seek Saul; and when he had found him, he brought him to Antioch." Barnabas knew Saul and when he needed a man to help him in a forward movement, he went after Saul. The helper proved himself worthy of the confidence reposed in him. The church prospered, the people were taught, and the disciples won the name by which the followers of Jesus are still known. Antioch became a new center of operations. The distinction between Christianity and Judaism became clearer even to the disciples. Doubtless there was much discussion of the mission of Christ to all mankind. In this discussion Saul of Tarsus bore a prominent part. By their work he and Barnabas showed themselves ready and fit for a mission to the Gentiles.

THE DEDICATION.

The prophets and teachers of the church at Antioch realized that they were taking an important step when they sent out missionaries. Their decision was reached after due deliberation. They sought to know the will of God. The enterprise was not of a private character. They set a good example to the men of all succeeding ages who might profess to undertake great things in the name of the Lord. They neither waited for the sanction of the mother church at Jerusalem nor did they rashly choose their course. They separated and sent forth those whom the Spirit appointed to the work of missions.

THE WORK IN CYPRUS.

Barnabas was a native of Cyprus. Perhaps this fact accounts for the decision to preach first in that island. The gospel had already been preached in Cyprus, with what results we do not know. Nor are we told what was the effect of the ministry of Barnabas and Saul in any of the towns except Paphos. At Paphos we encounter Bar-Jesus the sorcerer and the Roman proconsul Sergius Paulus. The sorcerer, "skilled in the lore and uncanny arts and strange powers of the Median priests," represented an Oriental system of science and religion with which Christianity had to contend. The proconsul was a man of practical ability who was interested in something more than the details of his business. The exposition of Christianity which he heard deeply impressed him. He was profoundly moved by the defeat of the sorcerer by Paul. He believed. We wish we knew more of his life and faith.

IN THE MAINLAND.

From Cyprus Paul and Barnabas went to the mainland. Henceforth Paul is the leader. It is to be noted that the message was always delivered to the Jews first and then to the Gentiles. The teacher and the preacher will find instructive examples in the addresses of Paul. The apostle met his hearers on their own ground. He used their knowledge. And when the work was hindered in one field, he went to another. He knew what he was about and he did not intend to keep still because some men did not like what he said. Acts 11:19-26; 4:37.

By Charles Clayton Morrison 250 pages, $1.25 plus 10 cents postage

The most important work treating of the characteristic teaching of Baptists and Disciples that has appeared in this generation. It deals with a theme that is peculiarly alive to every mind that has had any part in the Disciples' reformatory movement. The author writes with conviction, but wholly without partisanship. He states issues incisively and faces them squarely. He holds an original and independent point of view for the treatment of the subject of Christian Baptism. He accepts the position of the Disciples as to the practice of immersion only, but rejects much of the reasoning traditionally put forth by his brethren and the Baptists in support of this practice. The book is refreshingly frank. Mr. Morrison does not believe that immersion is baptism. In the opening chapter the author puts himself squarely in opposition to Alexander Campbell's argument.

This notable volume is now in press. A very large edition will be run at the first printing. It is expected that the book will have a wide sale throughout the Christian world. Baptists will read it. Pedo-baptists will read it. Certainly every minister and earnest layman among the Disciples will wish to read it.

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

The House of Rimmon

The Bible records many acts and words on which it pronounces no final judgment. The question as to whether Naaman did right in attempting to worship Jehovah in the house of Rimmon, and whether the prophet did right to permit it, has been discussed pro and con for something like 2,600 years, and the question is still open for discussion. He incurred a risk in attempting it, a terrible risk, and maybe more than that. There was the risk to his own spiritual life; there was the risk involved in his example, and certainly it would not have been altogether easy for Naaman in that situation to have given to the king a consistent answer to a question concerning the faith that was within him. There are those who maintain that Naaman ought never to have returned to Syria, that he should have stayed in the land of his healing, devoting himself to the service of that country, its prophet and its God. And the answer to this is that it would have been a poor manifestation of his new religion that it should have thus made him a traitor to his nation and an ingrate to the king who had loved him and trusted him and sent him to the prophet to be healed.

Let us not try to settle the question for Naaman. He settled it a long time ago in the manner that seemed right to him. He had no question concerning his duty as a soldier. He assumed that his duty called him back as fast as he could go, and he knew that when he returned the king would depend upon him as he had depended upon him before. Let us leave the question of the wisdom of his decision; indeed, we shall have to leave it. Naaman settled that himself. He did not submit it to the prophet, much less did he leave it for us to decide. Moreover, the prophet did not intrude his advice on that question. He assumed that that was something which Naaman must settle for himself. He promised Naaman that even when he should be kneeling in the house of Rimmon beside a king who was worshiping an idol, God would accept the worship of his heart.

We have reason to be grateful to the prophet for this word. It has certain very important lessons for us. People cannot always choose their own environment. Try as we may to improve it and to make for ourselves ideal surroundings, there still will be for all of us conditions which we would be most glad to alter, but must accept and make the best of. Young converts must learn to serve God in homes where there is no family altar; they must bear their silent testimony in the midst of opposition, misunderstanding, criticism and scorn. It is not always their duty to preach. The prophet did not instruct Naaman to tell the king how very sinful it was for him to worship Rimmon. The occasion might arise when that would be his duty; on the other hand, he might have years in which to serve silently and no one but God himself to know the deep current of religious life flowing beneath his silence.

It is sometimes our duty to escape from temptation. Often it belongs to us to make a complete break with surroundings that are harmful or a menace to our spiritual life, yet this cannot always be the program of the Christian. There are times when it is not only permissible to stay, but cowardly and wicked to flee. It is not the policy of God to take us out of the world, but to keep us from the evil in the world.

There is a sense in which each one of us has to worship in the temple of Rimmon. There is need on the part of every Christian that he shall offer the request which Naaman made of the prophet. It is important that we find not merely grace to alter external conditions, but that we learn how to possess our own faith and rely upon the grace of God within our own souls even in the midst of a very naughty world.

Did Naaman prove himself a true worshiper of God in the house of Rimmon? We wish we knew. His was a place of spiritual peril; we have some reason to fear that he was not equal to the test. His was a situation of great embarrassment and we cannot be sure how it resulted. But our problem is not what became of Naaman; it is what is to become of our endeavor to be true to God while living in the world. We are here to make answer to that question.

THE HUMAN TIE.

"Speak tenderly! For he is dead," we say;
"With gracious hand smooth all his roughened past,
And fullest measure of reward forecast,
Forgetting naught that gloried his brief day."
Yet of the brother, who, along our way,
Prone with his burdens, heartworn in the strife,
Totters before us—how we search his life,
Censure and sternly punish, while we may.
Oh, weary are the paths of Earth, and hard!
And living hearts are ours alone to guard.
At least, begrudge not to the sore distraught
The reverent silence of our pitying thought.
Life, too, is sacred; and he best forgives
Who says: "He errs, but—tenderly! He lives."

Sunday School Hosts in Convention

Report of Meeting of the International Association, Held at Medinah Temple, Chicago.

BY THOMAS CURTIS CLARK

THAT the Sunday-school movement is no longer to be identified by the jingle of coppers and the pit-a-pat of children's feet was proved by the triennial convention of the International Association, which closed its sessions in this city on June 30.

The sessions were made notable by big discussions of big ideas by big men and women. Work for men, community service, world wide missions, national prohibition, Bible study in the public schools—these are some of the themes that kept coming up through the convention's discussions.

Big men were there: William N. Hartshorn, business man of Boston, and a Sunday school warhorse; E. K. Warren, millionaire manufacturer of Three Oaks, Mich., who takes more pleasure in a new school organized than in a good bulge in his week's business; H. J. Heinz, who would rather be remembered as a Sunday school philanthropist than as the country's most successful "pickle man;" George W. Bailey, a Philadelphia business man, who although an invalid, insisted upon attending the convention.

SOME MEN WHO WERE THERE.

Then there were men present who were great in other ways: Rev. F. B. Meyer, believed by some to be the world's greatest preacher; Bishop J. C. Hartzell, of Africa; Rev. T. Ukai, director of the Japanese Sunday School Association; C. R. Blackall, 84 year old editor of Baptist Sunday-school supplies; H. M. Hamill, of Nashville, Tenn., who was once a Confederate soldier, but who has won greater honors in the field of teacher training and general Sunday-school promotion. Justice Maclaren, of Canada, was there, and Miss Margaret Slattery, who by the way is a stateswoman as well as a writer of books on religious education; H. H. Meyer, newly appointed editor of the Methodist Publication Society; Ira M. Price, who heads the Lesson Committee: and John I. Sampey, of Louisville, who is a general of tactfulness as well as an expert in lesson planning.

The evening sessions and the Sunday afternoon meeting were made notable by great addresses. At the opening session, Bishop C. P. Anderson spoke to the convention theme, "Jesus Shall Reign." Richmond Pearson Hobson discussed national prohibition of the liquor traffic on Sunday afternoon. Booker T. Washington won many friends by his address on the relation of the Sunday-school to the moral development of the negro. Then at the last session, Miss Margaret Slattery, of Boston, made a profound impression with her call to service, her subject being, "Stars." J. A. Macdonald, the distinguished Toronto editor, placed a period at the end of the program with a discussion of the conquest of North America through the Sunday-school.

THE CONVENTION LEADERS.

Marion Lawrance, general secretary of the International Association, was undoubtedly the favorite among the leaders at the convention. Whenever he arose to speak he was cheered. His was a significant report of work done and of work to be done. He reported 175,685 schools in 1914, with 18,441,036 members enrolled. This is an increase of 2,200 schools and two million members since the San Francisco convention, held in 1911. Mr. Lawrance set forth as some of the goals to be reached during the coming triennium, the following: "One million new Sunday-school scholars each year; one million total abstinence pledge signers; one million members of the Sunday-school pledged to definite community service; one million accessions to the churches from Sunday-school membership; ten million to be reached through home visitation campaign; 25,000 additional organized classes in the secondary and adult divisions of the Sunday-schools; 20,000 new home departments; 50,000 new cradle rolls; 50,000 new mission study classes; 100,000 new members enrolled in teacher training classes; a civic training school or institute in every city of 50,000 or more, with at least one or more in every state or province; 100 new graded unions; graded instruction on efficiency and co-operation standards presented at all state and county conventions; 10,000 organized classes in some definite form of community service." The last mentioned objective, strongly emphasized by the speaker, made a deep impression on the delegates.

RELIGION AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

In connection with his discussion of the relation of the public schools to religious development, Mr. Lawrance pointed out that the recognition of the work of the church and Sunday-school in the regular work of the day school is one of the most significant advance steps in the religious welfare of the nation. "The giving of credits in the public school for Bible study in the churches is new to most of us and opens up possibilities we never had dreamed of before. The co-operation in all of these matters of protestant, Catholic and Jew, permitting each to teach the word of God to his own children, and to read in public those portions of the word that are accepted by all, is certainly an indication of the growing spirit of brotherly regard and toleration. We look upon this as a step forward in the study and recognition of the Bible and under wise direction there is much of promise in it."

Mr. W. C. Pearce, who has served as adult superintendent for several years, has been honored in being selected as Mr. Lawrance's associate. It is planned to give over to other hands the responsibilities of the adult work, that Mr. Pearce may devote his entire time to the rapidly expanding international activities. Mr. Pearce reports 41,939 organized adult classes, as against 35,815 in 1913, and against 20,950 in 1911, as reported at San Francisco.

John L. Alexander secondary superintendent, reported 8,702 organized classes for teen age boys and girls. Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner, elementary superintendent, brought in a record of nearly 50,000 cradle rolls, as against 27,870 reported at San Francisco.

Dr. Franklin McElfresh, international teacher-training superintendent, voiced a demand for greater seriousness in the important work of training teachers. He believes the Sunday-school has passed out of its fad period and that, if the schools are to take advantage of the opportunities being afforded them of co-operation with the public schools, they must get down to business. The teacher-training conferences emphasized the same idea. Disciples note with pleasure the place that Prof. W. S. Athearn has taken in general religious education work. Prof. Athearn proposed at one of the conferences a revised plan of training courses.

UNIFORM VERSUS GRADED LESSONS.

The most threatening question that disturbed convention counsels was that of uniform versus graded lessons. Dr. H. M. Hamill withdrew from the presidential chair long enough to read before the convention a memorial signed by twenty or more religious leaders asking for the "good old-fashioned B. F. Jacobs variety" of uniform lessons. H. H. Meyer moved that the memorial be laid on the table, as the new lesson committee would undoubtedly consider fully all such matters. C. R. Blackall and Dr. Hamill were both rather insistent on placing the plea before the committee, "to be accepted, revised or rejected, as the committee might see fit." But by a vote, Dr. Meyer's motion to lay on the table won. Mr. C. G. Trumbull, of the Sunday-school Times, and one of the signers of the memorial, later appeared with a similar petition and asked the committee to give it consideration.

From the discussion at the convention hall and at the conferences, these conclusions seem justified: (1) There will be no backing down as regards the present year-by-year graded lesson system; (2) A less complex grading by departments will be arranged for smaller schools; (3) The uniform lessons will continue, but the lessons will be adapted variously to the several departments of the schools.

THE NEW LESSON COMMITTEE.

As reported in last week's issue of The Christian Century, the make-up of the W. C. Pearce, who will leave the Adult Department to devote his entire time to the work of Associate General Secretary.

International Lesson Committee will no longer be entirely in the hands of the International Association. Eight members will represent that association; eight have been chosen by the Sunday-school Council of Evangelistic Denominations; and each denomination represented on the council will also have its own representative in the committee. Among the members of the new Lesson Committee from the International Association are: Ira M. Price, J. R. Sampey, H. L. Calhoun (Disciple), Amos R. Wells and Justice Maclaren. The Sunday-school Council will be represented by the following, among others: B. S. Winchester, H. H. Meyer, E. Morris Ferguson and Mrs. J. W. Barnes.

The principles upon the basis of which the committee will work are as follows: Unity of lesson courses with denominational freedom for any desired modification; the joint selection of all courses on the part of the International Sunday-school Association, the Sunday-school Council of Evangelical Denominations and denominational agencies; all lesson courses available for all publishing houses.

THE NEW OFFICERS.

Following the report of the nominating committee, the convention elected as its president Prof. H. M. Hamill, of Nashville, Tenn; for first vice-president, E. K. Warren, of Three Oaks, Mich.; for treasurer, E. H. Nichols, of Chicago.

THE NEXT CONVENTION.

New York has been chosen by the executive committee of the association as the meeting place for the fifteenth triennial convention to be held in 1917, but a late recommendation providing for quadrennial conventions with the next one in New York in 1918, was adopted. Delegates from Canada made a strong plea for Calgary, Alberta, but the final vote gave New York twenty-seven and Calgary seventeen. As a recognition of Calgary's effort to get the next convention the committee expressed a sentiment favoring that city for the 1922 meeting.

THE PARADE OF MEN.

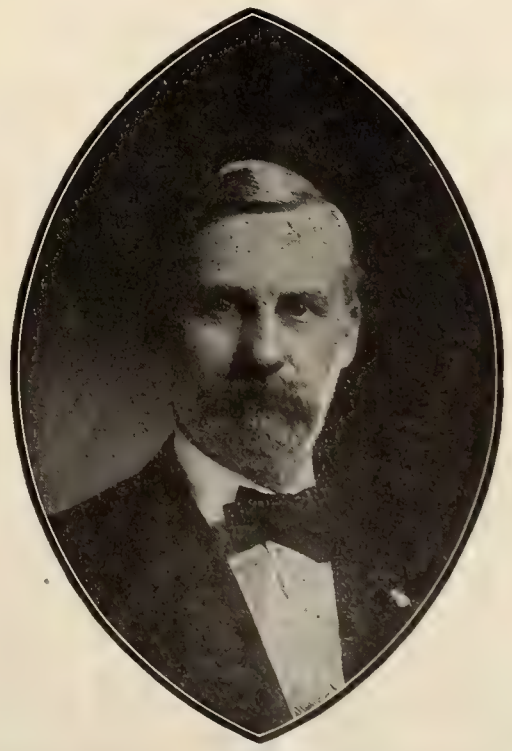
The most spectacular feature of the convention was the men's parade, which roused Chicago on Saturday afternoon, June 27. About 12,000 men and youths, from all parts of the city and country marched, under gaily colored banners, up Michigan avenue, from Twenty-fourth street to Randolph. For an hour and a half the singing hosts thronged the avenue, waving flags and banners, giving preference in their singing to "Onward Christian Soldiers." The parade was reviewed before the Art Institute by many of the notables of Chicago and of the Sunday-school world.

The greatness of this 1914 convention may be gauged by glimpsing some of the big messages that were brought to the assembled hosts by visiting notables.

Representative Hobson spoke to a crowded house on Sunday afternoon, making an appeal to the Sunday-school forces to attack with vigor the world-old enemy of civilization.

Booker T. Washington believes in the Sunday-school and insists that the "old theology" be given the negroes of the Southland.

"I don't want to spoil the old theology," he thundered in tones of which the passers in the streets could catch every inflection. "That's the theology that I want you to take to my people on the plantations of the South; my people who are close to the soil and who will be better off for staying there if you will take them the Sunday-school and all that the Sunday-school means. The old theogy! Take them that! The old theology, that says thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not steal, thou shalt not commit adultery, thou shalt not bear false witness. That's the old theology I mean."



Marion Lawrance, General Secretary of the International Association.

MISS SLATTERY'S MESSAGE.

The last session of the convention was perhaps the most stirring of all. Two great addresses, by Miss Slattery and by Dr. Macdonald, marked the high tide of the sessions. Miss Slattery closed her address with an eloquent appeal for idealistic service.

"Go back to your boys and girls and give them the insignia not of brute force but the tokens of service and of peace. Give them the message of the star Jane Addams saw. Teach them the message of the star so that nothing shall ever extenuate in their eyes the awful contrast of useless wealth and causeless poverty in a rich land. Teach them those things so that they shall never extenuate what we have come to extenuate because we will not give heed, because we have not tried to understand.

"Go back to your boys and girls! Go home, fathers and mothers! Develop the conscience of your community so that all the people shall say not only 'There is something terribly wrong,' but shall say, 'This shall not be.'

J. A. Macdonald, editor of the Toronto Globe, who made the final address of the convention.

"Go home! See the star—the star that shall burn itself into the soul.

"Go home! Follow the star."

Those who attended the Disciples convention at Toronto last year will remember what was perhaps the most striking address of the week—that of Dr. J. A. Macdonald, of Toronto. His presence at the last session of the Chicago convention lent dignity and power to the occasion. Dr. Macdonald believes in the power of ideas.

"I care not how venerable or how puissant an institution may be, woe to the institution against which a vital, pregnant idea comes. Its day is doomed!

"And a new idea has been released in the states and provinces of North America against the old iniquities and the established oppressions. It is the social message, the social program, the social motive—the message of one man and another, not the message of the individual, I tell you, but the message of one man and another."

Thus closed the 1914 meeting of the International Sunday-school Association. A great convention it was, great in attendance, in record of work done, in ideas and ideals urged. There was a forward look evident in all messages proclaimed and actions taken. One thing is certain, the Sunday-school is not yet built, it is only beginning to build. History is not the keyword, but prophecy.

Ministers Should Be Gentlemen!

Intimate Suggestions from a Pastor to His Fellow Pastors.

BY J. A. BARNETT.

THE courteous minister has a due regard for the rights and feelings of his congregation. Many ministers bring their personal injuries and grievances into the pulpit. Because of the misconduct of one or a few they berate the whole flock of God. The picking of flaws in the church soon gets to be a very bad habit. The impression is given that the whole church is like the few who deserve fierce anathemas. Many are attracted by the bold speech of the denunciator and applaud him as a very brave man. He may or may not be. His congregation has no chance to talk back to him and when he is face to face with the objects of his stern rebukes he is as meek as a turtle dove. The brave and courteous minister will not say to his flock collectively, what he would not dare say to them singly or in the privacy of their homes.

THE SCOLDING PREACHER.

What a wholesome fear and shame lurks in the hearts of the good, sensible men and women of the church, when they know their preacher is a selfish scold and liable at any time to break forth in a bitter tirade upon the congregation over almost anything, big or little or fancied! And they know he may do it if he just happens to be in a grouchy mood. He works off his grouches on his poor people. How many times, my brother minister, have you gone to the house of God with feelings wrought up to the breaking point, and with good cause often. You felt that you would just literally "rip things open." And then you ascended the pulpit and looked down into the faces of your people. There they were, from all walks of life, having experienced widely different things since you last met. Here sat the hard-working father of a large family who has had a hard struggle during the week, in his fight as a bread-winner, and in his harder fight to be true to Christ among sinful men. There he sits with wife and family, looking to you for spiritual food and for help. Here is a mother in Israel, bowed in bereavement, having come up for comfort and strength.

Here are the young with radiant faces and open hearts ready to be led or repelled. You looked over your flock as a good shepherd knowing their lives and needs, and you are ashamed at your selfishness, and you asked, "Did these folks come up here today to hear me scold and vent my wrath because somebody has not done his duty this week? Or did they come to be fed? Dear Master, forgive thy weak and tired servant! Help me to fed thy lambs, "today." You arise with a new spirit and bring a message that warms the hearts of your hearers and they turn away stronger for the duties of the new week. You find a strange peace in your own heart and you thank God and take courage.

THE MINISTER AND THE COMMUNITY.

One who has such a purpose and strives to fulfill his ministry will beget a quiet confidence in the hearts of his people. They will be glad to bring their friends to church, knowing that no matter what may have transpired during the week, the man of God will be there to speak words of helpfulness and cheer. Does any man fail to prize dearly that quiet confidence he sees in the hearts of his people, and the ease it begets, because they know he will always say and do the right thing?

The minister not only has obligations to discharge to his own church, but should consider himself also a servant of the whole community. How important it is that the preaching elder of the modern congregation be held in esteem by those without. His standing will depend largely upon his own attitude toward the community. A true man will make a place for himself in the community by patient perseverance in well doing. His attitude toward the things that benefit and uplift in the community will determine his standing.

The problem of modern denominationalism is one of the most serious things that the minister faces. In even small rural communities there are two or more religious bodies represented. There is no field today where the minister is likely to have things all his own way. Usually in every field there are representatives of all the great religious bodies. I have often wondered what the Apostle Paul would do in face of our modern sectarianism. I have no doubt he would "preach the word" without fear or favor, and yet with all due courtesy toward those who had been taught from their earlier years in the ways of their fathers. Perhaps there is a safe precedent in his attitude toward the Jews who were blinded by their traditions, yet were the objects of his sincere solicitude.

THE SPIRIT OF CO-OPERATION.

Now the preacher may often greatly help or hinder the progress of his work in the community by his attitude toward other churches. It is not a matter so much of how he regards these churches, as it is a matter of how the community regards them. He must be bound somewhat by the feeling of the community at large. And nowhere will tact be so valuable as in his treatment of this problem. It is not necessary to sacrifice any private convictions or compromise the truth in coöperating with the various ministers and churches in the popular movements of the day that look toward the betterment of the social, moral and religious life of the community, but he may greatly advance the plea for Christian union by his support of these things.

The fellowship among ministers of the various denominations is much more general and genuine than in times past. This is a good sign. And it is gratifying to note that most ministers are quite generally active in the various ministerial associations. A better acquaintance has led to a fuller appreciation on the part of all.

THE MINISTER AND HIS FELLOW MINISTERS.

Brotherliness is the foundation of true courtesy. Lyman Abbott fittingly says: "Courtesy is simply love applied to social life, to the conduct of small affairs. Good feeling and good sense underlie almost all rules of courtesy. The first thing, therefore, for one to do who wishes to develop a courteous habit is to develop good feeling and good sense. This truth finds expression in the Greek original rendered in our English Bible, "be courteous;" it is literally, "be friendly minded." Our calling being the highest, it is imperative that the highest code of ethics should obtain among us. And if this is to be true, it is necessary that we have the love and respect for each other that our high calling demands.

Absolute sincerity and open dealing should characterize us in all our relations with each other. By reflecting honor upon our calling we reflect honor upon themselves as men. The ideals of the Christian ministry should ever be upheld. If love and trust is to prevail among us we must treat each other as if we were worthy of it. Confidence is begotten by confidence. If we want the people to respect the office of the ministry we must deal with each other on such a high plane of mutual respect and love as to beget it. Where the people look with suspicion and disrespect upon the cloth it is almost always the fault of some minister who has brought disgrace upon it.

The freedom that we enjoy as preachers and congregations relative to choosing fields and pastors has given rise to abuses for which both preachers and churches are to blame. But first of all the preachers should refuse to come into competition with each other for vacant pulpits. Sometimes the preacher is led into this dishonorable thing unwittingly by the church which wants to "sample" several men before making a choice. But if the preachers would take a stand on the matter and refuse to enter into negotiations with a church so long as it is considering another man the abuse would be largely eliminated.

COMPETITION AMONG MINISTERS.

The elders of our churches should be led to see the evil effects of such unholy competition. Churches are divided, and the minister coming to a congregation under such conditions finds his work greatly hampered. Let the churches adopt a high and honorable standard in their methods of choosing a leader and the difficulty will be largely removed. It is a painful spectacle to behold an advertisement in a church paper by some good church that wants a minister, and then still more painful to learn the following week that there have been a hundred applicants for the place. Ministerial associations might do a great service both to churches and ministers by evolving some sensible method whereby the minister seeking a new field and the church wanting a pastor can be brought together.

Evangelists and pastors are often in competition for honors. Quite often one or the other feels impelled to belittle and criticise the work of the other. Is not the field large enough for us all to move in doing our particular kind of work without quarreling with our fellow workers? The result of all such bickerings is to lower the regard of both callings in the mind of the people. Can we not be content to let Paul plant, Apollos water, and still another do the reaping, so long as "God giveth the increase?"

THE PREACHER IN A NEW FIELD.

Upon entering a new field the minister has the opportunity of displaying what manner of man he is. If he is interested only in the cause and does not look upon his new field merely as a job, all will go happily. He will be willing to give his predecessor all due credit and praise for work already accomplished. But unfortunately some men have the idea that they can make themselves look large only by minimizing the work of those who have gone before him. Hence many of the glowing reports of pastors just arrived on the fields which altogether ignore anything that has ever been done in those places before.

Upon leaving a field the pastor has a still greater opportunity of showing his quality of character and his devotion to the cause. If he does everything in his power to make the way of his successor smooth, well and good. But often men either refuse to help in this way, and even erect obstructions to hinder the man that follows. Here the proper view of the ministry will help. The interest of the cause we profess to love should take precedence over all personal considerations. The preacher who looks at the matter from the right viewpoint, will try to so prepare the way that his successor may do a larger work than he was able to do. In this way he will reflect the most honor upon himself.

Then there is that troublesome question of a pastor returning to a former field for funerals and weddings when his successor is on the ground. Ordinarily friction on this point may be avoided by the leaving pastor if he leads his congregation to understand that the new man is coming to be their pastor in every sense of the word and that they are to look to him as such upon all occasions. It is generally conceded that by funerals and weddings the pastor finds his way helpfully into the hearts of his people and for this reason the new pastor ought to be left unhampered in every way by the leaving pastor. It is natural that a man who has been long in a field should be looked to with affection on the part of his congregation. He has helped bear their burdens of sorrow and mingled with them in their social activities until they look to him as their spiritual father. This is as it should be. But when a man deliberately uses the prestige he has thus acquired for his own selfish preferment, and to the detriment of the incoming pastor, he is guilty of the grossest breach of professional ethics.

A SACRED TRUST.

When a man has been several years on a field it is possible for him to reach so many homes through funerals, weddings and baptisms that he naturally intrenches himself in the affections of the people. If he abuse this sacred trust by seeking to hold on to the people after he has gone, he displays a very low conception of ministerial courtesy. It is in his power to lead the hearts of the people to love and trust the new pastor.

When a man lets go, he ought to let go for keeps.

For the good of the work, and for fear of hindering the plans of his successor, it is often necessary to refrain from keeping in touch with his friends on the field quite as much as he would naturally desire. For it is natural for his friends to ask his advice about policies, and if, perchance, he express an opinion contrary to the avowed plans of the new pastor, friction may be created at once. When a man moves he ought to pull up his tent stakes and take them with him.

But a word may be said from the other side. The incoming pastor should not regard funerals and weddings and baptisms as personal property. The rights and feelings of the people are to be considered. A funeral occasion should be viewed from the side of the mourners. This certainly is the side from which the preacher should view it. At such an hour the hearts of the bereaved naturally go out toward the dearest friend they may have in the ministry, and we should not deny them the right to have whatever comfort they may derive from this source. A cheerful acquiescence in the wishes of the family will be the means of raising their esteem and trust. However, the returning minister can do a great deal in avoiding any embarrassment for the local preacher, by seeing to it that he is given a place of honor with himself in whatever occasion he is called to participate in.

PRACTICING THE GOLDEN RULE.

Before all the evils mentioned can be corrected, we, as ministers of the Lord, will have to cultivate a better mutual understanding, get together oftener and become acquainted with each other, and then cultivate such a wholesome public and professional opinion upon these things that none will dare transgress them.

In short, the conclusion of the whole matter is for all to agree to practice the Golden Rule as well as preach it. A fuller appreciation of the true calling of the minister will help us to avoid many mistakes. Our outward bearing toward one another is indicative of our inner conceptions.

"Manners are the shadows of virtues," says Sidney Smith, and I may close the discussion with this gentle suggestion from Shakespeare:

"We need be gentle, now we are gentlemen."

The Preacher at Hotel de Chimham

Another Jeremiah Story.

BY WILLIAM E. BARTON.

YOU are wondering about that sermon which Jeremiah preached in the dining-room of the Hotel de Chimham. We have an abstract of it giving its main line of argument. Never in all his ministry did Jeremiah give to a sermon more earnest thought and prayer; and the people had promised in advance that they would do exactly what he told them. For they had reason to trust his judgment and his piety and his prophetic insight.

WHAT THEY WANTED TO HEAR.

Jeremiah knew what the people wanted him to say. They wanted him to advise them to get out of Palestine altogether and go to Egypt. They wanted him to advise them to give up the struggle, and go where the situation was not so strenuous, to migrate to a place with mild winters, and a less constant effort to keep things going. What was there in Palestine but hard efforts to keep up the interest on the mortgage and to maintain services in the church? There was peril and possible tragedy. Why not give it up? The average Jew in Jeremiah's congregation had as many friends in Egypt as the average Chicagoan has in California, and they were forever boasting about the climate, and writing all their friends to leave the land of cold winters and hard work and come where conditions of life were easier, and flowers bloomed out-of-doors all the year round.

It would have been an easy thing for Jeremiah. He would have liked to live the rest of his life in a less inhospitable climate, with conditions a little more inviting than he had recently known.

But he was sure that was not the best way.

In the first place, he did not believe it was necessary to run from the danger. Ishmael, he believed, was too thoroughly scared to return; and as for Babylon, he did not believe it would send an army just then to punish the murder of Governor Gedaliah, or that if it did, that this band of refugees would be held responsible. And he feared that if his people went down into Egypt and gave up the struggle, they would lose their religion, what little of it they still had.

WHAT THEY HEARD.

So he faced his congregation after ten days of earnest prayer, and this is what he said:

"Thus saith Jehovah, the God of Israel, unto whom ye sent me to present your supplication before him: 'If ye will still abide in this land, then will I build you, and not pull you down, and I will plant you, and not pluck you up: for I repent me of the evil that I have done unto you. Be not afraid of the king of Babylon, of whom ye are afraid: be not afraid of him, saith Jehovah: for I am with you to save you, and to deliver you from his hand. And I will grant you mercy, that he may have mercy upon you, and cause you to return to your own land.'

"But if ye say, 'We will not dwell in this land,' so that ye obey not the voice of Jehovah your God, saying, 'No; but we will go into the land of Egypt, where we shall see no war, nor hear the sound of the trumpet, nor have hunger of bread: and there will we dwell:' now, therefore, hear ye the word of Jehovah, O remnant of Judah. Thus saith Jehovah of hosts, the God of Israel, 'If ye indeed set your faces to enter into Egypt, and go to sojourn there; then it shall come to pass, that the sword, which ye fear, shall overtake you there in the land of Egypt; and the famine, whereof ye are afraid, shall follow hard after you there in Egypt; and there ye shall die. So shall it be with all the men that set their faces to go into Egypt to sojourn there: they shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence; and none of them shall remain or escape from the evil that I will bring upon them.'"

You will remember that the people had promised the minister that they would follow his advice. They meant to do it. But sometimes when people promise that they mean that they will take the advice if it pleases them.

During the ten days that Jeremiah was working over that sermon public sentiment had not been all one way. There were those who recalled their long standing prejudice against Jeremiah; and while it did not seem a propitious time to say anything about that, it broke forth in a burst of vehemence against Baruch. They said that if Jeremiah was not a mugwump, Baruch was; and they were sure that Jeremiah was getting senile and Baruch was writing his sermons.

TALKING IT OVER.

So when Jeremiah finished his sermon, strongly opposing their proposed migration to Egypt, the burst of popular disapproval was instantaneous. The people replied to Jeremiah with vigor and without very much courtesy. They said:

"'Thou speakest falsely; Jehovah our God hath not sent thee to say, Ye shall not go into Egypt to sojourn there; but Baruch, the son of Neriah, setteth thee on against us, to deliver us into the hand of the Chaldeans, that they may put us to death, and carry us away captive to Babylon.'

"So Johanan, the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, and all the people, obeyed not the voice of Jehovah, to dwell in the land of Judah. But Johanan, the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces took all the remnant of Judah, that were returned from all the nations whither they had been driven, to sojourn in the land of Judah; the men, and the women, and the children, and the king's daughters, and every person that Nebuzaradan, the captain of the guard, had left with Gedaliah, the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan; and Jeremiah the prophet, and Baruch, the son of Neriah.

"And they came into the land of Egypt; for they obeyed not the voice of Jehovah: and they came unto Tahpanhes."

I wish I could tell you that Captain John took a different attitude from that of the people. He had some elements of nobility, and I could wish that he had stood up for Jeremiah at this time. But he did not. He joined in the popular clamor. The people had had enough of war, of struggle and disappointment. They looked over the list of picture postcards which their friends had sent back from Egypt, and kept saying it must be out-of-doors all the year round, and not be bothered about so many things as perplexed them in Palestine. So they decided to move.

TAKING HIS ADVICE.

They told Jeremiah he was a back number, and from that time on the hotel waiters seldom answered his bell unless he tipped them in advance. Those last days of Jeremiah in the hotel at Bethlehem were very lonely days. I sometimes wonder if toward the end they did not ask him to give up his room and move to the third floor back.

If so, he was not the last worthy person who was treated inhospitably in that hotel; for it was that very inn, as I suppose, to which there came nearly six hundred years later a Galilean carpenter and his bride, seeking lodging for the night; and there was no room for them in that same hotel. There was no room for Joseph and Mary even on the third floor back. So in the stable of that same hotel Jesus was born.

The people told Jeremiah they were going to Egypt, no matter what he said. And they went.

What do you think Jeremiah did when the people made that answer to his sermon? You think he resigned and sought another congregation? He certainly had sufficient provocation. But he did not resign. He stayed with his people, foolish and unappreciative as they were. And they wanted him to stay; for in a way they believed in him.

Do you remember what happened when the men lost their religion and the women went over to a new religion which was awfully cute, and what Jeremiah said about it? I am having to tell you a great many things which you could have gotten yourself out of the Bible. However, we are nearing the end and I may as well tell you the rest of the story.

But first, I wish you would stop and think for a week over this question, Were the people really to blame for not knowing that Jeremiah was really a true prophet and treating him as such? How could they have been expected to know? How would you have known, if you had been there?

WHAT WOULD YOU HAVE DONE?

Let me talk to you plainly. I have discovered during these chats about Jeremiah that behind your pretended reverence for the prophets you conceal a mighty and wholly inexcusable ignorance. You pretend to honor the prophets and to treat their messages as the word of God, but you are just about as ignorant of Jeremiah as you are of the Book of Mormon or the Koran, and you have never taken pains to understand it. What I have been telling you was not anything hard to find out; it is all in the Bible in plain English, and I have merely changed the stage setting a trifle, made it a little more modern so that you could see how very simple it all is.

Now don't tell me that it has been your reverence for the Bible that has kept you from knowing this before, because you know where people go who tell that sort of story. It was sheer indolence. The book is not hard to understand, except that parts of it are in chronological disorder, and it is difficult to keep the connection.

Now be honest. If you had lived in Jeremiah's day, would you have stood by him or opposed him?

He was one of many prophets, and most of them said the very reverse of what he said. Would you have believed Jeremiah? How would you have known that he was the real prophet of the Lord?

Just think over that question a little. How would you have known that Jeremiah was a true prophet?

You ought not merely not to fear death—that is a poor attainment. If the soul could really be alive in you, death would be lighted up with glory as the day when that soul is to enter into its own.—Phillips Brooks.

A Prayer for Newspaper Men and Writers

(From "The American Magazine")

BY WALTER RAUSCHENBUSCH.

O THOU great source of truth and knowledge, we remember before thee the writers of books, newspaper men, and all whose calling it is to gather and winnow facts and to inform the people. Grant them a determined love for honest work and a staunch hatred for the making of lies, lest they pervert the judgments of our nation and teach us to call light darkness and darkness light. Suffer them not to drug the mind of our people with falsehood and prejudice. Since the sanity and wisdom of a nation are in their charge, may they count it shame to set the baser passions of men on fire for the sake of gain.

Grant them boldness to turn the unwelcome light on those who love the darkness because their deeds are evil. Put into their hands the shining sword of truth, and make them worthy sons of the champions of the people in the past who held truth to be a holy thing for which men should die. Make them realize that they have a public function in the commonwealth, and that their country may be saved by their courage and undone by their cowardice and silence.

Grant them the heart of manhood to cast their mighty influence with forces which make the people strong and free, and if they suffer loss, may they rejoice in that as proof to their own souls that they too have been friends of the common man and servants of the higher law.

Give the Mothers and Children a Chance

THE uppermost picture represents a typical basement tenement in Chicago, the home where fresh air, trees, grass, and most of God's blessings do not enter. What chance has this little boy or girl in life, living under such difficult conditions, with insufficient food, no play ground except the street, and surrounded by temptations and all manner of vice?

There are in Chicago thousands of just such families, who will suffer terribly from the blazing heat, unless our readers can contribute a little to help them. There are mothers with babies who cannot afford to buy milk or ice. Many of these babies will die if left in the city.

Contrast this with the picture below, taken at Camp Algonquin, Algonquin, Ill. This beautiful spot is located on the prettiest part of the Fox Rixer where there are great shade trees, lots of grass, opportunities for bathing, rowing, etc. In this camp there are accommodations for several hundred mothers and children. The best medical care is given, and there is plenty of milk and good wholesome food. Mothers can rest and recover their health, and the children can romp and play on the grass and in the swimming pool. We who live in comfortable homes, away from congested tenement districts have no conception of how these poor people suffer from the heat, and what a blessing an outing at Camp Algonquin means to them.

Do you want to enjoy your vacation as you never have before by making it possible for a few pale faced boys and girls, or some worn-out mothers and their wan babies to get away from the arid treeless districts out into God's green country? $100 will send fifty sick mothers with all their children to this summer hospital for convalescence for ten days. $5 will give five or ten poor children an outing on the farm or at Camp Algonquin. $10 will do twice as much.

A Typical Tenement Home in the Most Congested Part of Chicago.

It is evident from these figures that the United Charities know how to make a dollar buy or do the work of two dollars when it comes to vacations for needy mothers and their children.

During the next few weeks we want to send at least ten thousand of the needy poor out of the killing heat of summer into the restoring freshness of the country, under Christian influences.

If God has prospered you this year, or if you have anything to be thankful for, won't you express your thanks to him by helping to save some of his unfortunate children this summer, and make it possible for some mothers and their children to escape from the heat of the city to this blessed retreat.

"We Ain't Mad At Nobody."

Use the coupon below if you like, and send your check for as much as you can afford to Mr. Eugene T. Lies, Genl. Supt. of the United Charities, Chicago, Ill.

EDITORIAL

CHRISTIAN UNITY THROUGH THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL

ATTENDING the inspiring sessions of the International Sunday-school Convention has given all Chicago religious editors an enlarged outlook upon the significance of the Sunday-school. The editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate sees in the Sunday-school the proper field for planting the seeds of Christian unity. In a leading editorial that paper makes one of the most sensible and attractive proposals for coöperative Christian work which has yet appeared. It declares for a union Sunday-school. It sees the Sunday-school idea undergoing great expansion in the modern Church through the introduction of graded lessons. The Sunday-school is now at the "unfolding hour." Great possibilities are before it.

> New and modern educational ideas are flowing into the organization. The whole thing is expanding. The old idea of one lesson for all, from the tot to the patriarch, taught by anyone who was willing, whether qualified or not, and the whole school sitting in a babble of voices, is fast becoming obsolete. Not only has the International Sunday School Association adopted the graded system, but different denominations have begun to work out this particular expression in their own schools. The development of the different grades into kindergarten, primary, intermediate, adult and Bible departments, with separate lesson helps and equipment for each, requires permanent, new, and larger quarters for proper utilization. A few churches are fairly well constructed and furnished to meet the present-day demand, but, as a rule, the church building as we have it today is woefully ill-adapted to house an expanding Sunday school. But the forward movement in Sunday school work is so vital that it must result in reform in church school construction. We may confidently expect to see a large amount of Sunday school building in the next decade—building either as part of the original church structure, or separate.

The Advocate looks with dismay upon the needless duplication of Sunday-school buildings by various denominations in a given community and suggests that just here is the great chance for the churches to > fold their denominational differences in a napkin, join hands, hearts and money in the erection of a common school house adequate for the combined community and constructed after the most improved pattern; then each furnish its quota of teachers and gather all the children under one roof for a serious investigation of the Word.

Who would dare prophesy the result of such an enterprise? the Advocate asks. Certainly the spectacle of an entire town in one school of religious education would be a demonstration of the essential unity of the evangelical churches. And such an enterprise would grow into a social center of wonderful leavening influence throughout the whole community. "We are positive," continues the Advocate, "a decade or two would suffice to so spiritually weld an ordinary community that the theory of federation would have developed into the fact of federation, and that, in turn, have resulted in a practical union."

> Practical and effective union is impossible today because of inherited and cultivated peculiarities of mental approach to spritual problems in the adult. But the child possesses none of this. The mind and heart are plastic and devoid of dogmatic bent. And if ever the Church of Jesus Christ is to get very far beyond the frigid beauty of theoretical federation or denominational union, it will undoubtedly be wrought out in the child mind and heart; and no organization today so prominently reaches all branches of the Christian church as the Sunday school, which thus possesses the supreme opportunity to try out the much-praised doctrine of oneness in Christ.

Theer is no doubt at all that the rank and file of the church people are fully ready for such a practical move as this, and the earnest plea for it from a representative denominational paper indicates that official inhibitions are not so strong as they used to be.

BASEBALL'S BIRTHDAY.

WE HAD forgotten that baseball could have a birthday. It seemed to have come over in the Mayflower, or to have followed as a corollary from the Declaration of Independence. But the Associated Press reminds us that the first game of baseball on record was played sixty-eight years ago, on June 19, 1846. It was an evolution, doubtless, from that prehistoric amusement "four old cat" which, from a simpler game of "one old cat" had evolved into a square field, with the runners making the circuit of the bases.

The first game was between the Knickerbocker and New York clubs in the Elysian fields at Hoboken, N. J. The players were members of the leading New York families and engaged in the sport as a pastime. A bevy of town belles in the group of spectators made the occasion seem like a social function.

The field was marked off into the baseball diamond familiar today. None of the players wore gloves, masks, or protectors. It was the custom for the batter to say where he wanted the ball thrown. The pitcher, or "giver," as he was then called, delivered it with an underhand toss, according to the rules of the game. It was thought that the pitcher had an unfair advantage over the batter when he threw the ball overhand, hence the rule.

The catcher stood at a safe distance behind the batter, ready to catch the ball on the first bound. The rules dictated that if he caught the third strike on the first bound the batter was out; otherwise he must throw to first base to put him out. Likewise, the fielders, or "scouts," were permitted to catch hits on the first bound. Three outs retired the side.

The team that first scored twenty-one runs, or "aces," regardless of the number of innings played, was accounted the winner. After the game the players resorted to one of the famous taverns of the day, where the victors had a dinner at the expense of the vanquished.

Baseball is a good game. It has been kept free from gambling, and it compels its successful players to live a clean and temperate life. It inculcates worthy ideals in American youth. We count it a worthy institution, and one that is peculiarly an expression of our American life. We have come a far cry from the days when a tip and a ketch was sure to fetch, and over the fence was out, but still the game is young.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

THE Epworth League is celebrating its twenty-fifth anniversary at Buffalo this week. Thousands of young Methodists are gathered there. The Epworth League is a mistake. It was born of a sectarian motive. Methodist young people should today be called Christian Endeavorers, and would be so called but for the exercise of bigoted ecclesiastical power which took them bodily out of the interdenominational Christian Endeavor movement and securely hedged them about inside their own denominational fence.

Had the spirit of the Northwestern Christian Advocate's editorial, from which we quote elsewhere, been the spirit of the Methodism of twenty-five years ago there would never have been an Epworth League.

THE SOCIAL GOSPEL.

UNTIL a comparatively recent date, men with practical unanimity believed the earth to be the center of the universe, with all the heavenly bodies revolving round it. It was a simple and logical system, and explained a considerable body of phenomena. It had in its favor the apparent testimony of the senses, and the unbroken record of preceding generations, who were all sure that they had seen the sun rise and set with unfailing regularity, and the earth had remained stationary. Simple and logical as the theory was, and widely as it was held, and stoutly defended, it was wrong. We may not forever hold the Copernican theory, but we have forever discarded the Ptolemaic. The sun may not be, probably is not, the center of any large portion of the universe, but the earth certainly is not. When we change our theories we shall change to something larger; we shall never go back to the smaller and outgrown hypotheses.

There are two theories of moral action which may be called the Ptolemaic, and the Copernican; one is the theory that each man lives for himself, and the other is the theory that life has a center of good round which all life revolves, each one finding its mission in its relation to the whole. The Ptolemaic, the self-centered theory, has many zealous advocates, but it is wrong. It is wrong, not because it is destitute of truth, but because it accounts for only a segment of life. A theory that accounts for all life must be vastly larger.

"No man dieth unto himself." That sounds absurd. One by one men go forth out of life, isolated and unaccompanied. Yet few indeed are the funerals where no tears were shed; and if there were any where there was rejoicing instead, still it would be true that the death of the unloved man showed the relation of his life to others. It is said that no bullet on the battlefield kills a man but it finds the heart of a woman somewhere.

Men sometimes take their own lives on the theory that their lives are their own. There never was known a suicide that did not involve sorrow, humiliation and bitterness to some one, and the shifting of a load from the man whose duty it was to bear it, to some one else with burdens of his own. Your life is not your own. It belongs to all whom it may help or hinder. Live it, bravely, faithfully, heroically.

THE REPORT OF THE BALKAN COMMISSION.

A COMMISSION of inquiry was appointed in the summer of 1913 to investigate the conditions in the Balkan States and determine how far the shocking reports of massacres and atrocities were actually true. The commission was international in character, being composed of representatives of Great Britain, France, Russia and the United States and was appointed to investigate and determine how far the shocking reports of atrocities alleged to have been committed in the Balkan war were actual occurences. Its report has been drawn up and is now ready for circulation.

The contents are sufficiently horrifying. Atrocities have been committed in the Balkan States and outrages have taken place. The commission has been able to give a more accurate and detailed account of the situation and to fill in the vague reports given out by the press, but it has not found that these reports were without foundation, although they were, of course, in many cases exaggerated. "War under exceptional circumstances," said Mr. Brailsford, "produced something worse than its normal results." Women and children were brutally massacred, villages reduced to heaps of ruins and the countries absolutely impoverished. "The Turkish war and the war of the Allies constituted a ghastly chapter of horrors. Both among the regular troops and the irregular bands which accompanied the armies, there were many of low, criminal and even bestial type, with no human feeling and no care for civilized standards, who were ready at all times to do atrocious deeds. . . . There is evidence to show that in some cases these acts were committed by soldiers acting under orders."

"When a band of soldiers or comitadjis, either under orders, or, as was many times the case, under the impulse of hatred, greed and lust, surrounded and attacked a village, the very doors of hell seemed to be opened. No language can describe the tortures and griefs which followed. Repeated instances of death by fright of girls and young children attest the horror of the orgy of crime which was enacted. In one house in Doxato, to which fifty persons had fled for safety, all but one little girl, Chrisanthe Audom, were slaughtered like beasts in the shambles. In the same town a well-to-do family of thirteen owned and occupied one of the best houses. After extorting £3,000 from the head of the family on the promise that they would be spared, the soldiers proceeded to kill them all. These are typical instances of the many which are found in the depositions contained in the appendices." There is also a long series of reports of the torturing, mutilating and slaying of wounded soldiers and instances of ill-treatment of prisoners.

The report also contains an account of the ethnography of the Balkans and a history of the causes of the war. In its entirety it constitutes an important historical document as well as a revelation of the horrors of war.

DENOMINATIONAL HARI KARI.

OF the leading evangelical denominations probably none is more conspicuously unaffected by the trend of modern sentiment toward Christian union than the Baptist denomination. Southern Baptists poured out great floods of praise upon an address delivered at their recent convention, in which it was gravely counselled that Baptists still had a very vital function to perform in the world, a function distinct from all other Christians. The brethren were warned to be chary as to the lengths they allow themselves to go in coöperation with non-Baptists, lest their "distinctive principles" be sacrificed!

And here comes so respectable and in many ways so open-minded a newspaper as the Standard of Chicago—by all odds the most respectable and open-minded journal in the American Baptist denomination—declaring editorially that "the Baptist denomination is not yet ready to commit hari kari—not even for the greater good of the kingdom of God."

Over against that utterance let us put this from the Northwestern Christian Advocate:

> In a community where there are three or four denominational organizations with friendly and sympathetic relations existing, each needing improved quarters for its school, the plan [a union Sunday school for the entire community] could be adopted and executed without delay. There would probably be a partial loss to the denomination at large in that a number are to be deducted from the total registration, but we must remember that that is part of the plan. The first question is, How can the Kingdom be best set up in a community?

Nothing would bring such rejoicing in heaven and so prompt realization of the kingdom of God on earth as the literal commission of "denominational hari kari" by our dear Baptist brethren and the Methodists and Presbyterians and all the rest.

Our denominationalism is in the way of the Kingdom of God. Let it get out of the way!

MAYOR NATHAN.

ERNEST NATHAN, former mayor of Rome, has arrived in New York City, under appointment of King Victor Emmanuel to represent the interests of Italy at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

Mr. Nathan was elected mayor on an anti-Catholic platform in 1907, and has served continuously until his resignation a short time ago. So far as we know he is an entirely suitable person to represent his country in this fashion and wherever he goes he deserves that courtesy in this country which is befitting his rank and mission.

There is, however, a desperate protest on the part of some bigoted Roman Catholics and a demand that on his account all Romanists absent themselves from the San Francisco Fair. A Roman Catholic paper in New York is endeavoring to create such a boycott and it appears to have some support in circles of that denomination. Whether the fair would be seriously injured by their absence we do not undertake to say, but we register our emphatic protest against any attempt to determine the proper status of any foreign representative on the basis of his religious opinions.

Mr. Nathan was received with great enthusiasm by a large delegation, but Mayor Mitchel, of New York, found it convenient to be out of town on the day when he arrived.

Northern Baptists Discuss Education.

The big question at the recent convention of Northern Baptists at Boston seems to be that of education. Two or three years ago the convention appointed an Education Board, with Rev. Frank W. Padelford, of Boston, as chairman. During the years of his service, Dr. Padelford has been making an investigation of the Baptist schools of the country, and is seeking to enlist the body of the brotherhood in support of them. One of the delegates at Boston created a tumult by rising to his feet and stating that he did not know a single Baptist school that he would wish to see a son enter because they were all more or less tainted. This wild statement was greeted with cries of "No, No," and the speaker was enthusiastically asked to sit down. The Baptist Standard (Chicago) presents the following editorial on the importance of the report of the Education Board: "The report presents to the denomination a great and insistent task— a task to the importance of which we have not as yet fully awakened. It is evident that there are still many regions where there is need of education on education. There is, even in 1914, a lingering distrust of the results of modern educational methods and we have not as yet fully outgrown the tendency to exalt evangelism at the expense of education and the assumption that for some reason one is opposed to the other. But a bare beginning has thus far been made. Hardly more than $8,500 has been spent by the board of education during the past year, largely in coöperation with several state conventions in the maintenance of a ministry to the thousands of Baptist students in our state universities. This, however, is but a small part of the great and insistent task confronting the Baptists of the North. If our Baptist colleges are to be continued with that recognized degree of efficiency demanded by the educational standards of the modern state, not less than several million dollars are needed in the immediate future. The securing of these funds is imperative if we are to give our children the education to which they are entitled, and which will ensure our denomination the leadership it must have."

Can Unitarians and Congregationalists Unite?

The recent demand on the part of some leaders of the Unitarian Church has brought forth from some the suggestion that Unitarians unite with the Congregationalists. In New England, where the two fellowships are very closely intertwined, the suggestion does not seem entirely impractical. The Congregationalist reports that, at the May meetings in Boston, which are the great eccelsiastical gatherings of Unitarianism, a definite proposition was made by Rev. Thomas Ven Ness, pastor of the Second Unitarian Church of Brookline, that the name "Unitarian" should be dropped, and that the orthodox Congregationalists should be invited to abandon the minor "doctrinal and creedal statements drawn up by their grandfathers." The Congregationalist has something to say regarding such possibilities: "To the right of a body of churches to call themselves by any name they please, so long as it implies no exclusive claims to Christ and his authority, we could not as Congregationalists, even if we desired, make objections. We have never felt that the name 'Unitarian' was a happy denominational designation. From our point of view the principal objection to Dr. Van Ness's proposal would be that it might tend to popular confusion of thought. Were the Unitarian churches to call themselves Congregational, the public must often be misled in regard to real differences of purpose and point of view. That, however, is a matter for the Unitarian churches to consider in their own interest. Outside of New England, outside, indeed, of Eastern Massachusetts, the comparative rarity of Unitarian churches, except in the great cities, might greatly minimize this difficulty. We have no desire at this time to enter into a discussion of the doctrinal points at issue between the two groups of churches and schools of thought. It may be well, however, to put on record what seem to us the distinctive qualities which lie at the heart of Congregationalism. The Congregational churches that can best fulfill their mission of service to Christ in helping to build up the kingdom of God, in America and in the world, rest upon the acceptance of Christ as the full revelation of God's character and purpose and the living and active leader of the church in its work. Their ultimate purpose in education and in evangelism alike is to bring men into personal relations with Christ and to make him the supreme ruler of moral life and social methods. Christ is king in his own church. All those who are in sympathy with us in this purpose of loyalty to Christ as the revealer of the loving fatherhood of God and promoter of the active brotherhood of man that calls for justice and for love are entirely welcome in our wide and comprehensive Congregational brotherhood."

Missions At Lake Geneva.

The Missionary Education Movement announces its programs of speakers, teachers, and leaders for its tenth Annual Summer Conference at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, August 4 to 13, 1914. Among the platform speakers announced are: Dr. James M. Stifler of Evanston, Illinios; Dr. Edgar Blake, General Secretary of the Board of Sunday Schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Miss Helen Patten, Missionary Superintendent of the Board of Sunday Schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church, both of Chicago; Rev. W. E. Doughty, Educational Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, of New York; Dr. Bruce Kinney, of Topeka, Kansas; Miss Ina E. Burton, of Chicago; Dr. J. Y. Aitchison, District Secretary of the American Baptist Mission Societies, of Chicago; Rev. A. L. Wiley, of India; Mr. Sam Higginbottom, of India; Rev. and Mrs. Herbert A. Hoisington, of Africa; Rev. E. A. Sidley, of the Philippines; Rev. A. C. Darrow, of Burma, and others. The central theme of the conference this year is "The Social Force of Christian Missions," with the slogan "Christ for every life and all of life." All the work of the conference is in preparation for the educational campaign of 1914-15, in which practically all the Mission Boards of the United States are united through a special Committee of Twenty-eight representing the Foreign Missions Conference, the Home Missions Council, the Federation of Women's Boards, and the Council of Women for Home Missions. One of the features will be a miniature Indian camp, so that those delegates may study the history of the American Indians and missionary work among them. Practically all mission fields at home and abroad will be represented in some effective way on the program.

Bible Circulation Growing.

The board of managers of the American Bible Society recently requested Dr. William I. Haven to visit during this coming autumn and winter the society's agencies in the far east, including Japan, Korea, China, the Philippines, Siam. He will sail Aug. 15. In these far eastern agencies last year the society circulated 2,261,507 volumes; in the levant agency, 156,926 volumes, making a total in these eastern agencies of 2,418,523 volumes. In these fields the society is in coöperation with the missionaries in the translation and revision of the scriptures. The Japanese scriptures published by the society are now undergoing revision by a competent committee. The Korean Bible, only recently completed, is being perfected. Two committees are at work on the leading Chinese versions (the society carries on its list seventeen Chinese versions). In the Philippines the society has translated the Scriptures in whole or in part into ten languages and dialects; in Siam into two, and in the levant the society has thirty languages on its list.

Dr. Mott's Program.

After the Edinburgh Continuation Committee met at Lake Mohonk in this country in the fall of 1912, Dr. John R. Mott, its chairman, started to the orient under the committee's commission to hold a series of conferences with missionaries in India, China, Korea, and Japan, which have since been recognized as exerting an epoch making influence on mission labor in all these countries. This coming September, the Continuation Committee will meet in England, and from that Mr. Mott will immediately set forth to a series of conferences in the near east of the same character as those which he held two years ago in the far east. Algiers, Cairo, Beirut and Constantinople will be the main points visited, and to each place a group of seventy-five to 100 missionary workers of all denominations will be drawn to take counsel on the big current questions of mission policy. On this tour, as on the tour of the further orient, Dr. Mott will take time for evangelistic meetings with the students of both missionary and government colleges. Dr. Mott's companion and assistant on the former tour, Sherwood Eddy, will not accompany him this year. Mr. Eddy, instead, is going back to the student populations with whom his work had great influence two years ago.

Chicago Growing Religious.

The Sunday Evening Club of Chicago, which maintains a great downtown Sunday evening service in Orchestra Hall, has closed its seventh season with an aggregate attendance of 80,000, or an average per Sunday evening of 2,500. Mr. Clifford W. Barnes, president of the club, reports that the attendance remains much the same whether the speaker be one of national reputation or one known only in his own locality for notable work.

Seven Millions for Cathedral.

Will the investment pay? Not all Episcopalians approve, it is reported, the great expenditure being made in connection with the building of the cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York City. So far there has been an expenditure of about seven million dollars and other millions will be required before the scheme is completed. A monthly periodical of the Church discusses the subject of so great an outlay in this way as follows: "If we were spending this money on men, not monuments, what a missionary work would it not do. We do not realize how simple is the necessary apparatus of the Church. A great preacher could convert his thousands from the court house steps. The sacraments can be celebrated in the parish churches or in the country school house or in the homes of the people. The thing is to get the real work done and the real work does not require stone, but men. Before the New York Cathedral is finished twice as much will have been expended as hitherto. The Church in the country districts is shrinking away. In the metropolis they are closing up and selling chapels and churches. The stones grow up into the cathedral building. The living stones are not built up into this Church. If the process were long enough carried on there would be an awful monument of mingled architecture, but the inscription would be In Memoriam."

Summer Bible School at Winona.

The summer Bible school, held in connection with the Chautauqua program at Winona Lake, Ind., July 6-Aug. 20, will be in charge of the extension department of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. Among the faculty are Dr. James M. Gray, dean of Moody Institute; Rev. L. W. Gosnell, Rev. B. B. Sutcliffe, F. N. Palmer, D. D., former director of the Winona Bible School; also Rev. "Bob" Jones, evangelist, and Parley E. Zartmann, D. D., secretary of the extension department. The aim of the work is to develop the spirit of Bible study as well as to provide instruction which will increase knowledge of and faith in the fundamentals of Christianity. A leaflet of information can be obtained from 153-163 Institute place, Chicago.

Facts From the International Sunday School Field

REPORTED BY MARION LAWRANCE, GENERAL SECRETARY.

Every State and Province has a paid General Secretary of its own, except the more sparsely settled States of New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, Utah and Wyoming.

We have a record of 1,690,739 Sunday-school officers and teachers, showing a gain of 19,893 over the record of three years ago.

The total Sunday School enrollment of North America is 18,441,036, being a gain of 1,823,686, meaning that 1,665 new members join our Sunday Schools for every day of the year.

The Home Department shows a membership of 788,057, being a gain of 143,640.

The Cradle Rolls now number over 44,000 with an enrollment of over a million. This indicates a gain of 347,000.

Two thousand five hundred ninety-two counties of the 3,442 counties in our field are now organized and out of these 1,122 counties have reached the banner standard indicating that they are fully covered with township, city or district organizations. This is a gain of 51 counties organized and 72 banner counties. Three hundred and eleven cities have organizations of their own, being an increase of 74.

The number of Sunday School Conventions held during the last triennium reaches the enormous figure of 58,435. This shows a gain of 5,055. This means that we are holding 19,478 Conventions annually or an average of over 50 Conventions a day, including State, Provincial, County, Township and City.

The total number of Sunday Schools reported is disappointing, the number being 175,685, or a gain of 2,226.

The average attendance of the Sunday Schools is not what we would like it to be. The figures indicate 9,394,747, which is just about 50 per cent of the enrollment. The enrollment, however, includes the Home Department and the Cradle Roll.

Decision Day, or its equivalent, was observed during the triennium in 28,302 Sunday Schools.

One great occasion for rejoicing is that according to the figures there were added to the church from the Sunday School by conversion and confirmation, during the triennium, 1,055,444. This is a decrease from our last report of about 140,000. However, the figures are encouraging. They indicate that about 6,765 of our scholars unite with our churches every Sunday during the year.

The number of schools holding worker's meetings weekly is reported as 18,864.

There has been a large gain in the number of departments reported as using the Graded Lessons. We report 16,869 Beginners' Departments as against 10,234 given in our last report, also 18,578 Primary Departments as against 8,773 and 17,763 Junior Departments as against 7,310. This shows a total gain in Departments using the Graded Lessons of 26,893, or a trifle over 100 per cent. In addition to the above there are reported 5,914 Intermediate Departments and 3,625 Senior Departments using the Graded Lessons.

There are 171 Graded Unions reported with a membership of 6,238. Three years ago we reported 179 Graded Unions, and six years ago 258.

The Secondary Division reports 10,416 organized classes with a registration of 93,345.

The Adult Department has made a great gain in its organized classes, reporting 43,517 as against 22,567. Six hundred and sixty-one classes are reported as having disbanded. The total registration of adult classes is 819,061. The estimated membership of Adult classes not organized is 1,116,316.

The number of First Standard Diplomas granted for teacher training is 31,321, a gain of 4,313.

The number of Advanced Standard Diplomas granted is 1,905, a gain of 1,435.

There have been 4,035 seals granted for specialization in Teacher Training.

City Training Schools have been held in 63 cities, and have enrolled 13,930.

The number of schools reporting definite missionary instruction is 18,597.

Home Visitation has been carried on in 156 cities and 72 counties, reaching 16,856,000 people.

When we were half way through the triennium we instituted a pledge-signing campaign, hoping to reach a million pledge signers for the triennium. We are glad to report 1,049,314.

There are 97 Superintendents' Associations in cities and towns. Seven of our Associations report having Superintendents' Departments and 33 have not.

Number of paid workers giving full time to the Organized Sunday School Work, 189, a gain of 35. Number of paid workers giving part of time, 132, a gain of 89, showing a gain since our last report of 124 workers paid for part and full time.

Of Human Interest

Capitalizing Correspondence.

Annoyed by the injury done to one of his trees by the driver of the local 'bus, Mr. Kipling wrote a vigorous letter of complaint to the 'bus owner, who is also landlord of an inn. The landlord sold the letter for ten shillings in cash. A second and stronger letter followed; and this also found a purchaser, this time at £1, as befitted its increased violence. Boniface again said nothing. To him next day entered Mr. Kipling, briskly wrathful. "Why didn't I answer your letters, sir? Why, I was hoping you'd send me a fresh one. They pay a deal better than 'bus driving!"

Paderewski's Repartee.

Quickness in repartee has been credited to Paderewski. A gentleman once introduced the pianist to the champion polo player of England, and added, "You are both leaders of your separate professions, though they are, of course, very different.' "Not so very different," quickly responded the great pianist. "My new friend is a dear soul who plays polo, whereas I am a dear Pole who plays solo."

Very Mad, Indeed.

Sir Morell Mackenzie at an "at home" chanced to converse with a celebrated authoress, who introduced herself with these words: "I am John Strange Winter." Sir Morell did not read novels, and gazed at her wonderingly. She added, "'Bootles' Baby,' you know." "Yes, yes, of course," he answered soothingly. He afterward remarked to his hostess that the poor lady was very mad, indeed. First, she had told him that she was a man, then that she was somebody's baby.

A Mark Twain Riddle.

Mark Twain once sent this note to his familiar friend, Rev. Dr. Joseph K. Jerichell, of Hartford, Conn.:

"Dear Joe: Religious conundrum suggested by my present disease. Question: If a congress of Presbyterians is a presbytery, what is a congress of dissenters? Answer: A dysentery.

Joe, you can sell the above to some religious paper or get it off on Dean Sage as original.

"Yrs. ever, MARK."

Villa's Home-Made Money.

When Villa proclaimed himself military governor of the state of Chihuahua he began the extraordinary experiment—extraordinary because he knew nothing about it—of creating a government for 400,000 people out of his own head. It has often been said that Villa succeeded because he had educated advisers. As a matter of fact he was almost alone. What advisers he had spent most of their time answering his eager questions and doing what he told them, writes John Reed in the Metropolitan Magazine.

There was the financial question. It came to Villa in this way. He noticed all of a sudden that there was no money in circulation. The farmers who produced meat and vegetables refused to come into the city markets any more because no one had any money to buy from them. The truth was that those possessing silver or Mexican bank notes buried them in the ground. Chihuahua not being a manufacturing center, and the few factories there having closed down, there was nothing which could be exchanged for food. So, like a blight, the paralysis of the production of food began all at once and actual starvation stared at the town populations. I remember hearing vaguely of several highly elaborate plans for the relief of this condition put forward by Villa's advisers. He himself said, "Why, if all they need is money, let's print some." So they inked up the printing press in the basement of the Governor's palace and ran off two million pesos on strong paper, with Villa's name printed across the middle in large letters.

This first issue of currency was guaranteed by absolutely nothing but the name of Francisco Villa. It was issued chiefly to revive the petty commerce of the state so that the poor people could get food. And yet almost immediately it was bought by the banks of El Paso at 18 and 19 cents on the dollar because Villa guaranteed it.

Of course he knew nothing of the accepted ways of getting his money into circulation. He began to pay the army with it. Then on Christmas Day he called the poor people of Chihuahua together and gave them $15 apiece outright. Then he issued a short decree, ordering the acceptance of his money at par throughout the state. The succeeding Saturday the market places of Chihuahua and the other nearby towns swarmed with farmers and with buyers. Villa issued another proclamation, fixing the price of beef at seven cents a pound, milk at five cents a quart and bread at four cents a loaf. There was no famine in Chihuahua. But the big merchants, who had timidly reopened their stores for the first time since his entry into Chihuahua, placarded their goods with two sets of price-marks—one for Mexican silver money and bank bills and the other for "Villa money." He stopped that by another decree, ordering sixty days' imprisonment for anybody who discriminated against his currency.

The New Idea.

"Uncle Joe" Cannon, chewing a long cigar vigorously, said in Danville:

"These young Socialists and anarchists and what-not want to run the world. And a pretty mess they'd make of it, with their 'hunger strikes' and 'silence patrols' and what-not. Why, they've got no experience."

Uncle Joe smiled a grim smile.

"We used to say that you were never too old to learn," he grumbled. "Nowadays the idea seems to be that you're never too young to teach."

Kipling on the Ideal Man.

This is one ideal for the Christian; it is from a speech on explorers, by Rudyard Kipling. "A man had been asked why he invariably followed a well-known man into the most uncomfortable situations; he had replied: 'All the years I have known So-and-so, I've never known him to say whether he was cold or hot, wet or dry, sick or well, but I've never known him to forget a man who was.'"

Hard on the Archbishop.

When Dr. Randall Davidson, archbishop of Canterbury, was a curate, one day at Dartford he took a Sunday-school class in a neighboring parish. The subject was "King Solomon," and after the lesson he proceeded to catechise the children.

"Tell me, boys," he said, "what was the difference between Solomon and other men?" No answer. "Come, come!" said the future archbishop. "Was there any difference, for instance, between King Solomon and myself?"

A tiny hand went up, and a tiny voice replied, "Please, sir, Solomon was wise!"

Latest News of Dr. Wu.

An amusing glimpse of the "safe and sane" policy which Wu Tingfang, diplomat and, recently, author, is pursuing amid the turmoil of Republican China is given in "My Lady of the Chinese Courtyard" (Stokes). The lady Kwei-li writes:

"Wu Tingfang was here and talked long into the night with my husband. My son says of the great man that he is with the party that is 'on top,' that he spends most of his time sitting on the fence—whatever that may mean. I drove past his house the other day and did not see him sitting on the fence, but on his veranda, calmly drinking tea."

Princess and Prize Fighter.

A rather amusing anecdote is related of Princess Troubetzkoy (Amelie Rives, author of "World's End"). For a number of years she was in delicate health, and the family servants, who are extremely fond of her, were very solicitous. On one occasion the coachman was introduced to John L. Sullivan, the ex-prize fighter. "Do you know what would be good for a little lady who is not well," said the coachman. Mr. Sullivan immediately prescribed his own series of setting-up exercises, and the coachman came back glowing with the conviction that this cure must be infallible. The Princess was, of course, careful to hide her smile and was sincerely grateful for the trouble taken. It is distinctly amusing to imagine the small and delicately featured woman practicing Mr. Sullivan's exercise.

Getting Them Mixed.

A member of the Nebraska Legislature was making a speech on some momentous question, and, in concluding, said:

"In the words of Daniel Webster, who wrote the dictionary, 'Give me liberty or give me death!'"

One of his colleagues pulled at his coat and whispered:

"Daniel Webster did not write the dictionary; it was Noah."

"Noah, nothing," replied the speaker; "Noah built the ark."

A Mild Way of Putting It.

Congressman Eugene E. Reed, of New Hampshire, told of the reputation of a party named Abner.

Abner was hailed to court to answer to a complaint that grew out of a broken bargain, and among the witnesses called to testify was Hiram Wilkins.

"Mr. Wilkins," said the examining lawyer, "you know the defendant in this case, do you not?"

"O, yes," answered Hiram. "Knowed him nigh onter forty years now."

"What is his reputation for veracity?" asked the lawyer. "Is he regarded as a man who never tells the truth?"

"Wall, I can't say that he don't never tell the truth," answered Hiram, "but I do know that if he wanted his hogs ter come ter dinner he'd have ter git somebody else ter call 'em."

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

Notes From the Biennial Convention

The Sisterhood of Woman.

The world note in the woman movement was not only sounded by Mrs. Carrie Chapman-Catt in her great address at the Chicago Biennial, but it was emphasized by the presence and speech of representatives from many lands. India, Australia, the Philippines, Germany, France, Belgium, Denmark, Sweden, Great Britain, Canada and Cuba sent expressions of their cordial coöperation in the aims and ideals of the organization. Possibly the most thrilling messages were those from Japan and China. Delegation after delegation, from every state in the Union, rose to their feet as the greeting of Countess Okuma, of Japan, was read by Mrs. H. E. Coleman, president of the Tokio Woman's Club. It was as follows:

A LETTER FROM JAPAN.

Waseda, Tokio, Japan, 1914.—To the President and Members of the Federation of Women's Clubs: Hearty greetings and congratulations from Japan to your biennial meeting. I desire to express to you my deep interest and sympathy in the splendid work you are doing for women. I realize deeply that the many associations you represent with your thousands of members have a far reaching influence in woman's cause, not only in America but for women of all lands.

The advancement of women, a matter dear to my heart, has made wonderful strides of late years in all parts of the world, and America, always formost in progress, leads in this as in other reforms.

Japan, too, is not standing still, and though woman's work is outwardly not so apparent here, there is a strong underlying movement onward, especially in educational matters. At least two hundred women's societies have already been formed for various objects and are flourishing, and this form of activity will increase when a large number of women are broadly and highly educated. But the work in Japan at present is more educational than social, on club lines.

The relations between America and Japan have already been most cordial and intimate, and we Japanese women look to America for inspiration and help in the solution of our problems for women, just as Japan has regarded America as a guide in her development along modern and western lines.

I ask your continued interest in us, and desire that there may be closer intercourse between us, and greater knowledge of one another, to the end that our two nations may be drawn together in the future.

It is therefore a great pleasure for me to send to you, O women of America, a heartfelt greeting at this time. May East and West join more and more in the great work for the advance of all women and of society the world over.

With best wishes, I am, yours cordially,

AYAKO, COUNTESS OKUMA.

A MESSAGE FROM CHINA.

The message from China, by Miss Hie Ding Sin, an eager little medical student from the University of Illinois won all hearts. There were tears in many eyes, when she stretched out her hands, and uttered her simile of the bird that for 4,000 years has been living in a cage, and now flutters out to the sunlight and is bewildered. And this is what she said:

"We Chinese women come to you so like birds that for 4,000 years have lived in cages. And so, dear ladies, there is danger for us—danger what direction we fly. This woman of China, this bird that has been in the cage so long, how shall she use this new freedom that you tell her of? We want you to teach us how we better fly, so that we, that come out of great darkness and see the great world and the bright sunshine around us for the first time, know what to do, and not fly into danger.

"Chinese woman stands with outstretched hand, waiting for someone to teach. Will you kind ladies please come across the sea and help my women to know how to do. You lead. We follow. All our clubs there are suffrage. We want to teach biggest things in life as soon as we can. In America some districts give women vote. With vote and American women's great intelligence she can make the world a beautiful world. My women have to learn first, before the use of ballot will give them aid: Show us how here, and send women to show us how there."

The brotherhod of man is a great word, but the sisterhood of woman measures up to it in every particular.

"CONSOLIDATED MOTHERHOOD."

Another big phrase was flung out by an earnest speaker, when she called the Federation "The Consolidated Motherhood of America." It was on the day devoted to the consideration of Social hygiene, and such speakers as Julia Lathrop, Dean Sumner, Dr. Rachelle Yarros, and Mrs. Ella Flagg Young made it in many respects the most momentous day of the Twelfth Biennial. Miss Lathrop said: "I will tell you what we are here for today. We are here to consider life at its very source—to save life and to save suffering at the very front as never before.

Mrs. Young gave strong testimony in favor of teaching personal hygiene in our public school systems.

Dean Sumner brought out these aspects of the subject: "One kind of a man walks our streets without a spark of honor, without a spark of sportsmanship. He is the hunter of uninformed, lonely girls, the girl who is lonely as you and I never have been. She is hunted down by him. She is lost to her family, lost to her friends, lost to herself, lost to her God. But he is accepted everywhere. He continues to walk the streets—a romantic figure.

"It will never be any different until you women demand the single standard, until you say to your boys—and teach them to live by the saying—'Somewhere some girl is keeping herself clean and sweet for you. Can't you do as much for her?' I challenge you, the flower of womanhood, to say to men, 'No longer shall you exploit my sex in the degradation of a marriage to which you bring disease.'"

Many other things were spoken and done at this great convention—to tell of them would far exceed the limits of this department. This Biennial has proved that the Woman's Club movement is one of the great moral and civic agencies in our land.

"The club women are studying, thinking, working. No civic, social, political, ethical problem is alien to them. They have shown courage, good sense, moderation, as well as zeal and earnestness. They are already a mighty, a wonderful force for righteouness and good government, and at no distant day they will become an irresistible force." I. W. H.

DEATH OF NOTED LEADER.

Baroness Bertha von Suttner, the Austrian writer who had devoted most of her life to the cause of peace and to whom was awarded the Nobel peace prize in 1905, died June 21.

Baroness von Suttner had been ill three weeks. She was undergoing a cure for obesity, which her constitution proved unable to bear. She gave instructions that her body be cremated at Gotha, without religious ceremony, speeches or flowers, her ashes to be deposited in a columbarium there.

Born in 1843, the daughter of Field Marshall Count Franz von Kinsky, the baroness became noted as the editor of Die Waffen Nieder (Lay Down Your Arms), the magazine of the International Peace Bureau in Berne, which was named after a novel written by her in 1889, designed to spread the idea of peace throughout Germany and Austria.

The baroness was at one time secretary to Dr. Alfred B. Nobel, who established the Nobel foundation, and as a champion of the "Brotherhood of the Nations" is said to have been the inspiration that prompted him to offer his peace prize. She was a member of the advisory council of the Carnegie Peace Foundation.

The baroness was called by the late Pope Leo "the most remarkable woman in the world."

Baroness von Suttner's romance, "Lay Down Your Arms," has been termed the "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of the modern peace movement. Her marked and vast capacity for sympathizing with suffering creatures was one of her most conspicuous characteristics, and this is the secret of her literary success.

She was known as "the woman who moved the czar," as it was her influence that caused him to call the first peace conference at The Hague. It was when the Russian emperor read her book, "Lay Down Your Arms," that he sent for her and manifested a deep interest in her opinions.

For sixteen years Baroness von Suttner was vice-president of the Berne International Peace Bureau and lectured throughout Europe on the subject of "Peace."

Baroness Bertha von Suttner visited Chicago in the summer of 1912. She came here accompanied by her secretary, Mrs. Andrea Hofer Proudfoot, a Chicago woman. During her stay she addressed various associations. Among them were the Chicago Woman's Club, the American School Peace League and the National Educational Association. Her addresses were an appeal for world-wide peace.

Disciples Table Talk

M. M. Amunson Goes Abroad.

Mr. and Mrs. M. M. Amunson of Sterling Place Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., will spend the summer in Europe. Mr. Amunson, as secretary of the Commission on Foreign Relations, will visit the Scandinavian churches in the interest of the Commission and will attend the Waldensian Church Convention at Torre Pellice, Italy. Canton, Mo., Retreat for Ministers.

The time is approaching for the gathering of the ministers of Sixth District Mission for their annual outing and time of good fellowship in the Retreat to be held at Canton July 14-17. Each day informal conferences on matters of importance to preachers will be held. Two or three great, strong, inspirational addresses will be given by able men. The social message of Christ to our age will be a central theme for consideration. This year promises even richer things than were realized last year, writes H. B. Robison, secretary of the Retreat. There will be a larger group of men, and they will be better acquainted to begin with. The railroad fare will be pooled. It was $2.79 last year. The entertainment will be $1.25 a day, 25 cents each for meals and 50 cents for care of the buildings.

Death of Mrs. Betsy Pounds.

W. A. Shullenberger, pastor at Cleveland, writes that Mrs. Betsy Elma Pounds, mother of John E. and Miss Mattie Pounds, passed away May 29, at the home of the latter, in Cleveland. Mrs. Pounds was in her ninety-seventh year, having been enlisted with the Restoration movement for seventy-eight years. At the age of thirteen, during one of the yearly meetings conducted by Alexander Campbell she made the good confession, and even in her later years she followed the movement and the work of the local church with an interest and alertness altogether remarkable. Mr. Rothenburger says, in praise of this noble woman: "She was concerned about the welfare of the kingdom in a most aggressive way. With her husband and four small children she moved to a community where no church existed. Forthwith she secured an evangelist to conduct a meeting in a nearby school house. Her young husband was the first convert, and became a leader in the community in matters pertaining to the kingdom. Up to the time these good people were eighty years of age, after having reared a family quite as much interested in the kingdom as were they, a drive of six miles to the little country church was made each week with a regularity most commendable. Always gentle and courteous, most gracious and appreciative of every attention, devoted to her children with an abiding passion, it was good to have her presence in the community. Neither is it strange that her family are so well known among the Disciples." Four children survive Mrs. Pounds: Mrs. Alice Bower of the west, John E., pastor of the Hiram Church, Howard H., real estate dealer and Miss Mattie, former National Secretary of Junior Endeavor, both of Cleveland.

L. O. Lehman Eureka's Field Secretary.

L. O. Lehman, recently resigned at Gibson City, Ill., is afraid that "some of the friends of Eureka might fear that the educational standards of the college are being lowered," and for that reason asks that a correction be made of the statement made in The Century last week that Mr. Lehman would become a member of the faculty there. Of his new relation to the school Mr. Lehman writes: "I am to be Field Secretary, not a member of the faculty. I am to be the handy man to the college administration and we are going to make a determined effort to put the old college on its feet. It is going to be a tremendous task but since it is settled that I am to try it, I am eager for the fray and the more I think it over, the more I believe we are going to win." Mr. Lehman has served the church at Gibson City for five and a half years.

Death of Rev. J. Durham.

The Disciples' cause in California has suffered loss by the death in a railroad wreck of J. Durham, of Irvington, Cal. Mr. Durham was returning from Clays Station, after a visit there, when the wreck occurred. He was on the opposite side from the main collision but in falling he struck a timber, and his skull was badly cracked above the right temple. Death occurred instantly. The body was taken to Irvington, and his son, Dr. J. H. Haley Durham, took charge of it. All of Mr. Durham's children were present at the funeral except William, who lives in Chicago, and who was sick at the time. The children present were: Mrs. Elda Cutler, Leland Cutler and Miss Georgia Cutler of San Francisco; Mrs. Mary Ingram, H. C. Ingram and Raymond Ingram of Oakland; Mrs. Annie Smith, Guy Smith and daughter, Georgia, of San Jose. J. H. McCullough gave the leading address, followed by short addresses by Rev. Boyer of Oakland, Rev. McHatton of Fruitvale, Rev. Pier of Palo Alto, Rev. Cave of San Francisco, Rev. Boren of Berkeley, Rev. Ford of Alameda. Mr. Durham came to California from Abingdon, Illinois, in 1872. He has made his home in Irvington since 1883, and has been preaching in California longer than any other Christian minister.

H. H. Peters as Chautauqua Manager.

H. H. Peters of Pars, Illinois, has been engaged as platform manager of the Chautauqua at Eureka. Mr. Peters will thus have an opportunity to spend ten days where he rendered important service as Field Secretary of Eureka College for almost five years.

Honor for Arthur Braden.

At its 1914 commencement, Syracuse University granted to Arthur Braden, of the Syracuse Central Church, the degree of Ph. D. After a four years' course in Hiram College, four years of theological study in Auburn Seminary and a special course in Syracuse University it well qualifies him for his chosen work. "The modern religious revival and its after effects" was his thesis.

Dr. Garrison Ill.

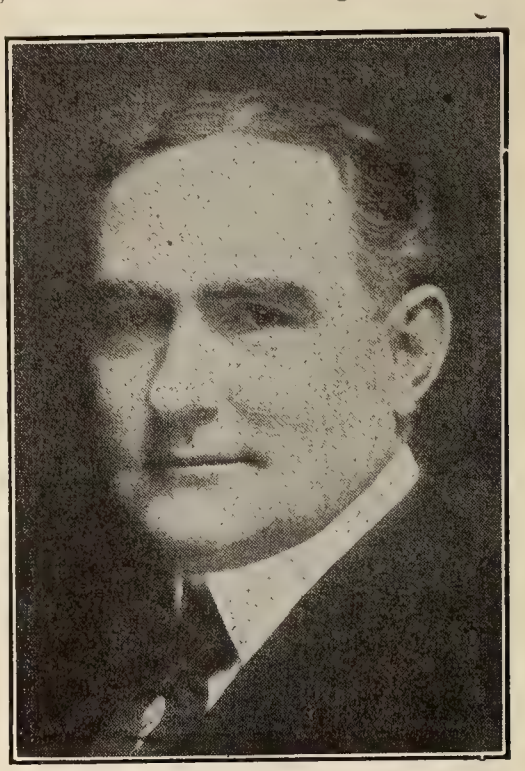
We regret to learn that J. H. Garrison, Editor Emeritus of the Christian Evangelist has been ill at his home in St. Louis. Dr. and Mrs. Garrison attended the Missouri State Convention at Moberly, sat through every session from first to last, and the next day went to Columbia to attend the annual meeting of the Board of the Bible College of Missouri. These strenuous days and the heat proved too much for him, and he is not able to attend the meeting of the Board of Directors, nor to leave for Garrison Park, Pentwater, as usual.

Finis Idleman Suffers Misfortune.

Finis Idleman, of Central Des Moines, writes that Mrs. Idleman is only slowly recovering from a serious operation performed early in June. One of Mr. Idleman's children also has been ill. These misfortunes, together with the crowding duties of the church work, have prevented Mr. Idleman's getting to the preparation of Sunday-school lesson talks for the Christian Century and the Conquest. He hopes in a few weeks to give us the first installment of the lesson treatments.

Progress in North Dakota Convention.

It will be of interest to all Sunday-schools, especially to those that study during July the Home Mission Program concerning



Dr. R. P. Shepherd, who is now with the Illinois Sunday-school Association.

North Dakota, to learn that a sixth school has been organized to be added to the group placed hitherto upon the map of that state. The state convention met last week at Minot, in the north central portion of North Dakota, a city of about ten thousand population, the third largest in North Dakota. At one time a school existed here but it had ceased to meet. During the convention an effort was made to round up all the Disciples living in Minot, and it was discovered that more than fifty could be found. On Sunday morning of convention week, in response to announcement made during the convention, sixty people met and organized a school to meet for the present in the assembly room of the Public Library. E. A. Long was elected superintendent and three good men were chosen as associates, R. H. Hays, M. F. Schooler and L. M. Swigart. Teachers and other officers were chosen and an offering of $14.56 was taken with which to purchase supplies, provide for the rent and meet other expenses. R. M. Hopkins, of the American Society, writes that the report of the work made by the state corresponding secretary, F. B. Sapp, indicated that there are many other communities in the state where a similar work could be quickly done. "It would seem a wise thing to do," adds Mr. Hopkins, "had we the funds, for the Bible-school Department of the American Christian Missionary Society to have one or more men giving their entire time to such extension work as this in North Dakota and other frontier states. We do not have a single worker at present in the field whose principal task is the organization of new schools. We are hopeful that the offerings from the schools for home missions will so increase as to make the securing of such an extension worker possible very soon."

Rogers, Ark., Church Host to Big Convention.

At Rogers, a beautiful little city of the Ozarks, in the heart of the orchard lands, the twenty-first annual convention of the Arkansas Christian Endeavor Union was held from June 18 to 21. The First Church of Rogers was the convention church. This was one of the largest and most helpful Endeavor conventions ever held in the state, reports J. E. Heins, pastor at Rogers. G. D. Serrill, minister at Hot Springs was president of the convention, and proved himself a master of assemblies. Karl Lehmann, of Boston, interstate secretary of Christian Endeavor, was the chief speaker. Splendid progress in the work was reported. Hot Springs was selected as the convention city for next year, and G. D. Serrill was re-elected president.

Bloomington, Ill., Pastor Busy.

Edgar DeWitt Jones, who is rounding out his eighth year at First Church, Bloomington, has besides his regular work, been busy delivering numerous commencement and patiotic addresses in central Illinois towns. For eight winters Mr. Jones has given at Bloomington a series of Sunday evening sermons that have attracted large audiences. Already he has planned for a similar series for next winter, by sending out sixty letters to Bloomington citizens of all walks of life, containing twenty-four questions bearing upon the Church, the Bible, the Home, Municipal Politics, and questions of a personal nature. He will make the answers to these questions the basis of six Sunday night sermons that will likely be popular and profitable. Mr. Jones will be, along with George A. Campbell, of Hannibal, a speaker at the Ministerial Retreat at the Christian University, Canton, Mo., July 14 to 17.

Cotner University Prospers.

Cotner University reports one of the happiest commencements this season which it has had in years. A class of twenty-five was graduated, W. F. Richardson of Kansas City, delivering the address. Of the twenty-five graduating, nine are young men entering the ministry, the greater number of whom are locating with Nebraska churches. This commencement marked the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the school. Great honors were given to Chancellor and Mrs. Aylsworth, Mr. Aylsworth having been connected with the school from its beginning. The future of the school seems very bright and Chancellor Oeschger and all his workers are to be congratulated upon this outlook.

Broadway, Los Angeles, Welcomes Pastor.

A reception was given last week by the members of the Broadway Christian Church, Los Angeles, in honor of their new pastor, Charles F. Hutslar, recently from Wheeling, W. Va. All the ministers from the other Christian churches attended with many of their parishioners to welcome Mr. Hutslar to Los Angeles. Many spirited speeches of welcome were made. Over 400 were in attendance.

Notes From Canton, O.

Phillip Y. Pendleton, of Cincinnati, goes to Canton to take the Chair of First Principles in Phillips Bible Institute, beginning with the school year in September. This gives the institute a faculty of six. The First Christian Sunday-school of Canton, Ohio, has been in an attendance contest with the twenty-six schools of the Disciple schools of Greater Chicago. The contest ran from February first to the last Sunday of June—twenty-two Sundays in all. Chicago's total attendance for the twenty-two Sundays was 67,036. Canton's, 68,457, including those present in the parks of Canton, on the last Sunday, who listened to Bible talks arranged for the occasion. Canton won, according to this arrangement, by a plurality of 1,421. The average attendance of Canton for the time was 3,111 per Sunday. The number of new pupils enrolled in the attending school was 506 and 100 in the Cradle Roll. The last day of the contest Canton had 7,716.

University of Chicago Notes

The registration at the University of Chicago for the Summer Quarter already exceeds that for the corresponding period a year ago, when more than three thousand students were enrolled. All parts of the country are represented in the attendance at the University, the southern states as usual having large delegations. One special train of two hundred teachers came from Texas alone, Galveston, Fort Worth, and Dallas being among the cities represented.

Among the members of the summer Faculty of the University are more than fifty from other institutions, including Harvard, Yale, and Leland Stanford, and the universities of Texas, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan.

The Second Term of the Summer Quarter begins July 23 and the Quarter closes with the Autumn Convocation on August 28.

The Disciples' Divinity House has enrolled the largest attendance in its history. Dr. Sharpe's class in the Disciples characteristic doctrines is large as is also that of Dean Willett in "The Place of the Disciples in the Religious Forces of Today."

Sunday School Institutes are to be held at the University of Chicago from July 7 to 10 and from August 4 to 7. The earlier sessions will be devoted to "Religious Education and the Civic Ideal," and the later to "Religious Problems of the High-School Age." Professor George W. Fiske, of Oberlin Theological Seminary; Dr. Henry F. Cope, Secretary of the Religious Education Association; and Professor H. Augustine Smith, of the Chicago Theological Seminary, will be among those from other institutions taking part in the program. Professor Theodore G. Soares, Head of the Department of Practical Theology in the University, will discuss the question of "The Civic Ideal in the Sunday-School Curriculum," and Associate Professor Allan Hoben, of the same department, will give the opening address on "Civic Training in the Home."

The University Preachers for the Summer Quarter at the University of Chicago include for the month of July Professor Herbert Lockwood Willett, of the Department of Semitics, who speaks on July 5; Professor George Burman Foster, of the Department of Comparative Religion, who is the speaker for July 12; Professor Charles Richmond Henderson, Head of the Department of Practical Sociology, for July 19; and Dean Shailer Mathews, of the Divinity School, for July 26. On August 2 the speaker will be Dr. William Byron Forbush, President of the American Institute of Child Life, Philadelphia.

In the important series of lectures on "The Aims and Methods of Modern Theological Scholarship," now being given at the University of Chicago, Shirley Jackson Case, Associate Professor of New Testament Interpretation, discusses on July 3 "The Historical Interpretation of Christian Origins;" on July 14 Professor Andrew C. McLaughlin, Head of the Department of History, discusses "The Study of Church History;" on July 24 Professor George Burman Foster, of the Department of Comparative Religion, speaks on the subject of "The Philosophy of Religion"; and on July 28 Professor Gerald Birney Smith discusses "The Present Problems of Systematic Theology." The whole series will conclude with two lectures in August.

Members of the Faculties of the University of Chicago have been in great demand as commencement speakers during the month of June. Professor John M. Coulter, Head of the Department of Botany, gave the commencement address at Illinois College on June 12 and received from the college the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws, and also gave the address at the Bradley Polytechnic Institute, Peoria, on June 19; Dean Shailer Mathews, of the Divinity School, spoke at the commencement of Eureka College on June 12, and also at Lincoln College, June 17, on "Militant Idealism;" Director Charles H. Judd, of the School of Education, gave an address at Toledo University, June 10, on "Cultivation of Initiative in Students," another June 12, at the Elgin high school on the same subject, and a third at the Central State Normal School of Michigan on June 24; Dean Albion W. Small, Head of the Department of Sociology, was the speaker at the commencement of Iowa State College on June 11; Dean Otis W. Caldwell, of University College, spoke at the Goshen (Ind.) high school commencement on "An Efficient Education," and also at the Rockford high school June 18, on the same subject. Professor Theodore G. Soares, Head of the Department of Practical Theology, was the commencement speaker at the LaSalle-Peru township high school, his subject being "Life-long Eucation," and Professor Nathaniel Butler, of the Department of Education, gave the address at the commencement of Monticello Seminary, of which he was recently made a trustee.

A DISTINCTION NOTED.

E. E. Elliott, secretary of the Brotherhood, writes that the "Men and Millions Movement" should not be confused with the "Brotherhood of Disciples of Christ." The former is a movement among the agencies of the Churches of Christ for the purpose of gathering one thousand workers and six million dollars in six years. The latter is a movement among the men of the churches. for the purpose of stimulating and educating our laymen for efficient service, seeking nothing for itself, but rather seeking to serve every worthy cause without thought of money return.

REPORT FROM JAS. C. OGDEN.

Jas. C. Ogden on his return trip to Tibet, writing under date of April 19, to the Foreign Society, says: "We are two days past Chungking on our way to Kiating. So far as we can learn the country is quiet and we are getting on well. Dr. Shelton and Dr. Hardy and their families are in Tachienlu. We hope to join them soon. The natives treat us kindly all along the way. We have no particulars about Batang except that our Mission was looted."

FOURTH RURAL LIFE CONFERENCE.

The Ex-Secretary of Agriculture, James Wilson, was one of the speakers at the fourth annual rural life conference at Iowa State College, Ames, Ia., June 22--July 3. Other speakers were Ernest Thompson Seton, writer, and Luther H. Gulick, physical culture expert. Courses of lectures on "Religious Education in the Rural Community" were given. This conference afforded a rich opportunity to ministers interested in the problems of the rural church.

MOUNT HERMON FEDERATE SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

The summer sessions of the Mount Hermon Federate School of Missions will be held at Mount Hermon, in the Santa Cruz Mountains, California, July 20 to 25 inclusive. As in former years, Mrs. D. B. Wells, so widely known in Eastern summer schools, will teach both home and foreign interdenominational text-books, the two new books this year being, "In Red Man's Land," by Hon. Francis E. Leupp, ex-commissioner of Indian affairs, and "The Child in the Midst," by Mary S. Larrabee, formerly missionary to Persia. The pamphlet, "Missionary Women and the Social Question," by M. Katherine Bennett, published by the Council of Women for Home Missions, will also be used. There are now seven denominations affiliated in Mount Hermon Federate School of Missions.

Registration for entire course, one dollar.

As California is to vote on state-wide prohibition in November, the temperance question will be taken up at Mount Hermon, Mrs. Eugenia F. St. John, national evangelist and lecturer of the W. C. T. U., being expected to speak. Another speaker on the program is Mrs. J. McDaniel Stearns, formerly missionary of the Christian Church in Mexico.

Rev. F. S. Brush will give an illustrated evening lecture on a trip to places around the Mediterranean. It is hoped that Mrs. Paul Raymond, author of the text-book, "The King's Business," may be present. Other speakers are looked for. Rallies of the different denominations will be held during the week.

Press Sec. Mt. H. Fed. School Missions.

WESTERN WASHINGTON NOTES.

The Western Washington Convention is being entertained this week, July 6-10, at First Church of Seattle, all nine of the Congregations uniting in the entertainment. This suggests a few facts of interest to the Brotherhood at large as appropriate at this time.

Work here began in 1882, and the Ballard work began in ninety-six; but the most effective progress did not appear until the First Church built its present structure in 1902. Then the work became active all over the city, and the seven additional congregations have started since that time.

Within a short time West Seattle and Ballard have dedicated new basements for substantial buildings, and are doing effective work in growth to soon justify the balance of their structures. Central has just a similar foundation and roofed it for dedication July 5; while First and University churches are planning to build large, practical structures this autumn. The First Church building will be of the Institutional nature, and the University Church will plan for the most effective Christian Educational work with assistant pastor to aid work in Western Washington University student body.

Queen Anne congregation built its Bible-school Chapel in 1911, and is growing preparatory to the main building's completion.

W. L. Fisher, pastor of First Church, is well known in our Brotherhood, and the First Church is one of our fifty leaders in missions.

Cleveland Kleihauer recently took his A. M. at University of Nebraska after his A. B. at Cotner. He is a strong man. L. E. Lakin at Ballard has added over two hundred members during his five year ministry, and the finance has grown to four times its proportions when he first came.

The people of these churches are self-sacrificing, but not rich in finance, and these undertakings are taxing their utmost powers. This convention should greatly aid them. Eight of the national secretaries will be present. Seattle now exceeds three hundred thousand in population, has more than doubled its commerce within a few years, and with the further opening of Panama Canal and Alaska promises to become one of the first cities of the world.

THE ONE-HOUR WATCH.

Among the impressive things disclosed by an examination of the records of the Board of Ministerial Relief are the extreme age of the pensioners, their long terms of service and the brief periods of retirement.

Within the last two years of the work's rapid development it has happened again and again that the veteran's strength was so completely spent before he allowed his name to come before the board, that he was called home before the first payment reached him. In many other instances only two or three payments were required. If we had failed in these our Master might well have exclaimed again: "What! could ye not watch with me one hour?"

Of the ministers now on the roll who are pensioned on account of age, the average age is seventy-three and two-thirds, the average length of service thirty-six and two-thirds and the average age when enrolled seventy and three-fifths.

About a fifth of the whole number are being pensioned on account of other disabilities than age. These, stricken with paralysis, tuberculosis and blindness, average fifty and four-fifths years of age, and had rendered an average of seventeen and one-half years of service each when enrolled.

Of the total roll of 107, two-fifths are widows. Their average age is sixty-four and three-fourths and the average time of service that they shared with their husbands was thirty and three-eighths years.

BETHANY PARK SUMMER SCHOOL FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

For the first time in the history of Christian Endeavor among the Disciples of Christ, a summer school of Christian Endeavor methods and management will be held August 4 to 14 in connection with Bethany Assembly. A carefully constructed course of study has been prepared and capable instructors will be on hand to lead the young people who may attend. And it is our hope that hundreds of Christian Endeavorers among our people will take advantage of this exceptional opportunity and attend the school. Expenses at the park are so reasonable as to come within the ability of nearly all young people. The school affords a rare chance to combine vocation and profitable study. Bethany Assembly is growing greater each year, and is becoming more and more the National Chautauqua of the Disciples of Christ. The Board of Christian Endeavor has recently secured by purchase the Christian Endeavor Cottage and this building is now undergoing extensive repairs. The assembly room of the cottage is being put in first class order and will be used for all Christian Endeavor meetings. Plans have been made to conduct a school each year, making it a part of the General Assembly program. We have long needed a common meeting place for our young people interested in Christian Endeavor, and Bethany Park seems, from every stand-point, the most suitable place. And this cottage, which has been purchased and is now being practically rebuilt provides for all our needs as to class and assembly rooms and a general head quarters building. The Board of Christian Endeavor made the purchase and is making the repairs to the building believing, first, that the Endeavorers will attend in large numbers making the summer school a success from the start; and second, that the societies in our churches will provide the Board with any balance of money necessary to pay cost of purchase and reconstruction. It will be kept in mind that all the money we have to use for any purpose comes from the Endeavor Day offering and the voluntary contribution of the societies. It appears now that we will need about $400 to complete the work we have begun. With this sum, our Endeavorers will own a property worth at least $2,000 and which will be used year after year as a summer meeting place for young people.

This article is written to inform the Endeavorers of our churches concerning this summer school, to urge the attendance, and to ask the societies to have fellowship in payment for the building. There are hundreds of societies which have made no contribution at all to our Christian Endeavor work this year. We need your help now and it is asking very little of a society to send a few dollars for this cause. Will not every preacher and every Endeavor officer who reads this notice, bring the matter to the attention of your society, urging that an offering be sent at once to the undersigned? Then, do not fail to call attention to the school itself, and if at all possible, see that one or more representatives from your society attend. The meetings are from August 4 to August 14. The place, Bethany Park. The sessions of the school will be held in the New National Endeavor Cottage. The instructors are: John D. Zimmerman of Kansas, Bert Wilson of the Foreign Society, Henry C. Armstrong of Baltimore, C. E. Underwood of Indianapolis, and the writer. This will be a real school conducted under the most favorable conditions. Our Endeavorers will be proud of this building. Help us pay for it by sending an offering at once and come to the summer school and enjoy it.

CLAUDE E. HILL,
National Superintendent.

CHRISTIAN UNITY IN ST. PETERSBURG.

At the first general Convention of Evangelical Christian Churches in Russia, St. Petersburg, September, 1909, with great inspiration, it was resolved to arrange every year, in Passion Week, prayer-meetings for brotherly unity among all Christian communities of evangelical character in Russia. For this purpose invitations were sent to the following brotherhoods: Evangelical Christians, Baptists, Mennonite Brethren, Methodists and Presbyterians. During the existence of this blessed institution, there have been received every year many kind reports on inspiring prayer-meetings especially in connection with Baptists and Evangelical Christians.

In St. Petersburg, where there is a great number of churches of the above mentioned character, we have had every year overcrowded and exceedingly blessed meetings. This year the prayer-meetings were held in "Nobel's People House." The magnificent hall with crowds of God's children had an overwhelming look. The meeting continued from eight to eleven o'clock in the evening. All representatives of the different churches in St. Petersburg spoke with deep warmth and hearty love on alliance between true believers. Mr. Prokanoff, leader of the First Evangelical Christian Church in St. Petersburg presided. First Brother Prokanoff referring to John 17, spoke on the high importance of good fellowship with all believers and then some words on the history and purpose of present meeting. After that spoke Brother Kargel, minister of Second Evangelical Christian Church in St. Petersburg, on unity of spirit. Brother Arndt delivered a speech on "The Emptied and Exalted Christ." The representative of Lettish Baptist Church Brother Shvalbe, of Swedish-Finnish Church, Brother Sarve, the second representative of mentioned Second Evangelical Christian Church, Brother Solomin and Brother Reimer, a Mennonite brother of southern Russia, expressed themselves about the same subject with brotherly feelings. Sister A. Renberg, missionary of China Inland Mission, transmitted greetings of Chinese Christians and Christian Unity in China. Between the speeches hearty prayers of brotherly love among God's people were sent to the throne of grace. In the same way the choir sang different sweet gospel songs. Finally Brother Prokanoff spoke once more some words on John 17, and the choir sang "For the Faith of the Glorious Gospel" (national hymn of Russian believers). The magnificent prayer-meeting caused to all followers of Jesus Christ holy inspiration. Every one of them left the hall with strong resolution to pray and work more than before for the benefit of union among all true believers.

The above is from a Russian report of the Union meetings in St. Petersburg. It would seem that our brethren there lead in the great work as we do here. The seventeenth of John has the same message to Christians in Russia that it has to Christians in the United States. May our heavenly Father hasten the glad day when all the warring and wrangling children of God may be filled with the spirit of the Master as recorded in that chapter, that "they may all be one, that the world may believe that God has sent Jesus to be our Saviour and leader.

The Daily Vacation Sunday School

How the Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland, Ohio, Fought the Summer Slump.

For some years many city churches have succumbed to what seems to be an inevitable summer slump. In my own parish, one of the oldest churches of worship in what is considered to be the finest structure in this part of the city has for many years closed its evening services with the last May meeting, divided its Sunday-school into two classes and so far as I know placed emphasis at no particular point in its program. Other churches have seen fit to close their Sunday-school entirely for the summer months. It is interesting to note, however, that in these recent years a number of churches have placed emphasis upon the danger of such a procedure. Union park services, out-door lawn services, and occasional indoor union services have indicated a desire on the part of the church to take advantage of summer opportunities. Ready made audiences have thus been reached with a vital Christian message. The Sunday-school has in sporadic instances adopted the Anti-Summer-Slump Campaign. In our own school such a campaign a year ago was most profitable. But the spirit of the daily vacation Sunday-school idea seems to afford a still greater motive and program for the young of the community. The plan had its birth in New York City some half dozen years ago. A few other cities have adopted such a program. Among them, our Sixth City; first by the Baptists, second by the Presbyterians. Last year witnessed an unusual interest in such a scheme, resulting in seventeen such centers in the various parts of the city. Two of these were among the Disciples of Christ, namely, at Aetna Road and Franklin Circle. In view of the opportunities which are before our churches for summer work, urgent requests have come for a brief statement of such a plan.

The teaching force is of first importance. We were able to secure three paid teachers within our own ranks. Mr. John Bradshaw, a senior in Hiram College and Secretary of boys' work in the Hiram Y. M. C. A. was chosen superintendent and boy specialist. Miss Flora McCallum, a public school teacher of ability and superintendent of the Primary Department of our own school, and Miss Mattie Pounds, known throughout the states among the Disciples, constituted the other two members of the paid staff. Perhaps a dozen volunteer workers in various ways were used during the season.

In preparation for the school which began the second week in July, a large banner was suspended from the church and five thousand announcement cards were distributed throughout the community by volunteers. The response was unusual in its growth. On the first day of the school about fifty children gathered. Within two weeks the enrollment had reached two hundred and by the close of the six weeks three hundred and sixty-six children had become a part of the school. The fluctuations of summer rendered the average attendance about one hundred. The enrollment revealed the following very interesting facts:

Protestants, 136 of whom forty-three were from Franklin Circle; ninety-three from other churches; Catholics, 147, eighty-three from homes with no church affiliations.

Situated as we are, with residence territory of the English type on one side and a mixed foreign population on the other, the following variety of nationalities came to us:

American	194
Irish	24
Dutch	4
German	16
Scandinavian	3
Canadian	9
English	10
Austro-Hungarian	14
Italian	1
Russian	4
Danish	1
Swiss	1
Scotch	8
Slav	4
Finns	5

Thus it may be seen that the school was as cosmopolitan as could well be imagined.

The school assembled at 9:30 in the morning on the street, then marched into the building, taking their places in such fashion as is done in the public schools. The first hour of the program consisted in saluting the flag, singing religious and patriotic hymns, the telling of Bible stories, prayer, health talks by physicians and dentists, moral and religious talks by the pastor, Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. workers, and such other numbers as would feed the real life of the child. It was our first intention to confine the work of the school to the type of program indicated in the first hour, but the hot weather, the vacation spirit, and the experiences of other centers seemed to warrant introducing the program of the second hour. This consisted in raffia work, basket making, sewing, hammock making, etc. On stated days the boys were taken for a "hike" and a swim at the Y. M. C. A. or a ball game. Near the close of the school a general picnic was arranged for in one of the parks. While we were impressed with the fact that the church could not duplicate such industries as the above, and that its mission was supremely a religious one in the community, experience has confirmed us in the belief that the second hour served a magnetic purpose and satisfied the vacation spirit of the average boy and girl. There may be types of communities where a whole program as indicated in our first hour might suffice, but for the average community the second hour fills a large place. On the last day of the school an exhibit drew a large number of the parents and friends of the little folks and the attempt at this point seemed eminently fitting and worth while.

The interest increased with every week and the results were highly gratifying. It gave the church a worthy task with the small expenditure of $300. It put us in touch with eighty-three children whose homes were unchurched. Every one of these homes was visited by our workers with the result that many of these boys and girls are now regular members of our school. It gave to one hundred forty-seven Catholic children their first taste of a non-ecclesiastical church life, several of whom are now also members of our school. It impressed our part of the city with the fact that the church was attempting to serve the community. It gave to 366 boys and girls a most delightful and profitable vacation of six weeks with something really tangible in the way of moral and religious uplift.

Memory Verses, 16, 17

Golden Text.—Well done, good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will set thee over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.—Matt. 25:21.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(11) And as they heard these things, he added and spake a parable, because he was nigh to Jerusalem, and because they supposed that the kingdom of God was immediately to appear. (12) He said therefore, A certain nobleman went into a far country, to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return. (13) And he called ten servants of his, and gave them ten pounds, and said unto them, Trade ye herewith till I come. (14) But his citizens hated him, and sent an ambassage after him, saying, We will not that this man reign over us. (15) And it came to pass, when he was come back again, having received the kingdom, that he commanded these servants, unto whom he had given the money, to be called to him, that he might know what they had gained by trading. (16) And the first came before him, saying, Lord, thy pound hath made ten pounds more. (17) And he said unto him, Well done, thou good servant; because thou wast found faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities. (18) And the second came, saying, Thy pound, Lord, hath made five pounds. (19) And he said unto him also, Be thou also over five cities. (20) And another came, saying, Lord, behold, here is thy pound, which I kept laid up in a napkin: (21) for I feared thee, because thou art an austere man: thou takest up that which thou layedst not down, and reapest that which thou didst not sow. (22) He saith unto him, Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant. Thou knewest that I am an austere man, taking up that which I laid not down, and reaping that which I did not sow: (23) then wherefore gavest thou not my money into the bank, and I at my coming should have required it with interest? (24) And he said unto them that stood by, Take away from him the pound, and give it unto him that hath the ten pounds. (25) And they said unto him, Lord, he hath ten pounds. (26) I say unto you, that unto every one that hath shall be given; but from him that hath not, even that which he hath shall be taken away from him. (27) But these mine enemies, that would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me.

Verse by Verse.

BY CLARK BUCKNER.

v. 11. As they heard these things: When they heard the words of Jesus concerning Zacchaeus. Because he was nigh to Jerusalem: The end of his life is very near at hand. Conscious of this, Jesus wishes to complete his teachings. Supposed that the Kingdom of God was immediately to appear: His followers thought he was going into Jerusalem to be proclaimed "King of the Jews."

v. 12. A certain nobleman: A man of rank who might be expected to lay claim to a throne. In the parable, the nobleman represents Christ. Into a far country: The country is the earth. And to return: The return is to the home of the Heavenly Father.

v. 13. Called ten servants: The servants represent all those who have been entrusted with the interests of the kingdom. And gave them ten pounds: Each man was given a pound which amounted to about $16.00. While this seems to be a rather small amount, yet at that time it had a purchasing power considerably larger than today.

v. 14. His citizens: They represent the Jews who repudiated the claims of our Lord. Ambassage: A delegation of men with a message.

v. 15. That he might know what they had gained by trading: There can be no evasion of the day of accounting. Very often it is delayed, but it always comes.

v. 16. Thy pound hath made ten pounds: We hear much these days about Christian Socialism. In this parable we must certainly see that the socialism of Jesus does not kill incentive. Just here, he approves of the accumulation of money by investment.

v. 17. Have thou authority over ten cities: It is not the success of the servant which is rewarded. He is rewarded because he has been a good servant: because he has been true to the little charge. It was equally as fortunate for the ten cities as for the good servant.

v. 18. Thy pound, Lord, hath made five pounds: This man had been true to his charge, too, but he probably did not have as great ability as the other man.

v. 19. Be thou also over five cities: Responsibility and honor are in proportion to ability and effort. This man was given a work, which he showed a capacity for doing.

v. 20. Here is thy pound which I kept laid up in a napkin: Notice that it is the pound that was kept in the napkin, not the talent. The talent, in Matt. 25:24-30, was hid in the earth.

v. 21. I feared thee, because, etc.: This man, by this confession, clearly indicates that he has not the proper conception of the character of his master. It is a fundamental to Christian growth, that disciples of Christ know the true character of their master.

v. 22. Out of thine own mouth I will judge thee: So, we are to be judged for the use we make of our pounds. Not by hearsay, but "out of our own mouths" shall we be judged. Taking up that which I laid not down and reaping that which I did not sow: The master quotes after him, these words, which probably form a proverbial saying applied to grasping persons.

v. 23. Then wherefore gavest thou not my money into the bank, etc.: The master argues that, if it were true that he was such a man, then there was all the more reason why he the servant should have been even more diligent and put the money in tne bank, thus avoiding all risk of loss.

v. 24. Unto them that stood by: His officers.

v. 25. Lord, he hath ten pounds: They could not understand his great generosity to the good servant. God is unstinted in his rewards for faithfulness.

v. 26. Unto him that hath shall be given: If we use our gifts we shall have more. But from him that hath not, even that which he hath shall be taken away from him: If we fail to use the gifts which we have, though they be small, they, too, shall be taken from us.

v. 27 These words are directed to "them that stood by."

At the Heart of the Lesson.

BY REV. A. Z. CONRAD, PH.D.

MISINTERPRETATIONS OF THE TRUTH.

We are born with a bias. Heredity counts for much. Early environment gives a bent to our thinking and doing. In its more plastic period the mind is susceptible to impressions which have a lasting influence upon character. The clay on the wheel will respond to the slightest touch, but the vase from the furnace will break before it will bend. Truth has to fight its way for acceptance. It makes progress in the teeth of the storm. The mental and moral twist of men results in defective vision. Misunderstanding and misinterpretation are inevitable in consequence of human prejudice and human limitation. Prejudged cases are not helped by the multiplication of witnesses. Logic is useless when irrevocable conclusions are reached. Only the open mind is worth approaching with persuasive appeal.

The concluding part of the eleventh verse is the key of the parable of the pounds. "Because they supposed that the kingdom of God was immediately to appear." They had misinterpreted Christ's doctrine of the kingdom. Why? Because they had conceptions of the Messianic reign and rule which were almost ineradicably fixed. The Jewish conception of the Messiah was that of an earthly reigning prince who should begin the conquest of the world and in the end be the crowned conqueror. So prejudiced were they in favor of this earthly Messiah that when Christ appeared they were unprepared to credit his claim for Messianic honor. Even His own disciples misunderstood Him and were momentarily expecting the inauguration of a tremendous revolution.

THE RETURN OF THE ABSENT LORD.

"When He was come back again having received the kingdom." This refers to the coming of Christ, His second coming. It was evidently intended to convey to the disciples the fact that the return of the Lord was not to be expected at once. This was the very point concerning which they were in error. He desired to correct this misinterpretation of what He had said. "The far country" indicates that a considerable time was expected to elapse before His return. The whole gist of the parable is to the intent that Jesus did not wish them to understand that His return was to be immediate. He did wish them to understand that during His seeming absence they would be expected diligently to engage in extending the kingdom. Jesus received the kingdom just as He had declared both in His utterances to the disciples and in His prayer, He received the kingdom through having overcome the world and having fulfilled his mission to the world. "I go to prepare a place for you," He said, "and if I go I will come again and receive you unto Myself." In His last words to His disciples He bade them to be steadfast in prayer until the Holy Spirit should come upon them.

STRICT ACCOUNTABILITY.

"He commanded these servants unto whom He had given the money, to be called to Him that He might know what they gained by trading." He had a right to expect industrious and diligent engagement. He had a right to expect a careful and cautious investment of what had been entrusted to them with the natural returns. He was asking them nothing unnatural, nothing unreasonable. They were indebted to Him to do their best with what He had intrusted to them. The whole question was one of faithful investment. Zealousness and good judgment alike were expected to be employed. Precisely this applies to the way in which we shall let our light shine before the world and unfold the sacred message to those who do not know it or who have disregarded it. We are expected to extend the kingdom by increasing the number of those who accept the Lordship of Jesus. It is idle for men to excuse themselves from the responsibilities of life. We are to be held strictly accountable for what we are and what we do and no specious arguments, no sophistical reasoning need be employed for purposes of deceiving others or in self defence. Nothing can change the fact that we are directly responsible to God for every thought and every act of life.

THE REWARDS OF SERVICE.

"Well done, thou good servant. Because thou wast found faithful in a very little have thou authority over ten cities." There is no reward for service comparable with the hearty approbation of Him who appoints us to service. The "Well done" of Jesus Christ is Heaven itself. The sense of divine approbation brings to the heart a peace which nothing else affords. The applause of men counts for little. The approval of God counts for everything. Personal promotion is the result of faithfulness. No self-exaltation can lift us one inch beyond our level of life.

"The second had gained five pounds." Perhaps there had been less of diligence. Perhaps he was less deserving. There was no condemnation because he had at least increased to some extent that which had been intrusted to him. However, we do not read here any "Well done." It reads simply that He gave him a promotion relative to his faithfulness to Himself. He was to be over five cities and not ten. It is very significant that there are distinctions and differences even in the matter of divine approbation. An enthusiastic service and a whole hearted devotion wins a divinely enthusiastic beatitude. The day of reckoning may be the day of death or it may be the hour of the second coming of Christ, or it may be the great general judgment. All this is a matter of secondary interest as compared to the vital fact itself that no one can escape from rendering an account of the deeds done in the body.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR JULY 22.

Paul the Missionary—Second Journey. Acts 15:36; 18:22.

The expansion of a religion is a test of its doctrines. The missionary emphasizes the universal elements of his faith. He learns to let men think as they please about the local and temporary. Paul the preacher of Christ to all men dropped from his teaching many elements that were precious to the Jewish disciples. The Jewish brethren very naturally questioned his loyalty to the gospel. Paul in reply said that men were to be saved through Christ. They therefore had a right to do whatever was consistent with obedience to him. To impose Jewish customs upon non-Jews would have been a most un-Christian procedure. The lesson to us of today is obvious. We must determine the value of local and racial practices in the light of the world-wide gospel.

AT PHILIPPI.

The companion of Paul on his second journey was Silas. A contention over the conduct of John Mark led to the separation of Paul and Barnabas. Barnabas and his companion returned to Cyprus. Paul visited the churches he had established on his first journey and confirmed them in the faith. But he was not content with this. He longed to extend his ministry to other regions. Forbidden to enter the countries of Asia Minor, he finally came to Troas. Here the man of Macedonia gave his call for help. In answer to the call, Paul was soon in the city of Philippi. Here he first preached in Europe. Here he found friends who had fellowship with him in the furtherance of the gospel until he was lodged in prison at Rome. Here he met and defeated the commercialism that traffics in souls. In the jail at Philippi Paul illustrated the method of making opposition and persecution preach the truth. The song of hope and joy from men whose backs were bleeding had power to create faith in the hearts of men.

AT ATHENS.

If the enemies a man has testify to his strength, the seventeenth chapter of Acts contains all the evidence we need that Paul was a man of tremendous force. Men were not simply displeased with him, they were filled with wrath, and their wrath did not cease with the going down of the sun. The stay of Paul at Thessalonica produced a church that later received his commendation for its work of faith and labor of love and patience of hope. The wrath of the Jews of Thessaloica followed him to Berea and drove him thence. At Athens he encountered a more serious difficulty. The professional wise man who mocks at enthusiasm and who is sure he knows the way of approach to truth or that truth is unattainable is harder to reach than the bigot.

AT CORINTH.

Corinth was a commercial city. It had the enterprise and the vices of commercialism. It was the capital of the Roman province of Achaia. "It was proud of its political priority, proud of its commercial supremacy, proud also of its mental activity and acuteness." It was "perhaps the most licentious city in the Empire. As numerous expressions and a variety of well-known passages testify, the name of Corinth had become a by-word for the grossest profligacy." "Corinth was the Empire in minature." Any one who could make his voice heard in Corinth was addressing a cosmopolitan and representative audience, many of whom would be sure to go elsewhere, and might carry with them what they had heard. "To this conceited, self-satisfied city came the apostle with his determination not to know anything among them but Jesus Christ and him crucified." He got a hearing.

Acts 15:36-18:22 Phil. 1:3-11; 4:10-18; 1 Thess. 1:2-8; 2:1-8; 3:1-7; 1 Cor. 1:20-25; 2:1-5.

The Gospel of The Kingdom

as the basis for your work. This is a monthly magazine, edited by Dr. Josiah Strong. In this little publication is given the most vital, timely, thought provoking, reverent and satisfying treatment of the big problems of the social order that has ever been offered to Sunday-schools. Rev. S. G. Buckner, pastor at Somerset, Pa., who uses this literature in his great men's class of 150, says it is absolutely the best thing published for the men's Bible class. The subscription price—50c a year—makes it less expensive than the usual adult lesson literature. Pastors and church leaders who wish to put into their church work new zest and inspiration will recognize at once the value of starting their classes in the study of Social Reform. "CLAPTRAP" METHODS of promoting Sunday school work are rapidly passing. The pronouncements of the late meeting of the Religious Education Association, held at New Haven, indicate that fact. Our constructive leaders are deploring the shouting and "boosting" methods of contests and special days. The Sunday School is coming to a sober realization of its responsibility for the building of Christian character and the inculcation of spiritual ideals in those to whom it ministers. Thoughtful leaders know that these can not be secured by noise and clatter and inflated attendance. It is to be hoped that the Disciples of Christ will not fall out of line with the sane, sensible Sunday school army that is now looking toward other goals than "great reports," big attendance and weighty offerings.

We call your attention to the BETHANY SYSTEM OF SUNDAY SCHOOL LITERATURE which has for its purpose the BUILDING OF CHARACTER:

I. THE BETHANY GRADED LESSONS, the superior in quality, we believe, of all other similar systems of literature. Compare it with others. We would prefer that you do this.
II. THE "CONQUEST" and other WEEKLIES, attractive but constructive and sober.
III. THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM, a magazine of social service.
IV. THE LIFE OF JESUS, a thorough, constructive review of the life of the Master.

Character Talks

Rev. J. H. Goldner.

WHAT RELIGION IS

Religion is not an inheritance but an experience. We inherit doctrines, creeds, hymns, organizations and buildings and even a mighty leaning toward religion. A son can inherit from his father, who was a physician, an office, books, instruments and drugs, and even a strong leaning toward the practice of medicine; but not his medical experience and skill. So we can inherit our parents' forms of Godliness, but not their experience and attainments in Godliness. A religion presupposes a religious experience. By a religious experience I mean that the personal, ever-present God shall have become a fact and force in my experience, such a reality to my consciousness, that my intellect is changed and I think differently; my feelings are changed and I love differently; my will is changed and I purpose differently. "Wherefore if any man is in Christ, he is a new creature; the old things are passed away; behold they are become new."

"The Conquest is just what you say it is—'a journal of character-building,'" writes one of our superintendents. "The Conquest" takes itself seriously. That's why its readers take it seriously. Is the paper your school is taking one that emphasizes the things that should be emphasized in a Sunday school—serious Bible study, religious ideals and Christian service? "The Conquest" has as its aim not simply to give schools what they have been used to—small talk of school work; but to publish such material as will actually GROW CHARACTER.

Have you seen "The Conquest?" "Character Talks" is one of its features. J. H. Goldner, of Cleveland, will contribute the "Talks" for July. Send for a copy of "The Conquest."

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stoek. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System, published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Character Talks

By J. H. Goldner, Pastor Euclid Avenue Christian Church, Cleveland

"SHOW US THE FATHER"

Rev. J. H. Goldner.

"Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us." This was Philip's challenge to Jesus. We talk much about our Father, telling of his nearness, power, love, sympathy, interest, care, and helpfulness. Under the circumstances the world is fully within its rights when it challenges us to show our Father. The end of all controversy, of all uncertainty about our Father will be to show him. How shall we show him? No purely intellectual process ever led anyone to the Father. I would as soon expect a man to find the mythical pot of gold at the end of the rainbow as to expect a man to find God at the end of a syllogism. When God wished to unmistakeably show himself to the world as Father, he expressed himself in terms of a human life. Jesus did not answer Philip's challenge by arguing with him; but by calling attention to his own life. "Have I been so long a time with you and dost thou not yet know me, Philip? He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." There is but one finally effective way to show the Father and that is: under all circumstances to live as if we had a Father. Show the Father in that way and it will suffice; for men who would not be convinced by the profound arguments of learned scientists, philosophers, or theologians, have found the Father as expressed in some simple, consistent, obscure Christian life. Here is the counsel of Peter in his first letter: "For so is the will of God, that by well doing ye should put to silence the ignorance of foolish men."

"The Conquest is just what you say it is—'a journal of character-building,'" writes one of our superintendents. "The Conquest" takes itself seriously. That's why its readers take it seriously. Is the paper your school is taking one that emphasizes the things that should be emphasized in a Sunday school—serious Bible study, religious ideals and Christian service? "The Conquest" has as its aim not simply to give schools what they have been used to—small talk of school work; but to publish such material as will actually GROW CHARACTER.

Have you seen "The Conquest?" "Character Talks" is one of its features. J. H. Goldner, of Cleveland, will contribute the "Talks" for July. Send for a copy of "The Conquest."

A Real Bargain!

We have purchased a limited supply of THE MESSAGE OF THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST, BY DR. PETER AINSLIE, and THE CALL OF THE CHRIST, BY DR. H. L. WILLETT. The writers of these books need no introduction to our people, as both are well known throughout our entire brotherhood. It is not often that we are in a position to offer books of this character at such a bargain. You should have them in your library.

THE MESSAGE OF THE DISCIPLES has had a large sale and is now in its second edition. It consists of a series of lectures delivered before the Yale Divinity School with unusual success, and is an interpretation of the message, origin and history of the Disciples of Christ. Every minister and every layman should possess a copy of this work. . .. .

THE CALL OF THE CHRIST is a study of the challenge of Jesus to the present century. It has been called "a work of striking power and reality," a positive yet persuasive presentation of the claims of Christ. It will strengthen the faith of those in doubt, cheer the sorrowing and impart to every reader a satisfactory and realistic vision of the Master. A new edition of this book is now on the press, which shows that the demand is not yet supplied.

The Tyranny of Precedent

These precious habits of ours, which we must stick to because we have always done so, how did we form them? We inherit some of them, and we make others. Then we bow down and worship the works of our own hands. "Fools make fashions; wise men follow them." Therein the fools are wiser than their followers; they at least have initiative.

You remember the poem of Sam Walter Foss, based on the tradition that the streets of Boston are laid out along the paths made by good old Parson Blackstone's cows:

One day through the primeval wood
A calf walked home as good calves should,
But made a trail, all bent askew,
A crooked trail, as all calves do.
Since then three hundred years have fled,
And I infer the calf is dead.

But still he left behind his trail,
And thereby hangs my moral tale.
The trail was taken up next day
By a lone dog that passed that way,
And then a wise bell-wether sheep
Pursued the trail o'er vale and steep;
And drew the flock behind him too,
As good bell-wethers always do.
And from that day, o'er hill and glade,
Through those old woods a path was made.

And many men wound in and out,
And dodged and turned and bent about,
And uttered words of righteous wrath
Because 'twas such a crooked path;
But still they followed—do not laugh—
The first migrations of that calf,
And through the winding wood-way stalked,
Because he wobbled when he walked.

This forest path became a lane
That bent and turned and turned again;
This crooked lane became a road,
Where many a poor horse with his load
Toiled on beneath the burning sun,
And traveled some three miles in one.
And thus a century and a half
They trod the footsteps of that calf.

The years passed on in swiftness fleet,
The road became a village street;
And this, before men were aware,
A city's crowded thoroughfare.
And soon the central street was this
Of a renowned metropolis!
And men two centuries and a half
Trod in the footsteps of that calf.

Each day a hundred thousand rout
Followed the zigzag calf about,
And o'er his crooked journey went
The traffic of a continent.
A hundred thousand men were led
By one calf near three centuries dead.
They followed still his crooked way,
And lost one hundred years a day;
For thus such reverence is lent
To well-established precedent.

A moral lesson this might teach
Were I ordained and called to preach;
For men are prone to go it blind
Along the calf-paths of the mind,
And work away from sun to sun
To do what other men have done.

They follow in the beaten track,
And out and in, and forth and back,
And still their devious course pursue
To keep the path that others do.
They keep the path a sacred groove,
Along which all their lives they move;
But how the wise old wood-gods laugh,
Who saw the first primeval calf.
Ah, many things this tale might teach—
But I am not ordained to preach.

Mr. Foss merely told the story, and declined to moralize because he was not called to preach. Some one who has been called to preach ought, therefore, to do a little moralizing about the blind following of calf-paths of the soul. "Walk in the old paths." Yes, for there is a presumption of safety where other men have trodden. But who made the old paths? Civilization is constantly straightening its road, reducing the grades on them, and providing for better transportation, and now and then surveying a new road.

Our habits are a large part of our stock in trade. Our good habits are our stability in righteousness. We cannot live effectively without acquiring habits. But life is not mere habit. Life is progress. Life is attainment. And he who attains must now and then survey a new path, and he will do well to try to straighten a few of its windings.

The Goal of God

BY C. SILVESTER HORNE.

Editor's Note: Readers of The Christian Century will remember the details of the death of Mr. Horne, reported in a recent issue of this paper. Mr. Horne was probably England's greatest "social service" preacher, but gave up the ministry to become a Member of Parliament. Last spring he came to Yale to deliver the Lyman Beecher Lectures. Leaving the States by boat for Toronto, he was stricken with heart failure and died immediately.

YE HAVE seen the end of the Lord." In other words, "Ye have had sight of the goal of God. There is a difference between you and all others in that you in Christ had sight of the goal of God." There is, as we cannot help noticing, a new note among the Apostles. They have passed out of the hesitancy, of the doubting words of Thomas: "Lord, we knew not whither. How can we know the way?" It is now "We have seen the goal of God." The two great evils of life exist for them no longer. They do not doubt that there is a goal, that there is a consummation, a far-off divine event to which the whole creation moves; and they do not mistake the goal, and set their hearts upon any false hope. They know the end of the Lord because they know the Lord, who is full of pity and merciful.

The teaching of this passage is very simple; and yet I do not know that there is any lesson that our time needs more than this, for it is a rebuke to our tendency to pronounce judgment upon as if we were dealing with the final problem. We take up an unfinished article of manufacture, with its tangled, ragged edges, and its coarse and unattractive appearance. "Call this the fruit of design!" we say. To our eyes it is so shapeless that we may go so far as to say that there is no evidence of a design in it, or if there is, it is a blundering and ineffectual piece of work, and proves either a lack of power in the designer or else a breakdown in the machinery. The simple fact, of course, is that it is unfinished. The edifice is only half built, and we do not hold the key to the whole design. We prematurely and unjustly pronounce judgment upon the sketch, crude and imperfect, as if it bore all the final touches of the master's hand. Impatience is always injustice.

There are many evidences in the Epistles that already some of the Christians of the Early Church who had been carried away by the new enthusiasm were growing impatient, because of what seemed to them a delay in ushering in the kingdom. Their minds were unacclimatised to the idea of a slow and gradual coming of Christ. To them the most palpable feature of the present situation was the losses they were sustaining, the cruelties and the persecution which they were suffering. Every day saw their brethren taken from their side. Every day saw widows and orphans left in unspeakable sorrow, anxiety and suffering; and if you had gone to these people and told them that their day of suffering was only a fleeting moment of the day of Christ, and yet it was as great and necessary a stage in the sublime process as that magnificent moment when the trumpet shall sound, the coping-stone fall into its place and the majestic work stand out in all its beauty, they would hardly have understood what you were talking about. They pointed to the existing misery. They said, "Don't you see the poverty; the reign of terror? What a mess is here, what a tangle of threads! There is no sort of design perceptible. All is chaos and confusion. Surely if Christ were all that we have been taught to believe Him to be His handicraft would be very different from this?" Hemmed in by the dark high prison walls of their present sorrow, they were tempted to apply to the present process the tests that only belonged to the final problem.

The argument which the Apostle James brings to bear upon these poor souls, doubting and troubled as they were, is drawn from the realm of literature—the Book of Job. James does not elaborate his argument, but we may be permitted to indicate it in some detail. Suppose in reading that great book we read it as we are apt to read our own life; suppose we apply to the central period of Job's story the tests that are intended to be applied only to the final achievement, what a tangle of trouble and error and misery the life of Job appears! A superficial observer is staggered by the unlimited suffering of a good man, and straightway, if he is like many people of the present day, flies off at a tangent often into naked atheism. "This is a nice thing for your God to do!" he says. "Look at it. This man is not only submerged by the sorrow, but even the comfort of his faith has been taken away from him. He is involved in the cruelties of persecution. He is the victim of an intolerable and inexplicable agony of body and of mind, and all undeserved. For my own part," he says—and goes out and says it in Hyde Park—"for my part, I cease to believe in a God who has done such a cruel piece of work as that." Just there is your trouble, my friend. God has not done it.

"Ye have seen the end of the Lord, how that the Lord is full of pity and merciful."—James v, 11.

GOD IS ONLY DOING IT.

This is one step in a long process. It is a painful stage, I grant you, and a mysterious one, but the salient fact is this—that it is not the last. These ragged edges of Job's faith, these touches of temper, this crookedness of vision—it is a sorry product; but it is not the finished and complete product. The Divine Artist is still at work upon the picture. God is still making His man.

If you were to go to-day into the operating-room of one of the great hospitals, you might see things that would make you shudder and suffer in agony of terror and of horror. Your first impression would be that this kind of work was the devil's business, and that it could not possibly be full of pity and mercy. But possibly months after this you meet the very person who was the subject of the operation, and you discover that he is now free from pain, rejoicing in a new lease of health and life, and you begin to deplore the harshness and the folly of your rash and impatient judgment. You see clearly now that to condemn as if it were the end, what is only a painful intermediate state, is an unpardonable injustice.

So the Apostle James speaks to his Jewish readers. He says: "You know how the Book of Job ended. You have seen the goal of God. God's goal is to make saints, and He will make them, and He is always full of mercy and of pity."

"But

all this suffering?" somebody says "Could not God have done without it?" I am not going into that question, for the reason that whatever we say we shall always end here—that we cannot price character in the currency of pain. All I know is this: the tender heart, the humble spirit, the earnest, chastened temper, the sense of a Divine love constraining through all the extremities of affliction—there are no gains in all the world that are comparable to them—and if you will tell me how you can get them without the pain, then we will discuss the matter again. To this all the painful intermediate process is leading up. You did not see it at the time. You thought faith was being taken away from that man when it was only being reconstructed. You thought character was being chastened and strengthened. You judged by the process when you should have waited for the product—the goal of God. The Lord is full of pity and mercy.

We need to remember that as much as ever to-day, even though we have a more adequate sense than the Apostle James of the history of our race. We know to-day, or we should know, that we are not living in a made world, but in a world that is in the making. You say, "God made the world." I say, No, sir—

GOD IS MAKING THE WORLD.

We have no perfect humanity. We have a humanity that is slowly being perfected. It is tangled enough with black threads, I confess, and all we can do is to hold up such lighted torches of certainty as we can discover amid the mass of confusion and chaos in which we are seldom involved.

When sometimes in a quiet hour I try to gather up my own reminiscences of the bereavements through which I have known Christian people to pass, I am astonished at the impressive uniformity of testimony. There are always circumstances of mercy. Even the most stunned from the blow are able to realize that the hand that has smitten them is merciful. Sometimes the insight only comes with the fleeting of the years in the final retrospect. We grow surer and more confident as the years go by that, however the present appearances deceive us, if we could see the end it would be merciful. Yes, there are lighted torches enough in life if only we had the courage and the wisdom to walk by them.

A young fellow in one of the London hospitals, suffering from the consequences of his own folly and self-indulgence, said to the visiting doctor, who mentioned it to me, "Sir,

GOD ALMIGHTY WRITES A VERY PLAIN HAND."

He does. The mercy of the providential order of His universe is that sin never goes unpunished. The punishment is not always so open for every one to see as in the case I have indicated, and for this reason. No human eye can watch by the death bed of an ideal. No physician can operate for cataract of the soul. Men who seek the world and gain it do not always lose their souls, but as it has been ably said, "they always lose soul." That is part of the penalty they pay, the punishment they endure. They may not trouble about it at the time, but when some day they have the leisure and disposition to read the moral of their lives it is very legible. God Almighty writes a very plain hand. They can hardly fail to see that the law of degeneration which they have despised is not a law of cruelty and vengeance, but a law of mercy and of love which would fain have gathered them under its wings, but they would not.

Let us take this truth and turn it round to the practical application to ourselves. Surely one of the great calls of this Book is this, "Be ye imitators of God." We have seen the goal of God. What is the goal of life? The end is to be mercy, kindness, pity, helpfulness, unselfishness, love, humanity, brotherhood. That is the goal of God. One of the things for which we always suffer in life is simply mistaking the goal. Whether as individuals or as nations we go blundering on, because

WE MISTAKE THE GOAL.

I sometimes think the greatest tendency to-day is to make knowledge final, to make what we call culture, education, the goal of life. We are familar with the saying concerning education that "it is a fine thing in itself, and invaluable for purposes of self-advancement." That may be very true, but to say so in so many words is to bundle the greatest ideal into the back-ground of life.

Take the great profession of medicine and surgery, one of the most humane of all the professions. Surgical and medical studies are so fascinating in themselves, their inherent interest is so great, that to pursue them for their own sakes, to make them an end in themselves, is by no means unnatural. Yet there is no one but does not realize what the loss in nobility and power there would be if ever the ideal of mercy and of pity were to pass out of so great a profession, and how the very science would become sordid and secularized and divorced from everything that elevates and uplifts and inspires. The highest and the greatest discoveries in the world have been inspired, not by the love of science, but by the love of man.

If, however, any argument could be said to be settled by historical and experimental evidence this was settled through the period that we call the "Renaissance," the time of the revival of learning in Europe, when tens of thousands of people mistaking the goal of life, caught up by the great new inspiration and enthusiasm of scholarship and knowledge and learning, were confusing things as perhaps never before or since. The boast of that age was that all satisfaction was to be found in books and learning. "This is Life," they said, "—to know." And we know the result.

Even then there were some of the greater souls of the Renaissance who made the supreme discovery and saw what Jesus saw, and they brought their richly-stored minds, their large endowments of genius, and they laid them at the foot of Christ, and dedicated them freely and fully to humanity, the spirit of brotherhood and of helpfulness. They discovered in the words of the old catechism that the chief end of man is not to know all things, but to glorify God by holiness of life and by service to humanity. It is an old and well-worn lesson now, and yet in these days of reviving scholarship it is well if any one of us has learned the truth that the bread of knowledge is not the bread on which we feed our souls, but and charity which is the satisfying bread for our humanity.

You with your face in your hands, weeping over the broken, blundering, stumbling life of yours—"This is what after all my vows and all my prayers," you say, "He has made me." No! no! He has not made you, you are only in the making. Have you never watched the building of a house, or a church? Look in when the work is half-done. What a chaos? See the rough stones that have yet to be shaped and polished and set. What sharp discipline will be needed there! And, lo! yonder workman has blundered, and there is bad work to be taken out, and the clouds of dust go up again, and there is more confusion. One man, and only one, keeps a serene face and a quiet heart. He has seen the end of it all. He does not judge the rough and jagged masonry as if it were the perfect achievement. He is thinking of the day when the corner-stone shall be raised to its place, the scaffolding shall fall, and the last vestiges of disorder shall disappear, the dust shall be swept away, and there shall stand out fair and noble the finished fabric before all men's eyes. He has seen the end of the intermediate process, and it is well.

So shall it be for all who keep the vision undimmed. They, too, shall forget the things that were behind. There shall be oblivion over all the faults and stumblings, the doubts and dreads, the disorders and the defeats, in the day when the Son of Man shall see of the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied.

What sure hope can the world have concerning its future, save in the light of the promise which shines from Him? —J. G. Greenough.

Religious Education:

Its Problem and Program

BY JOSEPH C. TODD.

Editor's Note: Mr. Todd, because of his long-time interest in the problems of religious education, and of his actual achievements in connection with the Bible Chair work at Indiana's State University, at Bloomington, is entitled to a hearing on the important topic he has chosen. We take pleasure in presenting his paper to Christian Century readers.

THE purpose of religious education is to transmit to the children of the present the religious inheritance of their fathers. Each new generation has a right to two inheritances from the past, the inheritance of wealth and the inheritance of thought. We inherit the wealth of our fathers and their fathers in the accumulated results of labor; in cities, roads, improved farms, railroads, cables, telephones, silver and gold. Each generation passes on to the next all the accumulated wealth of the world. Education is the transmission of the accumulated store of thought. All the agencies that aid in passing the thought, the mental products of the past to the next generation are educational agencies. This social task is accomplished by the home, the church, and the school by means of the blessing of language, the vehicle of thought, in written and spoken forms.

WHAT RELIGIOUS EDUCATION IS.

Religious education is the process of transmitting to our children the accumulated wealth of religious thought and experience. The home, the church and the school are the agencies. And herein lies the problem of religious education. Is not the childhood of the present being robbed of its wealth of religious inheritance? The home is no longer a place of religious instruction, except in rare instances; It is no longer a place of religious life as a part of the home activity. The church functions as a place of worship and an institution for directing certain social service activities. Through its Sunday-school work it is making the beginning of a system of religious education. But the Sunday-school leaders know better than anyone else that the children of the nation are not receiving a religious education through our present Sunday-schools. The public grade schools and high schools make no attempt to transmit the literature and thought of religion. The great state universities to which our children have gone this year, 147,000 strong, are legally barred from passing to its students their rightful religious inheritance. Few of the independent and private corporation colleges give it any attention at all. The church colleges are the only institutions in the land that make a serious attempt at a true education in which all the thought inheritance of the past, including the most important, religious thought, is given to their students. But a very small percentage, indeed, of the children of the nation ever attend church colleges. Which means that we have no adequate system of religious education in America. The problem is made evident by these facts.

A SERIOUS SITUATION.

Before any program of religious education can be successfuly carried out, we must become deeply concerned over our present misfortune and its costly consequences. We would quickly change the conditions if we were aroused to the real seriousness of the situation. Cripple our national system of schools and we would endanger the republic. But we are tolerating a badly crippled religious educational system with the result that the foundations of morality and religion are threatened. We are actually "Blasting at the Rock of Ages" by our failure to make systematic instruction in the literature and life of religion a part of the training, a part of the educational process of our schools. The first step to be taken is for us all to come to know that religious education is actually a part of education, the most vital part. This is expressed by Pres. N. M. Butler when he says:

Rev. Joseph C. Todd.

"Education is a spiritual growth toward intellectual and moral perfection.

"That knowledge is of most worth which stands in closest relation to the highest forms of the activity of that spirit which is created in the image of him who holds nature and man alike in the hollow of his hand."

A WAY OF PROCEDURE.

With a consciousness of the need of a religious educational system as effective in its results as our school system, how shall we proceed?

1. There is no need to consider the home as a hopeless religious education agency. If religion has passed out of the home as a part of its institutional activity, let's bring it back. It will mean much for religious education and save the home. Religious instruction and worship should be a part of the life of every home. Why not make it so?

2. The church must provide an adequate school of religious instruction that parallels the grade school and high school with courses in the literature and life of religion. These church schools of religious instruction must be as well conducted and as efficiently taught as the public schools. And they must be schools, not Sunday-schools. Let the Sunday-school continue, but these schools should be conducted five days in the week just like the public schools. If the churches were prepared to conduct such schools, the children could be released from the public schools an hour a day for this instruction.

3. When we come to the colleges, we have three classes of colleges: independent, church, and state. We need not consider the independent schools, for if religious education becomes a part of the institutional activities of the others, these will follow; they would be compelled to do so.

The church schools, church colleges are in the best position to make religious education a real factor in general education. This is their great advantage. This is their most important reason for existence.

THE STATE UNIVERSITY IS A FIELD.

The great and growing state universities afford us a difficult yet a most strategic field. At present the different religious bodies who have large enrollments are creating agencies of religious education about these schools. These agencies must have facilities for teaching and faculties equal in efficiency to any of the departments of learning in the university. So far as possible they must become a part of the institutional life of the school. In the end these different agencies should combine in one building and form a school of religion, a union school of religion, the teachers and support coming from the communions caring to participate. In a few instances, where one church has already established a strong Bible Chair or affiliated Bible college, the work may be so conducted as to supply the need of the university and be acceptable to other churches as a means of religious education for the whole school.

In a word, then, the problem of religious education is to hand down to the children of the present the religious literature and life of the past. During the grade school and high school age this must be the function of the home and the church. In college we must not cease our efforts until religious education has its rightful and necessary place in every college and university, so that the greatest gift our colleges make to their students is a knowledge of the supreme place in life they must give Jesus Christ.

For Thou art the dawn of the world, dear Lord,
Our Christ of the breaking day.
Death was the night,
And Thou, the first light

Jeremiah and the Women

Concluding the Series of Papers Dealing With the Records of An Ancient Prophet from the Standpoint of Today's Life.

BY WILLIAM E. BARTON.

I AM very glad you like these stories I have been telling you. A good many people have said to me that they never knew before that the prophets were so interesting. Of course they are interesting. They had the most thrilling human experiences, and while the conditions under which they worked were not quite identical with those of the modern ministry, they had the same essential features; for these prophets were preachers of righteousness, delivering to their congregations the messages which from time to time they received from God, and finding in their congregations the same diversified sorts of human nature that ministers find now. The trouble in our reading of the prophets is that we have quite forgotten that they had genuine experiences out of which the revelations of God came to them, and by means of which they were able to deliver those messages to their people. What I have been trying to show you in these stories is that God utilized those experiences of pastoral responsibility in the revelation of his truth.

A NEW REASON FOR READING THE PROPHETS.

Most Christian people get a net total of about six verses out of all the writings of all the prophets. It is their own fault and the fault of those who have taught them. If we only would read the prophets, not for the sake of digging out a few proof texts, most of which do not prove very much, but for the sake of finding out what the prophets really taught, we should find them thrilling with interest, and the general outlines of their message would be very easily intelligible.

We were talking about Rev. Dr. Jeremiah, and it is time we were bringing the story to a close. I wish I could think of a happier way to end it. I wish there were some story on record somewhere of a comfortable old age for that heroic old man, but I must tell the story just as the Bible tells it, and so I shall have to relate it with the very last scene recorded in his biography. You can find it in the 44th chapter of his book of sermons.

You will remember how after the fall of Jerusalem and the murder of Governor Gedaliah and the panic of the people, Jeremiah advised his congregation to stay in their own land and perpetuate the faith of their fathers, and how he warned them not to go down into Egypt, but when they disregarded his advice, he still stayed by them and accompanied them on that forbidden pilgrimage.

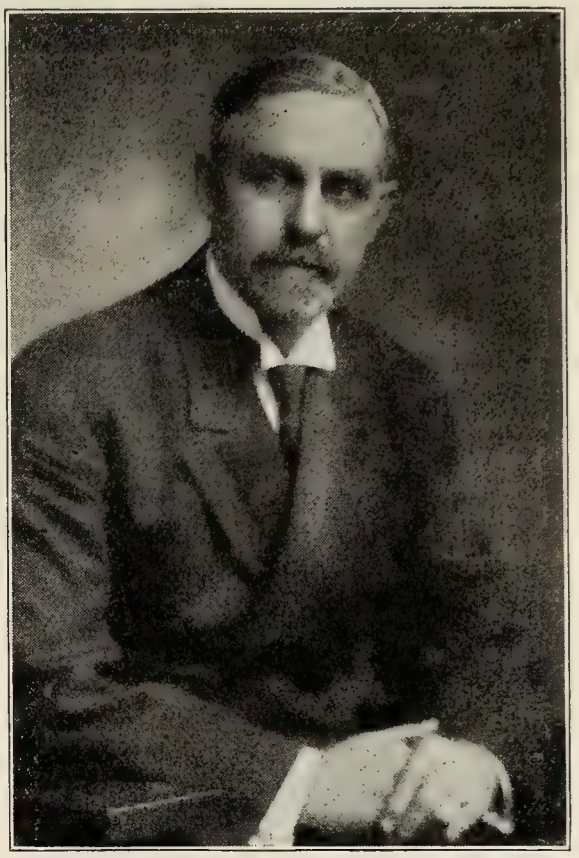
Apparently the Jews prospered so well in Egypt that his prediction of evil seemed entirely discredited. They put behind them all fear of invasion; they ceased to worry about maintaining the temple and defending a hopeless cause. They settled down into conditions of apparent comfort and began to make the best of things, as they supposed.

THE LADIES' ETHICAL CULTURE LEAGUE.

This very interesting thing happened and it has happened in other places. The men became frankly irreligious, but the women began organizing ethical culture societies and studying comparative religion and having what they thought a perfectly delightful time discussing the beauties of the heathen faiths while they stirred the lemon in their four o'clock tea. They would not invite Jeremiah to the Woman's Club and he knew better than to intrude upon them, but he preached to their husbands in the presence of the women and we have a rather long extract from that sermon.

"Do you know what your wives are doing?" he said. "Do you know that this ethical fad of theirs is sheer heathenism? Do you know that they are burning incense unto the Queen of Heaven?"

Now, whether the Queen of Heaven was the moon or Mrs. Eddy, we are not quite certain, but they had given the name "Queen of Heaven" to some woman or heavenly body or some vague idea and they were burning incense to her and they thought this new religion was something just too lovely for anything.



Dr. William E. Barton.

JEREMIAH IN A TIGHT PLACE.

It seems to have been at a meeting of the Men's Club of the church that Jeremiah took the matter up with the men. The women too were present. Perhaps they had been serving the dinner. Jeremiah was the guest of the evening and they probably thought he would make a few complimentary remarks about how good a thing it was to have an organization of this kind and how interesting it was to see the ladies present, and that he would tell one or two funny stories and sit down. But he did not do any thing of the kind. He told the men it was a shame for the men to allow their wives to practice heathen fads. Jeremiah commanded the men to tell their wives to stop burning incense to the Queen of Heaven. He supposed that if the men told the women to stop, they would stop. Jeremiah was a single man.

When he had finished his address the people began to answer him back. The answer of the men and women is given, somewhat mixed, in one paragraph, but the two can be separated. The women said it was just horrid; they thought Jeremiah was a mean old thing. They suggested that their husbands would have difficulty in controlling them if they tried; they were emancipated. But they added that their husbands really could not say anything for when the women burned incense to the Queen of Heaven their husbands came around and helped eat the cakes they baked.

The men at first felt rather sheepish over the matter, but they gathered courage when they saw their wives' resentment. And they told Jeremiah that he was a back number; that he ought to have stayed back in the land of old fogy ideas. They said to him that their wives should do as they pleased. As for themselves they did not see that it made any particular difference; all religions looked alike to them. Indeed, if there was any difference, it was in favor of the Queen of Heaven's religion. They really thought crops were better, and times less hard when the women worshiped the Queen of Heaven than when the whole family had to go to church, and the burden of religion was on the men.

They gathered courage as they proceeded these brave men who had their religion in their wives' name—and not very much of it, either—they grew very brave facing that one old man and they flouted him to his face, and thought they had shown him they were not afraid of him or his God.

A PROPHET WITHOUT HONOR.

It would be interesting to know how much those men could have done in the way of restraining their wives if they had tried. What we know is that they did not try.

"Then all the men who knew that their wives had burnt incense unto other gods, and all the women that stood by, a great multitude, even all the people that dwelt in the land of Egypt, in Pathros, answered Jeremiah saying: 'As for the word that thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the Lord we will not hearken unto thee." (Jer. 44:15, 15.)

The old minister was astonished at their bold and godless declaration. Again he pleaded with them to listen to his words and be obedient to his teaching, but they told him they did not care a rap for his sermons. They said: "We will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth, to burn incense unto the Queen of Heaven." Still the prophet remonstrated, and he told them evil would surely come upon them if they did this idolatrous thing. But the men answered that they had tried his religion and it had not paid. So far as they could see his preaching never raised the price of corn; and they were really more prosperous when they were godless and better off when they saved their pew rent.

By this time the women were getting their things on and the men pushed their chairs back and prepared to go home. The women said they thought Jeremiah was just a poor, broken-down old preacher, and it was a mistake that the church ever called him. It was time they had a younger man.

REQUIESCAT IN PACE.

I wish I knew some cheerful way to end this story. I have hunted through the Year Book of that period in a vain effort to find something which can soften down the hard outlines of this picture. Alas! this is the last recorded chapter in the life of Jeremiah. It is not the last chapter in his book, for the last part of the book is in confusion. The old minister attempted to do some literary work, to gather together a volume of his sermons and prepare them for publication, but he seems to have died before he finished it for he never succeeded in arranging his papers in chronological order and they were published some time afterward with no serious attempt to arrange them methodically, so one must hunt out the stories from the scattered memorabilia, interspersed as they are with his sermon notes.

ANCIENT EXAMPLE FOR MODERN PRACTICE.

This is the end of the story. This brave, good, old man, after years of faithfulness in the ministry, seems to have died in this country parish, far out on the frontier, and if anybody wept for him, or realized how great and good a man he had been among them, we have no knowledge of the fact. It remains to this day a sad commentary on the religion of the people in Migdol and Tahphanes and Noph and the country of Pathros that this earnest, devoted, scholarly man of God was permitted to preach his last sermon to small congregations of heedless people whose men had lost very nearly all their religion and whose women were hunting after religious fads.

Let us hope that nothing of this sort has ever happened in any other place and that it will never happen again.

So endeth the story of the life of the Rev. Dr. Jeremiah, pastor of the Christian churches in Jerusalem, Migpah and Migdol, and it is not without its lessons for these modern days.

Substantial Sunday School Building

BY O. A. ROSBORO.

Editor's Note: For a score of years Mr. Rosboro has been a leader in Sunday-school work. For several years he superintended the great Englewood school, and at present is Chairman of the Superintendents' Union of Chicago Disciples. He has a thorough understanding of the problems of Sunday-school building, and is a pronounced advocate of quiet, conservative methods of growing a school, as may be learned from the following article.

THE Sunday-school of today must meet the needs of those whom it reaches, and must reach those who need its teaching and influence. These statements have been confused by the narrow-mindedness of some people.

The building of a substantial Sunday-school is no easy task. There is many a school of which it might be said, "In the morning it flourisheth; in the evening it is cut down and withereth." With the change of a superintendent, or the inauguration of a new pastorate, some schools either "flourish" or "wither."

The fundamental plan upon which a substantial Sunday-school is built must be a thorough understanding of what the Sunday-school is or should be, and what its relation is or should be to the church.

The foundation comes next—an organization, not in name only, but one of permanency and consecration; not an organization in which the offices are awarded for the honor thus accorded those holding them, but one in which the tasks are recognized for their difficulties and the possibilities of development and experience. The substantial organization is one wherein every officer and teacher, regardless of his or her obligations, is a consecrated Christian, enthusiastic and alert to every responsibility; and inspired by a coöperative leadership of prayerful pastor and superintendent, to carefully instruct and guide those of all ages in the fundamental truths of Bible teaching. Above all, must the teachers be concerned as to how they live, how they prepare and impart the lessons taught; and all must be done with only the one purpose of winning the children and the older unsaved for Christ, and increasing Christian service of those already Christians. Is it always possible to obtain such a corps of efficient workers? Perhaps, not always; but this ideal can be attained.

GROWING A SCHOOL SPIRIT.

"School spirit" is the necessary superstructure or frame-work in the construction of the substantial Sunday-school. A genuine school spirit is not found in all schools. Why? The reason is not always apparent; though undoubtedly the trouble is wholly within the school itself. As surely as material used in a building must first be prepared in proper sizes to fit into the construction, so must there be harmony between all workers, all departments and branches of the school's activities, before the "school spirit" can be built up substantially. Never permit anything which would precipitate the least feeling between classes or departments, other than that of the most friendly nature. Contests within a school—between classes—are usually unwise, unless very judiciously managed. Children below the Intermediate department should be impressed with the "department" idea, rather than emphasize the "class" idea. A department spirit will grow, as the child's vision enlarges, into a "school spirit." Primary and junior children should always be considered as members of the department and never "classified" according to teacher or class. The genuine "school spirit" will reach out for increased numbers in every department and every class, and the entire school will undoubtedly build up a regular attendance which should, and probably will, average about 70 per cent of the total active enrollment. A substantially built Sunday-school should grow numerically and spiritually.

LOYALTY TO THE CHURCH.

Complete your substantial Sunday-school with a covering or roof of "Loyalty to the Church" in every phase of its work. The Sunday-school is not a separate institution unto itself, but is the recruiting department of the church, and as such must remain loyal to the church if either is to be effectual and substantial. When pastors realize more fully than some do how much assistance the Sunday-school, its workers and agencies can be to the church's activity, there will be cemented more firmly that affiliation between church and school necessary to both. Get your adult classes pledged and interested in attending the regular services of the church, and encourage them in coöperation with every activity of the church life. Unpleasant feelings and even a chasm at times are precipitated between the church and the Sunday-school, caused by some misunderstandings—sometimes between pastors and superintendents, sometimes between Sunday-school workers and those especially interested in other auxiliary work of the church; and sometimes because the church itself fails to recognize and help the school; and even some superintendents will thoughtlessly permit this strained relation between church and school to actually continue and grow. Loyalty to the church is absolutely essential.

MISSIONS IN THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

A building is not complete without equipment; neither is your Sunday-school complete or substantial without missionary enthusiasm, which it is possible to obtain through a constructive missionary instruction in all departments. Evangelism and spiritual development are of missionary inception, of which prayer and Bible study are component parts.

These are all practical problems which confront us today; but none are impossible of accomplishment. Few, if any, schools have substantially built every phase of their work.

It is possible to reconstruct the weak parts.

The sick need one to make them whole, the wanderer one to guide them, the thirsty the living fountain whereof they that partake shall thirst no more; the dead are in need of life, the sheep of the shepherd, and the children of the teacher; but all mankind needs Jesus—Clement of Alexandria.

An Exciting Day in Barcelona

FRANCIS E. CLARK, IN THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR WORLD.

I HAVE attended many an interesting Christian Endeavor rally, but never a more exciting one than in the great Spanish metropolis of Barcelona on the third day of May, 1914. We had reached the city the day but one before, and enjoyed a delightful Junior rally with Pastor Smith's great company of Junior Endeavorers in the suburb of Clot. We had had time also for refreshment and rest in the excellent Colegio Internacional of the American Board, with its splendid corps of teachers and its large company of bright and pretty Spanish girls, many of whom are Endeavorers.

But the excitement did not begin until Sunday, May 3, though there had been mutterings of a possible coming storm many days in advance. There were dire threats of vengeance, too, on the Endeavorers, and especially on the leaders who might take part in the coming meeting.

CATHOLIC PARTY AROUSED.

What crime, you will ask, had the Endeavorers committed which so roused the wrath of the extreme Catholic party?

Just this: they had secured for their Sunday afternoon meeting the Palacio de Bellas Artes, the largest and most beautiful hall in the city, a hall which seats nearly four thousand people, and is used only on great occasions.

Moreover, the mayor and city government had given them the use of this hall free of charge.

"It is not to be endured," said the Catholic hierarchy. "It will advertise Christian Endeavor and incidentally Protestantism. It will bring it to the front, and make it talked about. It must be stopped."

So the Archbishop of Tarragona, the highest ecclesiastical authority of the region, took a hand, and tried to stop it. Then the governor of all Catalonia pleaded with the mayor of Barcelona to rescind his permission. But the mayor is a republican, and knew that it would "queer him" with his own party if he yielded to the Clerical party; and he stood firm against all cajolery and threats.

By Friday and Saturday there was "a very pretty row" on, as some one expressed it. The newspapers took up the matter for and against the use of the hall, and added fuel to the flames. A riot was threatened; an attempt was made to frighten people from the hall by stories of certain bloodshed; and we said to ourselves, "There will be such a fright that the hall won't be half full." Even Rev. Franklin G. Smith, the president of the Spanish Christian Endeavor Union, the head and front of the movement to secure the big hall, and the indefatigable exponent of Protestant views in Barcelona, began to lose heart, a most unusual thing for him, for he is the bravest and cheeriest of men.

However, the Catholic party did not have everything their own way. Some papers were friendly to Christian Endeavor and some noncommittal. On Sunday morning a leading daily contained a satirical article from a supposed Catholic, who said as though on his knees and with tears in his voice: "O Mr. Mayor, please protect my faith! I fear if I go to this Protestant meeting I shall lose my faith! The government protects everything else. It puts a tariff on cloth, and so protects my clothes. It puts a tariff on my food, and so protects that, and thus keeps out foreign food; why should it not protect my faith, and keep out these foreigners with their new-fangled Christian Endeavor?"

Sunday morning came, and Sunday afternoon drew on; and about three o'clock we started from the Colegio Internacional for the great hall, some five miles away.

As we drew near, we saw that the place was alive with helmeted policemen in their fine blue uniforms, and also with the Civil Guards in gray, with decorations of the Spanish colors, yellow and red. Some were mounted, and many were on foot. At least five hundred policemen and soldiers were on duty. They made an imposing array, especially the mounted officers on their beautiful, sleek thoroughbreds. Every approach to the hall within half a mile was guarded by mounted police. Any mob that might assemble could be easily dispersed.

At the door of the hall only ticket-holders were admitted, and even then, if they looked suspicious, they were searched for concealed weapons, the police running their hands up and down the clothes and paying especial attention to the hip-pockets.

And it was well they did; for scores of suspects were turned away, some were locked up, and, according to the papers the next morning, the police secured a fine assorted collection of forty-eight "guns," large and small.

Certainly more than four thousand persons were in the hall, making far and away, by thousands, the greatest Protestant meeting ever held in Spain.

SOME CONVENTION FEATURES.

The representative of the mayor, who was himself detained by pressing business, sat beside the chairman. A dozen reporters sat at the tables below the platform. I counted six cameras for illustrated papers trained on us at one time, and three at another.

Everything went off like clockwork, and every one kept within his time. Three pastors made brief addresses; a young Endeavorer, from Madrid, spoke earnestly; another gifted Endeavorer gave a short recital on the magnificent organ, the pride of Barcelona, and perhaps the finest in all Spain; the Endeavorers sang three hymns in fine voice, and the Juniors two, a splendid mixed choir of six hundred voices, all of them Endeavorers, leading the singing. Mr. Smith interpreted for me with his usual life and vigor, as I tried briefly to tell of Christian Endeavor in all the world. The rumor had been industriously circulated for weeks before that I had come to Barcelona to denounce and berate the Catholic Church, and I took pains to say that Endeavorers denounce no man's faith and ridicule no man's belief.

BOMB CAUSES EXCITEMENT.

At the close came the roll-call of the societies, when each local society, about ten in all, stood together, repeated a verse of Scripture, and then brought their beautiful banners to the platform and stood in line amid cheers.

As I was about to slip out by a side door and make my way quietly home, a messenger came to me and said I was under police escort, and that the chief of police awaited us at the front door.

When we thanked him for his courtesy he modestly claimed that it was his business to keep order and protect life, and that an escort of police would see us to our lodgings.

Even then, though almost every one had left, hundreds of guards, mounted and on foot, held every street near the hall; a squad followed us for a long way; and three plain-clothes men rode with Dr. Gulick, the veteran missionary and Christian Endeavor pioneer, and Mrs. Clark and myself, all the way to the college, five miles from the hall, and would not leave us until they saw us safely behind the iron gates of the college yard.

When Mr. Smith reached his home in another part of the city, he found it guarded by special police; but he also learned that while he was at the meeting, the door of his church had been drenched with kerosene oil and an attempt made to set it on fire; but some neighbors discovered the fire, and put it out before much damage was done.

Moreover, a wicked-looking bomb was found in the great hall, but it had not exploded.

A REMARKABLE ACHIEVEMENT.

You can imagine what a ferment has been created. The papers all over Spain are full of it. The republican papers denounce the attempt to break up the meeting and create a riot, saying that it shows that the spirit of Spanish Catholics is the spirit of the Inquisition and of Torquemada. The Carlist (the extreme Catholic) press defend the attempted riot, and denounce the mayor for granting the hall, and the chief of police for his careful and effective preparations. The young Carlists threaten direful things, and intend to organize a great anti-Protestant demonstration on an early date.

Such a meeting was never before held in Spain. That such a meeting could be held was deemed incredible a month ago. Many Protestants can scarcely believe it now.

Thank God that Christian Endeavor has been the humble instrument of hastening the better day of religious freedom for this great historic kingdom!

SUNDAY-SCHOOL PEDAGOGY.

THE Sunday-school convention which has just been held in this city was a demonstration of the power and aggressiveness of the Sunday-school work throughout the world. Most of the constructive activity in connection with such a convention cannot be done in the open mass meetings, but is a part of the executive work of the organization. Similarly, it is difficult to secure the best results in the way of methodology in the crowded sessions, even though they may be of a departmental character. For this reason a large amount of interest attached to a four days' institute held last week at the University of Chicago, which was particularly intended for Sunday-school teachers and officers, and others interested in religious education. The general theme was "Religious Education and the Civic Ideal." Addresses were made by Dean Mathews and Professors Soares and Hoben, and by Prof. H. A. Smith, of the Chicago Theological Seminary, Prof. G. W. Fiske, of Oberlin, and Dr. H. F. Cope, of the Religious Education Association. Regular courses of instruction continued through the four days on such themes as "Civic Training in the Home," "The Problem of Amusement," "Religious Education as a Factor in Training for Country Life," "The Hymn Book as a Wonder Tale," "The Sunday-school as a Civic Force in City and Town," "The Anti-Social Grudge," "The Religious Awakening of Youth," "Juvenile Delinquency, the Sunday-school's Worst Challenge," and "The Moral Opportunity of the Public School." The attendance was large and a deep interest was shown by those who followed the work of the institute.

NEW THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL AT THE UNIVERSITY.

THE news that the Chicago Theological Seminary, the leading western educational foundation of the Congregational Church is to be moved from its present location on the west side to the campus of the University of Chicago, has awakened interest far and wide. This is the latest and most important step in the realization of President Harper's original plan for a great school of religion at the University, embracing institutions representing such of the Christian bodies as desire to coöperate with the university. The first institution to avail itself of this opportunity was the Disciples Divinity House which for more than twenty years has been in active service as a center for religious education for the Disciples of Christ. Soon after the establishment of this house the Cumberland Presbyterians followed the example. But the later union of that body with the Presbyterian Church led to the discontinuance of their work at the university. Two years ago the Ryder Divinity School was moved from Galesburg, Ill., to the university and is now in active operation. The coming of the Chicago Theological Seminary adds another most important factor to this group of institutions allied with the Divinity School of the university. The present buildings of the seminary at the corner of Washington and Ashland Boulevards are to be sold and new structures erected at the university. It is not improbable that a new group of theological buildings will be erected, representing not only the Divinity School, but the coöperating houses and colleges, and it is possible that the University Chapel, the crowning architectural work of the university, for which a million and a half of dollars have already been appropriated, will become the central and dominating feature of this complex of buildings for religious purposes. Negotiations are under way with other religious bodies for the removal of theological schools to the university in a similar coöperating plan. It will be seen that the step taken long ago by the Disciples in securing formal relationship with the University of Chicago was strategic and prophetic. Thus far the work of the Divinity House has been performed in the classrooms of the University. But the plans for the new buildings now proposed give promise of a visible embodiment of the ideal which shall adequately express the designs of those who have labored long at the task. More than this, the idea of Christian coöperation is given immense impetus by the progress of theological coöperation at the university.

DOCTOR BARTON'S ARTICLES.

WE PUBLISH in this number the last of Doctor Barton's striking Old Testament studies for this season. This series has dealt entirely with the fortunes of the prophet Jeremiah and has given a connected story of his life and preaching from his call to be a prophet to the end of his life. It has been an entirely unique contribution to Biblical literature and has been widely noted and commented on. One of the foremost homiletic journals has said of these articles that not in a decade has there been so notable a series in the sphere of Biblical interpretation.

No reader can doubt the high seriousness of Doctor Barton's method. His modernizations have been thoroughly reverent and have thrilled with human interest. We have abundant evidence that for many readers these articles have virtually added a book to the Bible. Hundreds of people who never thought of reading Jeremiah before are reading his prophecies now with a delight which they never expected to find in the prophetic literature of the Old Testament.

We congratulate our readers on this series and we are hoping to have another series from Doctor Barton in the autumn.

The last chapter published this week brings to mind a pathetic picture of an earnest, ardent and faithful old prophet contending for righteousness amid hard conditions.

MORITURI SALUTAMUS.

THERE has been much press comment recently upon the offer of a wholesale liquor house in Kansas City to sell its mailing list to establishments for the cure of drunkenness. Being about to retire from business and recognizing the signs of the times, this concern, as reported in the papers, has approached the various concerns that treat the habit of intemperance and offered to turn over to them the full list of its customers and those whom it had endeavored to secure as customers. In substance, the letter says that the firm is expecting to retire from business and possesses this valuable list secured at the expense of thousands of dollars in advertising. Each of these is a habitual user of liquor and each of them wishes he was rid of the habit. Our customers are your prospective patients.

We have no reason to doubt the good faith of this communication and commend it as a piece of genuine business shrewdness and are willing to believe that it may be also an evidence of genuine human sympathy for men who are struggling against the bondage of habit. At any rate, it is one of the signs of the times and shows how lightly the liquor business regards its own future in this country.

IT STANDS THE TEST.

NO MAN liveth unto himself. Men try to do so. They write books on political economy and even on ethics endeavoring to prove that there is no other way for men to live. But they are wrong.

Modern science gave to us the theory of the "struggle for existence" and of "the survival of the fittest" with its lessons that the race is to the swift and the battle to the strong. But it was inadequate. The mother bird risking her own life to save the nest is a part of the survival of the fittest; the qualities fittest to survive in a world like this have been created and transmitted by just such sacrifices, reaching from far down in the scale of life up to the summit crowded by the cross of Christ.

This world is knit together socially by the bonds of altruism. What are you working for? To get rich? For whom? For wife, children, loved ones. Much of the very selfishness of life is short-sighted and truncated altruism.

It was the service of Jesus Christ to the world that He disclosed, both in theory and practice, the permanent and practicable laws of life. In Him we have both precept and example; a life not lived unto self, a death fruitful of life to the world.

The thought of men has gone far afield in all the ages down to the present, seeking the real good of life, and a rational theory of conduct. And the thoughtful minds of all schools are coming to this common focus, that the goal of human life is not personal only but social, personal righteousness for the sake of a social salvation. And when they bring us this answer, lo, it is found that the same answer was given long ago, and has stood the test of the centuries.

THE FRIGHT OF THE POLICEWOMAN.

THE newspapers are poking fun at a Chicago policewoman who has asked for a policeman as escort home from her duties at night. They need not laugh. She ought to have an escort, and should ask for one without shame. Her duties as a policewoman involve no reasonable penalty of unpleasant experiences on her way home. Every woman is entitled to reasonable protection in the exercise of her duties or rights in the use of the streets. The fact that she is a policewoman in no way diminishes her right to protection. This particular woman is stationed in one of the passenger depots, where, we doubt not, a policewoman ought to be, and can render good service. If those duties keep her until a late hour of the night, and the streets are not safe for an unprotected woman, it is the business of the police department to furnish her one policeman or ten if she needs that degree of protection. A woman may be entirely competent to discharge police duties in a railway station, and yet be wholly unfitted by her sex for encountering rough men lurking in dark alley mouths at midnight. Let her have her escort. And yet, there is one thing better, and that is to make the streets so clean and safe that any woman, policewoman or not, shall be safe in any legitimate duty at any hour of the day or night. We appear to be at some distance from the time when that condition can be said to have been reached. Meantime, let the pleasant task of seeing her home fall to the bravest and best on the force. None but the brave deserve the fair.

SAVE THE QUAIL.

VERY seldom have we eaten quail on toast. In the first place, we have never felt sure that we knew how; in the second place, it seemed to us to cost the quail so much in proportion to the little good it did us, that we had some conscience about it. We shall now have other reasons. In the current issue of Farm and Fireside a contributor says that the chinch bug costs the farmers of the United States at least $100,000,000 a year. Various means for fighting these bugs have been devised but their most successful enemies are the birds of the air. In regard to the natural destroyers of this insect pest the author of the article writes as follows:

"If the law of the survival of the fittest applies in all cases, it is reasonable to believe that the ultimate check to the propagation of the chinch bug will come about by the birds that eat them at all stages of their life history. Among the birds that eat millions of these pests may be mentioned the quail, the meadow lark, and the sparrow.

"If the chinch bug is to be practically eradicated we must depend upon the efforts of the quail, as his home is in the brooding grounds of the chinch bug. Nowadays things that are done have a certain degree of the idea of permanency about them, hence the first step in the permanent destruction of the chinch bug is a more complete protection of the quail that assists also in lowering the losses caused by the cotton weevil, the grasshopper, and the potato bug."

We much prefer quails to chinch bugs. The children of Israel ate quail. John the Baptist ate baked grasshoppers. The latter were quite as nutritious, and the farmers could spare them better than the quail. Besides, no one wants honey with quail.

OUR SMALL BOOK OUTPUT.

WE HOPE the Unpopular Review will attain popularity. It is an exceedingly suggestive magazine. We do not agree with more than half it says, and that is one reason we like it. But there are some things we quite agree with. One is its lament over the low output of American books. No European nation except Spain, so we are told, publishes so few books in proportion to its population. We are a reading people, but we read magazines, and these have been made possible by a low postage rate which is virtually a government subsidy, while the rate on books is oppressively high. The new parcel post rate may help matters out, but as a nation we do not read books, least of all books worth reading. Not only so, but in the reading of newspapers many people deliberately choose to believe a lie and be deluded. There are now more magazines than can live. Some of them are now considering by what death they shall serve their generation. We should be twice as well off if we had only half as many, and no one would be so much better off for the diminution as the magazine publishers, except the magazine readers. When we get fewer magazines we may have more books, and let us hope better ones.

LEPROSY IN AMERICA.

NOW and then in some part of America a case of leprosy is reported, and people are in terror. It is likely that our country, being in such close communication with all nations of the earth, has lurking away in some unclean corner well-nigh every disease that flesh is heir to, and that there are cases of leprosy here and there throughout the country, although our National and State Boards of Health are quite vigilant, and protect the people generally against such diseases. The papers recently reported the case of Vernon D. Bennett, an inmate of the Soldiers' Home at West Allis, Wis., who was found to be a leper, and volunteers were called for to nurse him. Ten veterans of the Civil War came, every one gladly offering to perform that service. All but one were over seventy years of age, too old to care properly for the afflicted one. Fred W. Curtenious, who served through the Spanish War as Bennett did, was accepted. Mrs. Frances Amato, thirty-five years old, one of the six sufferers in the leper colony on Blackwell's Island died recently, and the papers made much mention of her case.

AROUND THE WORLD FOR TWO CENTS.

TWO-CENT postage to England and Germany were only the entering wedge. The triennial convention of the Postal Union to be convened next September is to consider a uniform rate for all the countries of the postal union—that is to say, practically for the civilized world. It is reported that a majority of the countries represented favor a three-cent foreign postage rate. We see no excuse for it. If the rate is expected to bear any reasonable share of the expense of carrying the letter, five cents is little enough. But international postage is not expected to be financially profitable to the several governments concerned. If there is good reason for a reduction at all, let us not make two bites of a cherry. Sooner or later "penny postage," that is to say, two-cent postage, is coming to the whole world. Let it come!

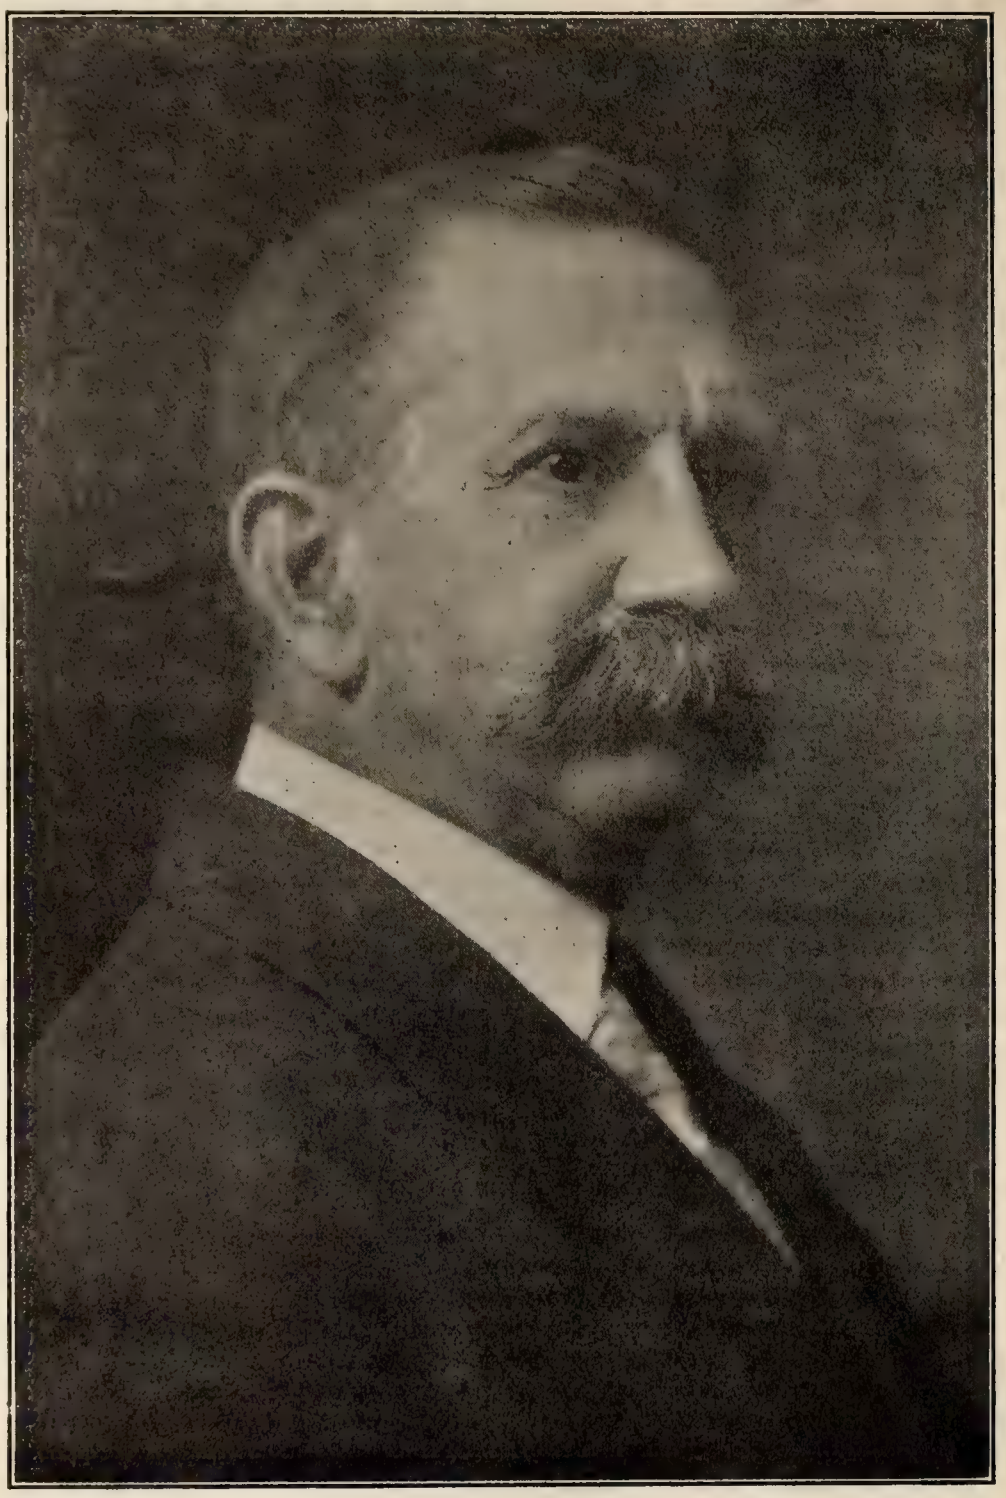
Northern Baptists in Great Convention.

The 1914 convention of the Northern Baptist Church will go down into history chiefly because it was made the occasion of the centennial celebration of the entrance upon his work of Adoniram Judson, the most famous of Baptist missionaries; but the convention was a significant gathering for other reasons, as well. Mention was made in The Christian Century of last week of the plea that was made before the convention for the cause of higher education. There were some reactionary voices raised against higher education as being religionless, but, be it said to the credit of this great church, there was a strong vote of approval for the work that is being done by the Board of Education, under the chairmanship of Dr. Ernest D. Burton, of the University of Chicago, and the secretaryship of Dr. Frank W. Padelford, of Boston. It should be noted that for several years—from 1902 to 1912—the Baptists were without an education board. The old board was in existence from 1887, but was discontinued in 1902. What the church lost by this lapse is indicated in an informing paragraph from the report of the new committee. After reading from some old records of results gained during the activity of the old board, with optimistic prophecies as to the future, the present committee expresses its emotions as follows:

"How different might have been the history of these last few years if the education society had continued its services! These prospects were bright indeed and the prophecies made by the board undoubtedly might have been fulfilled if the denomination had continued its systematic work, and if during these years of remarkable educational development, we had had some organization to lead us, we should not now have fallen so far behind. Within the territory of this convention the Methodists now have forty-three colleges with a total property value and endowment of $44,687,207. The Presbyterians have, exclusive of Princeton University, forty-eight colleges with property and endowment valued at $29,335,602. The Northern Baptists have, exclusive of the University of Chicago, twenty-three colleges with endowment and property valued at $24,232,694."

Biblical Study in the Colleges.

The new committee has made a special study of the conditions in Baptist colleges and those of other churches, with a view to finding out how much of Biblical and religious instuction is given in these schools. It reports some deplorable findings: "We confess our surprise," the committee declares, "in finding how small an amount of distinctive instruction in these lines is given in Christian colleges. These schools are supposedly Christian, were founded and are maintained to give a distinctively Christian education. Without doubt most of them have a Christian atmosphere and their professors exert a Christian influence, but it seems to the board that their curricula should contain ample courses of instruction in the Bible, Christian ethics and Christian history. In their zeal to multiply courses they have been tempted to forget the great purpose of a Christian institution. This is not strange when we realize how severe educational competition has become. The demand for multiplication of courses is a department in every one of its denominational colleges, with the intention of placing in charge the strongest men in the denomination. Our board proposes to urge such a step upon our denominational schools."



Judge Edward S. Clinch, President of Northern Baptist Convention.

Judson's Sons Address Convention.

As was intimated above, this 1914 convention will be remembered especially because of the Judson centennial celebration. A hundred years ago Adoniram Judson went out to Burma, India, and with his work began the foreign mission activities of the Baptists. A pleasant feature of the celebration in Boston of this event was the presence at the sessions of Dr. Judson's sons, Dr. Adoniram B. Judson, physician of New York, and Dr. Edward Judson, of the Judson Memorial Church, New York.

The first to be introduced was Dr. Adoniram B. Judson, of New York. More than two minutes of applause welcomed the older son as he moved to the front. He spoke of incidents in his association with his parents, and said in part:

"I do not feel well equipped to entertain or instruct this distinguished audience. But we all have our personal early recollections, and I recall an incident which occurred on a voyage from Burma to this country in 1845, sixty-nine or seventy years ago, when my father, Adoniram Judson, and mother, Sarah Hall Boardman Judson, returning missionaries, brought home to America three of their six children.

"Mother was an invalid and could not complete the voyage. She was buried on St. Helena. But a long way the other side of St. Helena, when crossing the Indian Ocean, one night, when the wind had died away and the stars were out, and the ship stood still in a calm, the family gathered on deck, and mother sang to the group, which included some of the sailors and officers of the ship. The hymn was 'The Star of Bethlehem,' beginning:

"'When marshalled on the nightly plain,
The glittering hosts bestud the sky;
One star alone of all the train
Can fix the sinner's wandering eye.

Hark! Hark! to God the chorus breaks
From every host, from every gem.
But one alone the Saviour speaks,
It was the star of Bethlehem.'

"The calm sea, the sweet voice, and the sky filled with bright stars made a scene not easily forgotten.

"When the children landed at Boston, the girl was taken to Bradford to the Hasseltine School and the two boys were left at Worcester, where a few months later I saw my father's face for the last time as he leaned from a window of the train taking him to Boston on his way back to Burma, where he was to meet the other three children, the youngest one of whom was my dear brother Edward, who needs no introduction from me to a Baptist audience."

Message from Dr. Edward Judson.

Silence was in the room till Dr. Edward Judson reached the pulpit. Then an ovation began which lasted for several minutes. He tried to speak again and again, but was not allowed to do so till the audience had had its way. His voice was low, but distinct. He said in part:

"President Bond, bothers, sisters, fathers, mothers, young men and women who are going to the mission field, you veterans who have retired from distant wars, whose eyes have grown dim gazing at the pilot star, I count it the supreme honor of my life to speak a benedictory word on this historic occasion, before this great gathering of Christians from all over America come to pay affectionate token to the remembrance of my father.

"My older brother has contributed a pathetic and beautiful incident, never published to the world before, as I know, how my mother sang to the children on the ship. The strain of that moment reflected from the glassy surface of the Indian Ocean that night has been wafted to our ears over the long bridge of seventy years to this afternoon. I was a sickly boy, back in Inda, when the song was sung. Mother had to leave me; she was dying. Three of us babes were left behind.

"The eldest of the three, Henry, hoped to have been here today, but illness made it impossible. He was permanently disabled fighting under the colors of the North in the Civil War.

"I always keep a picture of my father in my study; he has always been an inspiration to me. We folks need human guides to lead us in the footsteps of the great Pathfinder. Separation deepens affection. Love has two elements; the disposition to enjoy and possess, and the passion to serve. I believe my father's influence was stronger than if I had been brought up under his care. The difficulties in his life have always helped me when under the pressure of obstacles, the thought of the terrible privations of his life, the prison with fetters for a year, the separation from his wife, the oppression for the government, the six years without a conversion; the disappointment at the end of his life that so little was done; the thought of such things spurs my footsteps.

"Remember this: If we succeed without suffering it is because some one has suffered before us; if we suffer without success, it is because some one will succeed after us. The thought of his achievements has been a long cooling shadow of inspiration. His was a life that founded the missionary movement; it began that movement in our dear Baptist church and in so doing crystallized into the consciousness of the denomination a sense of solidarity, for when we got our hands to the missionary plow Baptists began to feel their power; when I think of the shadows lengthening in our individual men, into other great churches, and now the tip has touched the city mission work, I find an intense desire in my heart to do the next thing with the highest success. He hath humbled himself; God hath exalted him. Let us work for that King before whom every knee shall bow."

Thus ended, says The Standard, of Chicago, "a meeting which was worth going around the world to see. Those who were present will tell it to their grandchildren. No such scene has been enacted for many a decade in our history.

Resolutions Adopted at International Sunday School Convention

The following resolutions reported by the resolution committee of which the Rev. Dr. H. H. Bell of San Francisco was chairman, were adopted by the convention:

"DECLARATIONS.

"We declare ourselves as definitely evangelistic in purpose, and as more than ever determined to stress the one chief aim of all Sunday-school work, that, namely, of seeking to lead scholars, young and old, to saving knowlege of Jesus Christ as their personal and only Redeemer.

"We declare ourselves as distinctly missionary in vision, purpose, program and achievement.

"We declare in favor of greater emphasis by all field workers and in all our schools upon the Home Department as an evangelizing agency and upon the obligation and privileges of the family altar.

"We declare in favor of the Vacation Bible Schools and urge hearty coöperation on the part of all our forces in this great work.

"We declare in favor of the proposed Annual Bible Day—on the third Lord's Day before Christmas.

"We declare in favor of the movement in favor of Country Religious Education in churches by a system of credits and examination with public schools as is so successfully practiced in Colorado, North Dakota, Gary, Ind., and in various provinces of Canada.

"We declare in favor of the coöperation of Protestants, Orthodox and Liberal, as also of Roman Catholics and Jews in the great movement of Home Visitation wheresoever possible to operate the same in order to help children and adults alike into personal righteousness with God and into social righteousness with men.

"We declare in favor of the Child Welfare Movement including the abolishment of Child Labor under the age of sixteen, and the creation of public playgrounds and wholesome amusements for the young.

"We declare in favor of National Legislation for the effective censorship of motion pictures covering the entire jurisdiction of National Legislation.

"We declare ourselves in favor of Social Purity Reform including a single standard of morals for both sexes and the most rigid laws against commercial vice, lotteries and gambling of every form.

"We declare ourselves in favor of faithfulness and diligence on the part of all Sunday-schools in the use of the temperance lessons in order to educate every member for total abstinence, for the destruction of the liquor traffic for the extinction of the cigarette and the tobacco habits in every form, and for the surrender of every self-indulgence which impairs or destroys the power to render service to God and man.

"We urge that throughout all the courses of the International Lessons both Graded and Uniform, four Bible Temperance Lessons for each year shall be supplied; and that the selection of such Bible Temperance Lessons shall be governed by the same sound principle of adaptation to the spiritual needs of the scholar which are applied to the selection of other lessons.

"Recognizing the value and importance of the World's Temperance Sunday as a special occasion of temperance teaching and temperance pledge-signing, we earnestly request that throughout the courses of the Graded Lessons, as in the Uniform Lesson plan, the World's Temperance Sunday Lesson shall be supplied; and we urge the observance of that occasion throughout all Sunday-schools.

"In hearty coöperation with other agencies, the Sunday-school pledges itself to unceasing warfare against the legalized liquor traffic; and we look with unfaltering confidence for the coming of that day when the united forces of religious, moral, and civic agencies, God directed, shall "take up the stumbling-block out of the way of the people;" and when prohibtion as the result of congressional action shall become nation wide, and as the result of national legislation shall become world wide throughout all civilized lands.

"We declare in favor of international peace between the nations of the world, and in favor of the substitution of conciliation and arbitration in the settlement of both industrial and international war.

"We declare in favor of the submission of an amendment to the Federal Constitution delegating the control of all questions of marriage and divorce to the Federal Congress, and we exhort all American states and provinces to take action to secure a uniform marriage law conforming to the highest standard.

"We declare in favor of the religious work planned by the Committee of One Hundred, appointed by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America to be done during the Panama Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco and commend the same to the careful attention of our constituency. We also endorse the plan to hold an International Lord's Day Congress at San Francisco during the said exposition and express the hope that it will result in quickening the Christian conscience as to give California a weekly rest day.

"We declare ourselves as in perfect harmony with the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, the B. Y. P. U., North and South, and all similar organizations of all young people and we cordially congratulate them upon the work they are doing for Christ and his kingdom."

Of Human Interest

A Gladstone Story.

"Mrs. Gladstone and her famous husband went to Cannes on January, and on Sunday morning, of course, they repaired to the English church.

"But when the sermon began, Mr. Gladstone frowned and squirmed, then whispered to Mrs. Gladstone fretfully:

"'I can't hear him.'

"But Mrs. Gladstone, whose ears were better, said to her husband with a reassuring smile:

"'Never mind, dear. Go to sleep. It will do you ever so much more good.'"

Getting in Line.

The late Cy Warman, who deserted railway literature for a real railway job in Montreal, told this story at a luncheon not long before his death:

A Scotchman came upon an automobile overturned at a railway crossing. Beside it lay a man all smashed up.

"Get a doctor," he moaned.

"Did the train hit you?" asked the Scotchman.

"Yes, yes; get a doctor."

"Has the claim agent been here yet?"

"No, no; please get a doctor."

"Move over, you," said the Scot, "till I lie down beside you."

A Story from Governor Fletcher.

That there is a limit to the cares and responsibilities of the housewife was demonstrated by a little story told in an after-dinner speech by Governor Fletcher, of Vermont.

"A middle-aged couple from one of the back counties visited Montpelier one day," said the governor, "and while rambling down the main street looking at the sights their attention was attracted by a cuckoo clock in the show-window of a jewelry store.

"The clock was striking at the time; and, as the cuckoo came out and chirped the hour, the rural couple looked on with mingled admiration and wonder.

"'Well, I declare!' exclaimed the farmer's wife as the cuckoo concluded his announcement and retired within the clock. 'Never in all my life did I see anything like that!'

"'Ner me, neether, Maria,' responded Hezekiah, still retaining his look of astonishment; 'an,' sence we need a new clock at home, what do ye say if we buy thet one?'

"'We won't do anything of the kind, Hezekiah!' was the emphatic declaration of Maria. 'Don't ye s'pose I've got enough chickens, an' ducks, an' geese, an' turkeys, an' other things to look after now without feedin' a pesky bird?'"

Theology and Helen Keller.

The following from the San Francisco Star is an illuminating revelation of conservatism applied in an unusual direction. Says the Star:

"An honest, well-meaning conventional man was listening to the story of the education of Helen Keller. He did not thrill under it; he said, at last: 'Well, if God had meant that girl to know those things he would have given her sight and hearing.' Solemnly he shook his head, and silently he went away, leaving an astonished silence behind him. Then someone said: 'That is the apotheosis of stand-patism—"as it was once so must it remain forever!"' And someone else added: 'May our good angels keep us alive, and moving and growing to the very end—yes! and not let us settle down like that.' And a third put it this way: 'It's only lack of imagination: If that dear Helen had been his own daughter he would have rejoiced from the bottom of his heart to have someone pull her out into the life of the world.'"

A Penalty of Fame.

Booth Tarkington was asked recently for an original sentiment by way of autograph. He replied:

"If you had asked me for my autograph I would have sent it to you gladly. But to ask for a specimen of my work, that is a little too much. Would you ask a doctor for one of his corpses to remember him by?"

EPITAPHS QUAINT OR WITTY.

Some queer epitaphs in British churchyards have lately been collected by a London newspaper.

There is an interesting epitaph on a gravestone in Poling churchyard, Sussex. It runs:

Here
Lieth ye Body of Alice, ye wife, of Bobt Woolbridge, who Died
the 27th of May, 1740.
Aged 44 years.
The World is a round thing,
And full of crooked streets.
Death is a market place,
Where all men meets.
If Life was a thing
That money could buy,
The Rich would live,
And the poor would die.

More witty, is the epitaph found at Kingsbridge, South Devon:

Here lieth the body of Robert (commonly called "Bone") Phillips, who died July 27th, 1793, aged 65 years, and at whose request the following lines are inscribed:

Here lie I at the Chancel door;
Here lie I because I am poor;
The further in the more you'll pay,
Yet here lie I as warm as they.

Here is an epitaph on the last-maker, who is said to be buried at Llanflantwythyl, Wales:

Stop, stranger, stop, and wipe a tear
For the Last man at last lies here,
Though ever-last-ing he has been,
He has at last passed life's last scene.
Famed for good works, much time he passed.
In doing good—He has done his last.

The following is more philosophic and general in its application:

Life's like an Inn where Travelers stay.
Some only Breakfast, and away.
Others to dinner stay, and are well fed.
The oldest only sup and go to Bed.
Long is the Bill who lingers out the day.
He that goes the soonest Has the Least to Pay.

An epitaph which for pithiness and force would not be easy to surpass runs thus:

Here lies W. W.
Who will nevermore trouble you.

It was an epitaph which called forth the following topical epigram from Dr. Samuel Clarke, who had just seen the inscription, "Domus Ultima," on the vault belonging to the dukes of Richmond in the cathedral of Chichester. In a mood of satire he wrote:

Did he who thus inscribed the wall
Not read, or not believe, St. Paul,
Who says there is, where'er it stands,
Another house, not made with hands.
Or may we gather from these words,
That house is not a House of Lords?

Croker the Philosopher.

Richard Croker, as everybody knows, has a cynical wit. Mr. Croker aired this wit in a recent letter to a member of Tammany Hall apropos of a millionaire's charities.

"To be canonized in American public opinion," he wrote, "give publicly and steal privately."

Joseph Fels' Repentance.

Joseph Fels, philanthropist, who "did not believe in philanthropy," died a few weeks ago. Three years ago in Boston he said that he did not believe in charities, for they were the agents of pauperization. He added that he intended to spend "the damnable millions I have made to wipe out the system by which I made it. We cannot get rich under present conditions without robbing the public."

One of "Billy" Sunday's Gifts.

When "Billy" Sunday closed his meetings in Scranton the people overwhelmed him with gifts. These gifts were the thankofferings of rich and poor alike. One gift was a basket containing eight dozen strictly fresh eggs!

George Ade on Marriage.

According to the Washington Star, Mr. George Ade was sitting with a little girl of eight, who looked up from her "Hans Christian Anderson," and asked:

"Does m-i-r-a-g-e spell marriage, Mr. Ade?"

"Often, my child," said the cynical bachelor.

Foss, Poet, to be Honored.

A memorial to Sam Walter Foss, poet and librarian, will be erected on the farm where he was born at Candia, N. H., by the Candia Club. It will take the form of a granite marker, bearing a bronze tablet on which will be the date of the poet's birth and an inscription from his works.

Published Poems at 80.

Mrs. Julia C. R. Dorr, who died last January, was still another member of America's literary "old guard" to preserve undimmed, undiminished her fine and well-used literary powers. Born in 1825, Mrs. Dorr when well over 80 published a book of poems, "Beyond the Sunset," that proved her spirit freshly youthful. Not a prolific writer, she previously had produced many exquisite poems, a general favorite being "You Have Been to Carcassonne," written perhaps five years before her death.

I can scarce believe the tale
Borne to me on every gale:
You have been to Carcassonne,
Looked its shining towers upon,
Trod its streets where blithe and gay,
"Lords and Ladies" passed that way,
Loitered in the evening glow,
Doffed their caps and curtseyed low,
Where two "Generals," brave as they,
Gave "the Bishop" right of way.

You have been to Carcassonne:
Then for you the goal is won.

You have grasped the unattained,
What we long for, you have gained.
All men go to Arcady,
Dear, dream-haunted Arcady,
Soon or late they breathe its air,
Learn its language, pray its prayer,
Linger there till dreams are done;
But—few go to Carcassonne!"

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

Two Recent Books on Saint Francis

Life of St. Francis of Assisi. By Paul Sabatier. Translated from the French by Louise Seymour Houghton. Charles Scribner's Sons, 1912. Price, $2.50.

The modern revival of interest in St. Francis was largely aroused by the appearance in 1894 of Sabatier's "Vie de S. Francois d'Assise"—the book whose recent translation into English heads this notice. It is marked by the patient and profound scholarship, and deep spiritual insight which characterizes all the writings of the celebrated Frenchman. Much of the book is critical and is an effort to separate the legendary saint from the real one; he claims that the true St. Francis is infinitely nobler and finer than the wonder stories have made him to be. While some of his theories about the Little Poor Man have been challenged, yet it is the name of Paul Sabatier which comes first in the new movement for Franciscan researches. He gives us a masterly study of the Thirteenth Century, that notable era, when the church first began to revolt against the superstition, the corruption, and the tyranny of the ecclesiastical rule of the Dark Ages; it was especially the century of saints, and our author gives us a fine discrimination between the priest and the saint, when he says, "The priest of the Thirteenth Century is the antithesis of the saint—he is almost always his enemy. Separated by the holy unction from the rest of mankind, able by a few signs to perform unheard of mysteries, with a word to change bread into flesh, and wine into blood, he appeared as a sort of idol which could do all things for or against you, and before which you have only to adore and tremble."

"The saint, on the contrary, was one whose mission was proclaimed by nothing in his apparel, but whose life and words made themselves felt in all hearts and consciences; he was one who, with no cure of souls in the church, felt impelled to lift up his voice. The child of the people, he knew all their woes, and their echoes sounded in his own heart. Like the ancient prophet of Israel, he heard an imperious voice saying to him, 'Go, and speak to the children of my people.' Those thirteen century saints were, in fact, true prophets. . . . They were the witnesses of liberty against authority; Francis of Assisi is pre-eminently the saint of the middle ages; he was of the people, and the people recognized themselves in him."

While his reform was within the church, and he always maintained his filial attitude to it, yet his preaching and life were a protest against the current ecclesiastical corruption and were more revoluntary than he realized. The origin of his ideas is found among the common people of his time, and he is the incarnation of the Italian soul at the beginning of the Thirteenth Century.

"He longed for a true awakening of the church to the evangelical ideal which he had regained. All Europe awoke with a start, when it heard of these penitents from a little Umbrian town. All they craved of the Court of Rome was the privilege of possessing nothing. Men saw them pass by, earning their bread by the labor of their hands, accepting only the bare necessities of bodily sustenance from those to whom they had given the bread of life, and whatever was best in humanity at that time leaped to follow in his footsteps . . . Without Francis of Assisi, the church would perhaps have foundered—the Little Poor Man, driven away, cast out of doors by the creatures of Innocent III, saved Christianity."

Saint Francis of Assisi, a Biography. By Johannes Jorgensen. Translated from the Danish by T. O'Conor Sloane, LL. D., Ph. D. Longmans, Green & Company, 1913.

The Life of St. Francis by the learned Dane, Johannes Jorgensen, is of later date than the work just reviewed, and bears generous testimony to its debt to the researches of the Frenchman, M. Sabatier. It was completed in 1906, after several years of study, including long pilgrimages through Franciscan Italy, and to a number of contents where were libraries of Franciscan literature, from the earliest to the most recent times. It is a more graphic narration, and therefore more apt to be interesting to the lay reader than Sabatier's great work. Both are large duodecimo volumes of more than 400 pages, and are notable contributions to the history of Christianity at this critical epoch. Our author shows how the movement started by Francis was neither penitential, nor monastic—that he was pre-eminently the Apostle of Cheerfulness. He protested against dark faces and sour visages—his brothers must not be mournful hypocrites, but glad children of light, their motto, "Rejoice always."

While the Franciscans were a so-called mendicant order, yet their founder insisted on their working for their daily bread when possible, and only accepting alms when absolutely necessary. In his last testament, he says, "I worked with my hands, and wish to work; and all the other brothers, I strongly wish that they may work at labor which is of honest nature; and when the price of our labor is not given us, we return to the table of the Lord, in seeking alms from door to door."

Renan has justly said: "Since the time of the Apostles, there has never been a more powerful attempt to put the gospel of Jesus Christ into practice, than in the movement started by Francis of Assisi." The study of such lives cannot fail to be profitable to all seekers after God, and these books are recommended to students of the history of Christianity.

I. W. H.

THE YOUNGER GENERATION.

Miss Helen Taft, daughter of the former president, has joined the Suffrage League at Bryn Mawr, where she is a student. A few weeks ago Mrs. Taft joined the antis. Mrs. T. N. Hepburn, president of the Connecticut Equal Suffrage Association, is reported as saying, "The action of mother and daughter is significant of the difference between the past and the present generations."

There are many other illustrations. Former President Eliot of Harvard is opposed to equal suffrage. His granddaughter belongs to the Suffrage League. Prof. Munsterburg of Harvard was lately asked to contribute one of his books to a suffrage sale. He answered, "I am not a suffragist, but I am the father of one. My daughter will send you one of her books." President Wilson and his wife are not suffragists, so far as is known, though Mrs. Wilson has said that she is not an anti. Two of their daughters, however, are convinced suffragists.

Sir Almroth E. Wright is an extreme and rabid opponent. His eldest son, who has just died, left a large bequest to the Suffrage Association. "Gen." Rosalie Jones is an ardent suffragist; her mother a confirmed anti. Instances might be multiplied almost indefinitely.

Mother of Five

EDGAR A. GUEST, IN DETROIT FREE PRESS.

She mothered five!
Night after night she watched a little bed,
Night after night she cooled a fevered head.
Day after day she guarded little feet,
Taught little minds the dangers of the street,
Taught little lips to utter simple prayers;
Whispered of strength that some day would be theirs,
And trained them all to use it as they should.
She gave her babies to the nation's good.

She mothered five!
She gave her beauty—from her cheeks let fade
The rose's blushes—to her mother trade.
She saw the wrinkles furrowing her brow,
Yet smiling, said, "My boy grows stronger now."
When pleasures called, she turned away and said,
"I dare not leave my babies to be fed
By strangers' hands; besides, they are so small,
I must be near to answer when they call."

She mothered five!
Night after night they sat about her knee
And heard her tell of what some day would be.
From her they learned that in the world outside
Are cruelty and vice and selfishness and pride;
From her they learned the wrongs they ought to shun,
What things to love, what work must still be done.
She led them through the labyrinth of youth.
And brought five men and women up to truth.

She mothered five!
Her name may be unknown save to the few,
Of her the outside world but little knew;
But somewhere five are treading virtue's ways,
Serving the world and brightening its days.
Somewhere are five who, tempted, stand upright,
Clinging to honor, keeping her memory bright.
Somewhere this mother toils and is alive,
No more as one, but in the breasts of five.

Disciples Table Talk

Hoosier Disciples in Successful Year.

The Indiana Christian Missionary Association has recently passed through its most prosperous year. The office of corresponding secretary was filled the former part of the year by L. E. Murray and the latter part by C. W. Cauble. Garry L. Cook continues his work as Sunday-school superintendent. The officers which so efficiently directed the work of the board the past year were: President, W. H. Book; Vice-president, Joseph C. Todd; Secretary, J. S. Hussey, and Treasurer, U. C. Brewer. All were re-elected.

Illinois Re-Elects Secretaries.

At the district conventions of Illinois Disciples this year, all the secretaries were reelected. They are as follows: First District, C. C. Carpenter, Princeton; Second District, O. F. Jordan, Evanston; Third District, L. G. Huff, Mt. Sterling; Fourth District, H. H. Jenner, Long Point; Fifth District, C. E. French, Virginia; Sixth District, R. V. Callaway, Clinton; Seventh District, C. W. Marlow, Flora; Eighth District, A. K. Adcock, Du Quoin. The state conventions will meet this year in the fine new building of the First Church in Decatur, September 7, 8, 9 and 10.

W. S. Lockhart a "Wonder-Worker."

A. J. Cohea, of Central Church, Houston, Tex., writes that through the efforts of the minister, W. S. Lockhart, whom he pronounces a wonderworker, Dr. J. T. Moore, president of the board of elders, W. R. Allison, chairman of the board of deacons, and others, a debt of $19,000 with which the church was "hobbled" eight years ago, has been at last cleared. During these years $11,000 interest has been paid on the debt. On July 5, Mr. Lockhart stood before his people and reported that for the full payment of the debt of $21,230.25, principal and interest to date, he had cash and bankable notes in the sum of $21,312.92, an amount sufficient to wipe out the entire indebtedness with $82.67 balance left over.

H. L. Willett Jr. to Vacation in America.

Herbert L. Willett Jr., whose interesting letters from Syria have been a feature of the Century during the past year, is now on the way home, for a brief vacation visit. He will reach Chicago about August 1, for a stay of six weeks, returning to his work in the Syrian Protestant College for the opening of the academic year in October.

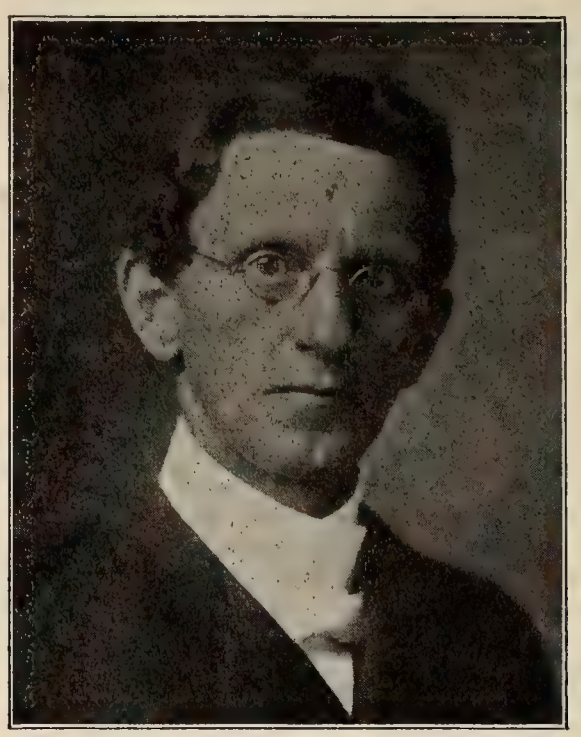
Edgar County, Ill. Annual Meeting.

The Christian churches of Edgar County, Ill., have organized for more intensive work in that county. They have organized the Board of Christian Church of Edgar County, made up of from one to six representatives from each church. The work is being planned with a great deal of care, and there is already great improvement in many lines of church activity. The County meeting has been arranged for Paris, Sept., 11-13, and Z. T. Sweeney, of Columbus, Ind., has been engaged for the two addresses on Sunday. The missionary and educational interests of the Brotherhood will be represented in the meeting.

Dedication at Albion, Illinois.

The dedication of the new Christian church at Albion, Ill., took place July 5. T. J. Clark, pastor at Albion, writes of the successful work of Mr. Snively as follows: "Saturday night, surveying the field in advance, owing to the long discouraging drought that has afflicted this part of the country this season, the outlook seemed distressingly discouraging. But when Mr. Snively faced his audience and began his task, things moved on hopefully, and in an unexpectedly short time he was enabled to announce that the sum called for had been reached, $6,500. The good work went on until the morning service closed in good time with pledges amounting to $8,270, including $1,300, pledged by the Ladies' Social Workers. In the afternoon and evening services, about four hundred dollars were pledged to reduce the ladies' obligation. The evening service closed with one confession, and with as happy a congregation of people, as one could wish to see." Not including the lot, the new house cost about $16,000. The house is of red matfaced brick, with openings and front and side entrances finished in Bedford stone. Beside the fine auditorium with chapel adjoining, and class rooms surrounding, the entire basement was excavated and finished for Sunday-school purposes. The house is well built, modern, convenient, and beautiful, a splendid workship. The pastor writes that "It is the prayer and hope of those who have been the leaders in this enterprise that the future shall witness consecrated and effective service for our Lord, that shall command his presence and blessing perpetually in this house." The first church building erected in Albion was the old brick Christian chapel, now used as a residence. After this house was built, the congregation of the Church of Christ was organized by Elder Elijah Goodwin, August 4, 1840. Mr Goodwin was the first pastor of the church. The following pastors have served the church during its history: Elijah Goodwin, Alfred Flower, George W. Morrill, Caleb Edwards, J. C. T. Hall, J. E. Prophater, J. S. Rose, R. A. Gilcrist, J. C. Hall, Z. A. Harris, M. T. Hough, Daniel Bulkley, Walter Smith, C. W. Swartz, Walter Kline, Willard McCarthy, Fred Applegate, C. C. Garrigues, D. W. Conner, and the present minister, T. J. Clark. Special meetings were held in the earlier years by the following well known evangelists: P. K. Dibble, William Jarret, Benjamin Franklin, John O'Kane, W. B. F. Treat, and George E. Flower.

Rev. L. O. Lehman, who has been selected as Eureka's Field Secretary.



Rev. T. J. Clark, who has just dedicated a new building at Albion, Ill.

Concerning Entertainment at Atlanta

The Atlanta committee in planning for the International Convention which will be held October seventh to fourteenth, announces that the Atlanta Hotel Association has made a special arrangement with the local convention committee to furnish a very reasonable rate to those making reservations through the committee. The smaller hotels will furnish rooms only for seventy-five cents and a dollar per day. Convention headquarters this year will be established in three hotels, The Hotel Ansley, The Piedmont, and the Winecoff. These hotels are located at the corners of a small triangular block and hence are only a few steps apart. Rates for rooms only in these and other large hotels will be from one dollar and a half to five dollars.

THE "WIN ONE MORE" FELLOWSHIP.

By Rev. A. Z. Conrad, Ph. D.

Editor's Note: The Christian Century takes pleasure in placing before its readers the following story of Dr. Conrad's achievements in soul-winning. His experiences hold suggestions for ministers of all fellowships.

If it takes thirty-five church members an entire year to win one soul to the Lord Jesus Christ how long will it oe before the world is evangelized? In the year 1913 that was about the ratio of progress. The appalling fact is, with all our religious organization and enterprise we are not keeping pace with the increased population of the world. Who is to blame? The church of the Lord Jesus Christ has laid upon it the responsibility of evangelizing the world; of spiritualizing influence; of humanizing industry; of sympathizing society. She must do the first or she will do none of the rest. Whenever emphasis has been properly placed on evangelism the church has enjoyed progress. But right here comes another question, what kind of evangelism is effective? The church has adopted various methods to realize her ideals. Professional evangelism has without doubt rendered great and valuable service to the church in various periods of her history. Missions, such as are conducted by Chapman and Alexander and other earnest and effective evangelists accomplish much good. But effective evangelists are few. There has been a growing feeling that the responsibility for the evangelization of the world rests largely upon the pastors. Hence, "pastoral evangelism" has been especially stressed during recent years. Assuming however that every pastor should adopt the evangelistic method of preaching and appeal, who would be reached? Manifestly only those who attend church. Here is the startling fact, a procession of millions is moving straight on week after week and year after year with an absolute indifference to the Christian church. Thousands never enter the church. How is pastoral evangelism to affect this unattached crowd? It simply cannot touch them. Professional evangelism scarcely creates a ripple of interest. Yet, somehow, we entertain the belief that these people can and ought to be reached. We have organized our churches to such a point that a vast deal of our energy is expended in simply running a machine. Every pastor again and again despairs of accomplishing what he desires to accomplish because so much of his time has to be devoted to church machinery. Some recent movements have laid the responsibility upon the pastor of putting every member of his church to work. How can this be done? He can multiply committees. But to what end and with what advantage? There is neither conscience nor responsibility with a "group." With a highly organized church it came upon me a year ago, that a vast deal of church endeavor is without any commensurate results. The great, the supreme business of the church is neglected for a thousand and one things which are subordinate. Furthermore, it became evident to me tnat if the pastor is to put his people to work there must be a work adapted to each individual, which is worth while. I became growingly convinced that there is only one vocation in this world for every disciple of Jesus. That is, to win another and then another and then another to the Lord Jesus Christ. Our ordinary occupations are simply avocations. There is but one vocation for every saved soul and that is the extension of the kingdom of Jesus Christ. Suppose that on Monday morning the tens of thousands of professed Christians, who move straight out and into this immense throng of the unchurched and the unattached and mingle with them through the week, had surging in the soul a redemptive passion, what would happen? Tactfully, ardently, they would commend the church of Jesus Christ by references to the services of Sunday. They would find opportunity again and again to make a personal appeal. They would so interest those now disinterested that upon the very next Sunday hundreds would be found in places of worship and as weeks pass by within a year tens of thousands would be attending church services who are indifferent at the present time. Step by step from church attendance there would be many led straight into the kingdom. It is the one and only evangelism which will work all the year through. With this in view we established in the old, historic Park Street Church of Boston the "Win One More" Fellowship. We elected no officers. We held no stated meetings. We made it immediately effective. By laying the responsibility for the evangelism of the community just where it belongs, not upon professional evangelists, not upon the pastors, but upon the people, this was accomplished. We urged the fact that good standing in the church does not involve good standing at the Court of Heaven; that no one can expect to stand under the smile of God who is not definitely and persistently working for the salvation of some individual especially designated. We emphasized the fact that a general interest accomplished nothing. Results are obtained only by a concentration of effort. To the seven hundred members of the church an appeal was sent that each member should win one for Christ.

The result was that we had immediately two hundred registered evangelists who had each indicated one person specifically for whom they were pledged to pray and work. And in this effort they had asked the cooperation of the pastor. More has been accomplished by this "Fellowship" in six months than by years of highly organized effort in general lines of church endeavor. It is on this line we shall be able to win the world for Jesus Christ. The effect upon the church is astonishing. Everyone registered in the Fellowship seeks more earnestly how he may have power with God in prayer; how he may make the Word of God effective in leading others to the Light. More than one thousand churches have, within a month, adopted the "Win One More" Fellowship as a sane method of perennial evangelism. Other thousands will surely follow. Everything depends upon leadership. It must be persistently presented. Occasional meetings for instruction are important, in which the pastor shall indicate the best method of approaching those who are uttely indifferent to Christianity, those who are occasional church attendants, those who are regular attendants but not members, those who are thoroughly interested and yet not in the kingdom. We are upon the eve of a great awakening. The church must be prepared to take advantage of the movement. We cannot afford to mark time. There are hundreds of thousands of reachable people awaiting only for a kindly appeal. This appeal can be most wisely and effectively made by those who are social acquaintances and business associates. We have entirely underestimated the value of personal influence. It is an unknown puantity of immense importance. It frequently happens that the most inconspicuous and apparently incapable persons are highly successful in hopefuly and helpfully relating the thoughtless and indifferent to the Church of Christ and to our Lord Jesus himself. The power of the Holy Spirit is immeasurably great. The brightest days of the Christian Church are before her and not behind her. With a mighty faith we should undertake the conquest of the world.

NEWS FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

"The Christian Sahayak" published at Jubbulpore, India, by our brethren is a Christian newspaper, published both in Hindu and English. This paper announces that the cholera in the city of Damoh has reached the stage of epidemic. It had continued a month and there was no sign of abating. Indeed, ten to fifteen deaths every day are reported. There have been one or two deaths among our Indian Christians. This epidemic has been aggravated, if not caused by the shortage of water resulting from last year's failure of the rains.

There were 176 baptisms at Monieka, Africa, last year and the native Christians gave $200 themselves.

Last year the Living-link churches, as churches, contributed $60,702.98. Fine showing! Let us increase the number of Living-link churches.

The hearts of the missionaries are saddened these days because of the wonderful opportunities open in China of which they are unable to take advantage. When will we rise to the importance of the pressing emergency in that great land?

"Twelve more baptisms Sunday, June 7, five of our school girls, four school boys and three women from the neighborhood, making forty this year, the best year in our work here." Mary F. Lediard, Takinogawa, Tokyo, Japan.

The church at Uhrichsville, Ohio, J. A. Canby, minister, will in the future, support Arthur Bowman at Wuhu, China, as their Living-link. Mr. Canby says: "You can hardly know the joy I feel in having some part in bringing the church up to this standard. We also have money provided for a Living-link in the home field and intend to do some work among the foreigners in this country."

The medical missionary at Monieka, Congo, Africa, Dr. L. F. Jaggard, received $1,200 last year from all sources on the field. This is twice his salary. The money goes for the enlargement of the work.

News just comes from the last Central Conference of the Congo African missionaries that there were 1,034 baptisms during the year and an offering for missions from the native churches of $1,181.81. Our four Congo churches report a combined membership of 3,736. In every way the year has been the greatest in the history of the missions.

During the past half-dozen years the receipts of the Foreign Society have sprung from $274,324 per annum to $434,183, a gain of $159,859. This is an average increase of $26,643 per year for the past six years. And besides this there has been an increase in the receipts this year up to date. There has also been a very considerable expansion of the work on the fields during that period. The number of native workers has about doubled, and in that time eighty-four new buildings have been provided, or an average of fourteen each year. This is more than one each month for the six years.

A letter from J. C. Ogden dated May 17, at Kian Ting, China, says: "We were on the houseboat from March 14 to May 12. We traveled forty-four days—a distance of about 800 miles. Now we are 1,800 miles west of Shanghai. We are twelve days east of Tachienlu or about 300 miles. It is 460 miles from Tachienlu to Batang. I cannot begin to tell you how happy I am. I feel that I am in my old harness again. I preached both last Sunday and today to crowded houses of Chinese, and it is my purpose to use the opportunity before me to talk, and teach, and preach all along the way from here to Batang."

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO NOTES.

The Disciples are well represented in the summer session of the University of Chicago. Eighteen are enrolled in the Divinity School for regular graduate courses, and a much larger number in the various other departments.

Professor Charles M. Sharpe has a class of eleven in "Problems of Doctrinal Re-statement." This is a major course covering the whole ground of the Disciples' historical religious positions, and seeking to discover what, if any, reconstruction may be necessary in view of generally accepted results of modern theological science. Needless to say, a great deal of interest is manifested in this discussion.

Professor Herbert L. Willett is giving a series of Assembly Lectures on Thursday evenings dealing with the general topic of "The Changing Orient." These lectures embody the results of Doctor Willett's recent studies in his journey around the globe, and are proving of surpassing interest. Last Thursday evening Doctor Willett was absent, and a most enjoyable program was extemporized through the kindness of other speakers. Mr. Clarence Hamilton recently elected to the Chair of Philosophy in the University of Nankin told of the motives that have influenced him in dedicating himself to missionary work. Mr. Yu, a young Chinaman who has recently united with the Hyde Park Christian Church, told of the experiences leading him to accept Christ. Finally, Mr. Liu gave a most informing and earnest address upon "Some Phases of the Present Situation in China." He spoke of the political, religious and cultural conditions. Mr. Liu is also to be in the department of Philosophy in the University of Nankin. These Thursday evening assemblies of the Disciples are largely attended. They are held in the Haskell Oriental Museum, and form a sort of general clearing house for the Disciples in all departments.

The managing editor of the Christian Evangelist and Mrs. Smither were with us for visits recently. Their son is enrolled in the undergraduate department of the university. CHARLES M. SHARPE.

The Outlook at Eureka College

BY PRESIDENT H. O. PRITCHARD.

Eureka College has just closed a most successful year in every way. There were more students enrolled in the Collegiate Department than there have been for the past seventeen years. The increase in college spirit has been especially commented upon by visitors and friends. Every one is hopeful and the future never appeared brighter than at present. The faculty has been greatly strengthened by the addition of men of strong Christian character and splendid scholastic training. The Chair of English is to be filled by Professor Claude O. Kinnick, who was a graduate of the Valparaiso University Normal, the Indiana State Normal, and has both an A. B. and an A. M. degree from the Indiana State University. Mr. Kinnick was an assistant in the English Department of Indiana University in 1909-1910 and a Fellow in the same department in 1912-1913. For the past year he has been the head of the English Department of the Washington, Ind., high school. Mr. Kinnick is a devoted member of the Christian Church and is thoroughly loyal to its propaganda. The college has called to the Chair of History Mr. J. E. Smith of Lincoln, Nebr. Mr. Smith won his Oxford scholarship from Nebraska, was in Oxford three years and took his degree from that honorable institution. While in Oxford he traveled two summers on the Continent. He has been doing post-graduate work during the past year in the University of Nebraska and received his Master's degree from that institution at its recent commencement. Mr. Smith is the son of one of the pioneers of our church and is thoroughly loyal to the Restoration Movement.

Some changes have been made in the curriculum which will strengthen and make more useful the course of study. Among other things, the Preparatory School has been separately organized with its own corps of teachers and course of study. Two new courses have been added for the year in the college proper, which will prove especially beneficial. The one is a short course in agriculture, to be conducted in connection with the extension department of the University of Illinois. The other is a two years training course for pastoral helpers and directors of religious education. By this course Eureka is seeking to become of more service to the Churches of Christ by training for them Sunday-school teachers and religious leaders. A plan is also being worked out by which credit will be given for work done in Christian Sunday-schools. The prospects for an increase in students is especially flattering. If present indications are to be trusted, there will be an increase in the student body of at least 25 per cent for the year 1914-1915.

One of the happy events in connection with the recent commencement season at Eureka College was the celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the graduation of the class of 1894. The class put on a special program in which all of the members present took part and it was one of the most enthusiastic meetings of the entire week. Mr. Toler Swift, of Springfield, class president, presented to the college the class hatchet, which has seen hard usage for twenty years and is now to be placed in the archives of the institution. Among others present was Miss Cenie M. Seyster, who was the first baby born to members of the class and was christened the class baby. She is to be a Freshman in Eureka College next year.

The college honored Mr. A. E. Cory, who was a member of the class of '94, by presenting him with the LL. D. degree. Mr. R. E. Hieronymus, a member of the class of '89, for many years a teacher in Eureka and for ten years its president, was also honored by being granted the Doctor of Laws degree.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Eureka College, Mr. Louis O. Lehman was called to be field secretary for the college. He will begin his work September 1. Mr. Lehman is an alumnus of the college of the class of '01. He has held several successful pastorates in the state of Illinois. At the present time Mr. Lehman is pastor of the Church of Christ at Gibson City, Ill., where he has served the church faithfully for six years. His pastorate at Gibson City has been remarkably successful. During that time a beautiful house of worship has been erected, the church membership has been greatly increased and the respect and affection of the entire community won. Mr. Lehman is especially adapted by temperament and experience for the work he is to undertake. His call is enthusiastically received by all who know him.

Luke 19: 29-44. Memory Verses, 7-9

Golden Text.—Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy king cometh unto thee.—Zech. 9:9.

American Standard Bible.

(1) And when they draw nigh unto Jerusalem, unto Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount of Olives, he sendeth two of his disciples, (2) and saith unto them, Go your way into the village that is over against you: and straightway as ye enter into it, ye shall find a colt tied, whereon no man ever yet sat; loose him, and bring him. (3) And if any one say unto you, Why do ye this? say ye, The Lord hath need of him; and straightway he will send him back hither. (4) And they went away, and found a colt tied at the door without in the open street; and they loose him. (5) And certain of them that stood there said unto them, What do ye, loosing the colt? (6) And they said unto them even as Jesus had said: and they let them go. (7) And they bring the colt unto Jesus, and cast on him their garments; and he sat upon him. (8) And many spread their garments upon the way; and others branches, which they had cut from the fields. (9) And they that went before, and they that followed, cried, Hosanna; Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; (10) Blessed is the kingdom that cometh, the kingdom of our father David: Hosanna in the highest.

(11) And he entered into Jerusalem, into the temple; and when he had looked round about upon all things, it being now eventide, he went out unto Bethany with the twelve.

Verse by Verse.

BY CLARK BUCKNER

v. 1. They: Jesus and the throng that followed him. He sendeth two of his disciples: These were probably the men, Peter and John, who had made the preparations for the feast of the Passover.

v. 2. Into the village that is over against you: It is not known whether the reference is to Bethphage or some unnamed village. But it is probably to the former. A colt tied, whereon no man ever sat: The horse was used in war while the ass was used by those who followed the ordinary peaceful pursuits of life. The clause, "Whereon no man ever sat" indicates the special propriety of this particular animal, for it was customary to put unused animals to sacred uses. See Numbers 19:2.

v. 3. Any one: The owner was probably a friend of Jesus. The Lord hath need of him: The Lord must have the colt in order that he might fulfill the prophecy made in Zachariah 9:9.

v. 5. And certain of them that stood there: The owner of the colt and the members of his household.

v. 6. Said unto them even as Jesus had said, etc.: This indicates that the owner knew Jesus and was kindly disposed toward him.

v. 7. They bring the colt unto Jesus and cast on him their garments: The account in Matthew says that they brought "the ass and the colt, and put on them their garments, and he sat on them."

v. 8. Many spread their garments upon the way: "The garments answered in place of fine carpets which oriental people often spread in the path of a king." And others branches which they had cut from the fields: According to Heroditus, when Xerxes crossed the bridge on the Hellespont his way was strewn with branches of myrtle. Simon Maccabaeus entered Jersualem "with thanksgiving, and branches of palm trees, and with harps, and with cymbals, and with viols, and hymns, and songs."

v. 9. They that went before and they that followed: It must have been a great procession. Probably "they that went before" were those who had come out from the city to meet him. "They that followed" were probably those who were on their way to the feast of the Passover. Cried, Hosanna; Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord: The word 'Hosanna,' is the Greek form of the Hebrew word translated in Ps. 118, save now, where it is a prayer for help and guidance. In this case, however it appears to be more of a word of greeting.

v. 10. Blessed is the kingdom that cometh, the kingdom of our father, David: The people never lost sight of the prophecies of a coming kingdom, but they were expecting such a kingdom as flourished under their great King David. In the highest: In the highest degree, in the highest heaven.

v. 11. And he entered into Jerusalem: Tradition has it that he entered through the Golden Gate in the eastern wall which was found walled up in the time of the Crusades, and was opened only once a year, on Palm Sunday. Into the temple: He was to be lord over the temple as well as the city. Looked round about on all things: "This look took in those things which were to receive the next morning so sharp attention from him." Gould. Went out to Bethany with the twelve: Jesus always found a warm welcome in the home of Lazarus, in Bethany. It was a great debt that this household owed to Jesus, for he had raised Lazarus from the dead.

At the Heart of the Lesson.

BY REV. A. Z. CONRAD, PH.D.

APPROACHING THE CRISIS.

Culminations are always fascinating. While the race is watched with interest it is the finish which excites to the highest pitch. The progress of competitors is noted with interest, but with the approach of the goal applause becomes deafening. Biography finds its supreme interest not in beginnings, but in conclusions. A career which is marked by an anti-climax is deemed a failure. For nearly three years Jesus had been in the public eye. Multiplied miracles had attested his supernatural power. Extraordinary spiritual discourse had marked him as a citizen of two worlds. The crisis is approaching. His own recent prediction had intensified the interests of both friends and enemies. His arrival at Bethany of Friday evening had been marked by demonstrations of love when at the close of the Jewish Sabbath a banquet in his honor was attended by a symbolic anointing. The dawn of the first day of the week came and with it preparation for a demonstration of his divine right as the King of the world.

A STRANGE COMMISSION.

To two of his disciples he said, "Go your way into the village that is over against you and straightway as ye enter it ye shall find a colt tied whereon no man ever yet sat. Loose him and bring him to me." By this commission he declares his right of appropriation. Nevertheless, he recognized civic obligation and instructed his disciples to assure the owner of the colt that he would speedily be returned to him. He gave as the all sufficient reason for his appropriation, "The Lord hath need of him." It was a beautiful declaration of God's right to all the possessions of men. The call of the kingdom is paramount. When the interests of the Cause of Christ are at stake nothing can safely be withheld. All we have and are has been given as a sacred trust. At any moment when the call of God demands it the true disciple will readily surrender to the interests of the Great Cause his time, talent and possessions. That the Lord of all the earth who was conscious of his own right by virtue of his powers of creation and sustaining should have selected for his triumphal entry an animal associated with burden bearing, with common service, is further full of significance. It expresses the close relationship of Jesus to the common people. Humility and dignity are both combined. That it was an animal upon which man had never sat had also its lesson. The entire life of Jesus, from his birth to his death on the cross was absolutely unique. There was a newness about all he did and about what he said. It was the inauguration of a new era in the world's history. He did not follow precedents. He broke with custom whenever occasion required it and the interests of humanity could be better conserved. From Matthew's Gospel we learn that the mother of the colt was with it. It could thus be more readily employed for the service desired because more tractable.

THE HALLELUJAH CHORUS.

"And they bring the colt unto Jesus and cast on him their garments, and he sat upon him." It is then related that as he reached the brow of the Mount of Olives and the glory of the City of David burst upon their vision the great multitude who had come forth from Jerusalem to meet the advancing procession and the multitudes that followed Jesus spontaneously poured forth their expressions of praise and adoration. It is one of the most majestic expressions of worship since the shepherds heard the song of the angels over the fields of Bethlehem. "Hosanna to the Son of David. Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

EVANESCENT ENTHUSIASM.

"As Jesus passed through the golden gate, the triumphal procession still acclaiming his praise, still worshipping and adoring him, the city itself was roused to the highest pitch of excitement. The one inquiry upon every tongue was, "Who is this?" It is the age long interrogation. Upon the answer to that question depends all progress. The whole world of nature is one continuous challenge to the mind of man. Question after question is urged upon the attention of thinkers. In every field of investigation inquiries are multiplied and new light is thrown upon a multitude of problems. But of all the inquiries of the world none hold for one moment the place of importance that is occupied by this. The greatest progressive movements since the time of Jesus are nothing more nor less than the triumphal entry of Christ. He comes upon the scenes of men in manifestation of his love and power. Especially is this true in the great religious movements of the ages. In every splendid advance of the church of Christ the world for a moment stands and makes inquiry, "Who is this?" Sad to say, the multitude turn again to their accustomed activities knowing not the time of their visitation.

FRENZIED ENVY.

One of the sad features of unbelief is this, it is rarely content to be negative. Almost without knowing it men take sides. They become increasingly intense. If opposed to Christ the opposition increases. The same is true of the church of Christ. A position of neutrality is not so often held as supposed. Rejection develops into contempt, and hatred. The Pharisees who had asked the Master to rebuke his disciples a little while before now became frenzied with envy, and made inquiry of one another, "Behold how we prevailed nothing. Lo, the world has gone after him." This attitude will result in nothing less than crucifixion. The Lord of glory is crucified afresh by people who indignantly reject his claim, despise his offers of mercy, and with a supercilious air of self-sufficiency they turn away from Christ and his Church.

THE SILENT SURVEY.

"And he entered into Jerusalem, into the Temple, and when he had looked round about on all things, it being now eventide, he went out unto Bethany with the twelve." Thus closed one of the great days of history and no event of that entire day was more weighted with significance than the silent looks of Christ. The clamor of approbation and of opposition had both ceased. He stood for a time in the Temple, which represented himself, which stood for all the great truths which he himself embodied. One greater than the temple was there. He looked from its magnificent foundations to its splendid pinnacle. The Temple itself was but a faint embodiment of what Jesus was the true incarnation. He noted its desecration. He recognized the failure of much of its worship to realize the purposes of God. In very truth Jesus now enters the temple of the human heart. What does he behold. The most pertinent inquiry we can make in connection with this entire lesson is this, after all our professions of worship, after all our expressions of adoration, when Jesus enters the Temple, what does he find?

The Mid-Week Service

TOPIC ON JULY 29.

Paul the Missionary—Third Journey. Acts 18:23; 21:15.

"I am debtor." The man who wrote this sentence made an honest attempt to meet his obligations. He held that truth and salvation were for all men. If he had knowledge of God which any other man on the face of the earth did not have, he was debtor to that man. The Jew needed deliverance from the bondage to the law. Ignorance and superstition and vice held multitudes of the Gentiles in bondage. Only a few had come to the knowledge of God in Christ and were enjoying the freedom secured by that knowledge. When Paul became a Christian, he heard the call of the world. The anxiety he had experienced about his own soul's salvation gave place to missionary zeal. The completion of one preaching tour was the beginning of another.

ESTABLISHING THE DISCIPLES.

The care of all the churches may have been a heavy burden to the apostle, yet it was a burden he found pleasure in bearing. He had the gifts of an organizer. Those whom his earnest and able presentation of the gospel won to the kingdom of God were guided by him in the ways of Christian living. He watched over the churches with the loving care of a father over his children. His helpers were ever ready to report the fidelity and the heroism of his converts. If false teachers came to pervert the gospel of Christ, Paul was informed thereof and he took steps to counteract their teaching. He visited the churches as often as possible. He wrote to them when they needed instruction and he was unable to see them in person. He taught the strong to help the weak. He rebuked the spirit of faction. He encouraged all to stand fast in the faith.

AT EPHESUS.

Of Ephesus Stalker writes: "This city was at that time the Liverpool of the Mediterranean. It possessed a splendid harbor, in which was concentrated the traffic of the sea which was then the highway of the nations; and as Liverpool has behind her the great towns of Lancashire, so had Ephesus behind and around her such cities as those mentioned along with her in the epistles to the churches in the Book of Revelation, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea. It was a city of vast wealth, and it was given over to every kind of pleasure, the fame of its theatre and race-course being world-wide." The enormously rich temple of Diana was at Ephesus. Her shrine was the most celebrated in all the world. Greek and Oriental civilizations struggled for the mastery of the city. Hence Ephesus was the place Paul chose in preference to any other in that region.

AT MILETUS.

It was dangerous to be a messenger of Christ in the days of Paul. This Paul knew well. The most dangerous place for him was Jerusalem. He had been driven out of it by exasperated Jews. But when duty called, he went back, not knowing what would befall him, only that he would suffer bonds and imprisonment. On the way to Jerusalem he calls to him the elders of the church at Ephesus and gives them what he believes will be his final counsels. The speech he delivers to them reveals the pathos of his life and a courage that has never been excelled. Here is a preacher who has kept the faith. "I hold not my life of any account as dear unto myself, so that I may accomplish my course, and the ministry which I received from the Lord Jesus to testify the gospel of the grace of God." He is no time-server. He has told the full truth. His satisfaction is in this and not in any material rewards he has received. He has taught men the meaning of the saying, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Extracts From the Author's "Foreword"

"IT is with great reluctance that the author has gained the consent of his own mind to write this book and to send it forth. In a time when men's souls are vibrating to problems involving the most vital interests and ideals of humanity one's prestige is not likely to be enhanced by connecting one's name with a book on "The Meaning of Baptism." It will seem like turning from the living present to the dead past to discuss this question again. Modern-minded men in all the churches—including also the churches that have made a feature of the dogma of immersion—have little interest in the controversy. The great new issues of life and death have for them displaced those problems of ecclesiastical refinement which engaged their fathers. . . . . .

"It is not because I am so much interested in the baptism question, but because I am profoundly interested in the life and death problems of modern religion that I have let myself be persuaded to write this book and to send it forth. . . . . .

"Among my own people, the Disciples of Christ, I am frank to say, this dogma of immersion (by this I do not mean the practice of immersion) has been like a ten-cent piece held before the eye, shutting out the sun. The great ideals of their movement for Christian unity have been much obscured and, for many minds, wholly eclipsed by this doctrine which Alexander Campbell introduced into their thinking not many years after their movement was launched by his more catholic-minded father. My conviction is profound and urgent that the Disciples' plea for Christian unity will continue to be abortive so long as Mr. Campbell's view of baptism persists among them."

"CLAPTRAP" METHODS

of promoting Sunday school work are rapidly passing. The pronouncements of the late meeting of the Religious Education Association, held at New Haven, indicate that fact. Our constructive leaders are deploring the shouting and "boosting" methods of contests and special days. The Sunday School is coming to a sober realization of its responsibility for the building of Christian character and the inculcation of spiritual ideals in those to whom it ministers. Thoughtful leaders know that these can not be secured by noise and clatter and inflated attendance. It is to be hoped that the Disciples of Christ will not fall out of line with the sane, sensible Sunday school army that is now looking toward other goals than "great reports," big attendance and weighty offerings.

We call your attention to the BETHANY SYSTEM OF SUNDAY SCHOOL LITERATURE which has for its purpose the BUILDING OF CHARACTER:

I. THE BETHANY GRADED LESSONS, the superior in quality, we believe, of all other similar systems of literature. Compare it with others. We would prefer that you do this.
II. THE "CONQUEST" and other WEEKLIES, attractive but constructive and sober.
III. THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM, a magazine of social service.
IV. THE LIFE OF JESUS, a thorough, constructive review of the life of the Master.

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Character Talks

By J. H. Goldner, Pastor Euclid Avenue Christian Church, Cleveland : :

Rev. J. H. Goldner.

WHAT RELIGION IS

Religion is not an inheritance but an experience. We inherit doctrines, creeds, hymns, organizations and buildings and even a mighty leaning toward religion. A son can inherit from his father, who was a physician, an office, books, instruments and drugs, and even a strong leaning toward the practice of medicine; but not his medical experience and skill. So we can inherit our parents' forms of Godliness, but not their experience and attainments in Godliness. A religion presupposes a religious experience. By a religious experience I mean that the personal, ever-present God shall have become a fact and force in my experience, such a reality to my consciousness, that my intellect is changed and I think differently; my feelings are changed and I love differently; my will is changed and I purpose differently. "Wherefore if any man is in Christ, he is a new creature; the old things are passed away; behold they are become new."

"The Conquest is just what you say it is—'a journal of character-building,'" writes one of our superintendents. "The Conquest" takes itself seriously. That's why its readers take it seriously. Is the paper your school is taking one that emphasizes the things that should be emphasized in a Sunday school—serious Bible study, religious ideals and Christian service? "The Conquest" has as its aim not simply to give schools what they have been used to—small talk of school work; but to publish such material as will actually GROW CHARACTER.

Have you seen "The Conquest?" "Character Talks" is one of its features. J. H. Goldner, of Cleveland, will contribute the "Talks" for July. Send for a copy of "The Conquest."

The Other Judas

There was another Judas. We have very nearly forgotten that there could have been more than one. As a matter of fact, it was a somewhat common name in Palestine in the time of Christ, and there was good reason for its popularity.

One other man beside the traitor in the intimate circle of our Lord's companions bore that name, and still another author of one of the New Testament epistles also was called Judas. This is the only time in the New Testament that we find this Judas called by this name. We are practically certain that he is to be identified with Lebbaeus (Matthew 10:12) and Thaddeus (Mark 3:18). The confusion of the names is significant. Presumably Judas was his given name, the name by which he formerly was known up to the time of the betrayal. The other name came into common use we may believe largely because it became necessary to distinguish him from the other Judas.

The name Judas is an illustration of the way in which one man's infamy can cast a stain upon an honored name. The man who made the name Judas so popular was Judas Maccabeus, one of the noblest heroes in all Israel's history; the man who achieved the all but impossible task of crowning his own name and who set up a government in Jerusalem and which, sadly as it fell in later years below the original Maccabean ideal, was one of the purest and noblest conceptions that ever fired a heroic heart. Judas, the Maccabean, made that name so glorious that a thousand Jewish mothers called their children after him. It was a name already glorious because it was the Greek equivalent of the old Hebrew name, Judah; Judah who towered above the other sons of Jacob and bequeathed a name to his tribe so puissant that its crest became the lion. The lion of the tribe of Judah ruled among the other tribes by force of character and moral power.

We meet the name several times in the century preceding the birth of Christ. We find it borne by several men in the New Testament. It was a disciple, Judas, to whose home in Damascus Saul went after his conversion and waited for the light. It was a man named Judas Barabbas who went as one of the two prominent members of the Jerusalem church to bear with Paul and Barnabas the interpretation of the finding of the great council in Jerusalem. It was Judas, the Lord's own brother, who wrote the interesting little epistle towards the close of the New Testament canon, and it was Judas who lost his name in a confusion of substitutes, Lebbaeus and Thaddeus, and maybe others, in an almost hopeless attempt to distinguish him from another man by the same name in the company of the twelve apostles.

One sinner destroyeth much good. Behold the good destroyed in the ignominy which Judas Iscariot brought upon a noble name. One of the noblest exploits in Hebrew history, one of the most intrepid out of the heroes of a heroic name, and all the mighty men who later bore that name and all the glorious deeds they wrought, stand under a certain shadow because one craven wretch who happened to bear the same name forever associated that name with the idea of dishonor and treachery. Whoever has used the name of Judas in the last nineteen hundred years has found it necessary, in one way or another, to insert the explanatory and half apologetic note which we find here in the fourth Gospel to let it be understood that the particular Judas of whom he speaks was not Judas Iscariot. The treachery of Judas harmed not only himself, but more or less it has harmed every other soul that ever bore the name. As for Judas Lebbaeus or Thaddeus, the name practically killed him. He stands totally undistinguished among the twelve apostles. His name had to be spoken with so constant an explanation, so perpetual an apology that the name and the man have practically disappeared. Judas Iscariot murdered the good name of every other man who bore the name and nobody uses that name concerning any respectable man if he can help it. If he is compelled to use it at all he does it with a parenthesis of one sort or another to show that this Judas is not Iscariot.

The use of the little parenthesis in which John encloses the words "not Iscariot" is a plea for the fair judgment of the question of Judas. It was a very sensible question; it brought forth a most precious answer from the Lord. We are under great obligation to Judas for giving Jesus the opportunity of telling us what He did in answer to the question, "Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?" The precious truth of the indwelling Christ was set forth in loving words for the comfort and the hope of the disciples, largely because Judas just at the right time asked just the right question.

Lovers of their Fellow Men

A REPORT OF THE SAGAMORE SOCIOLOGICAL CONFERENCE, HELD AT SAGAMORE BEACH, CAPE COD, MASS.

THE first essential of a good summer conference on any philanthropic subject is something good to eat and a comfortable place to stay. Plain living and high thinking are well in theory, but we have noticed at many great gatherings that philanthropists are habitually punctual at mealtime. This is one thing that makes Sagamore popular. There is something good to eat, and there are comfortable beds within sound of the sea, and there is a pleasant and hospitable atmosphere that greets one on arrival and abides.

But conferences do not live on bread alone. The papers at Sagamore are prepared and the addresses delivered by men of ability and reputation, widely known as experts in their several departments.

FREEDOM OF DISCUSSION.

There is one added quality to be mentioned, and that is the entire freedom with which the subjects, when once presented, are thrown open to discussion, and the free collision of the various opinions expressed. The spirit of free discussion is not killed by fatal politeness.

These characteristics make for free intercourse and profitable interchange of thought. The chairman, Mr. George W. Coleman, presides with entire absence of presidential frigidity, yet holds an even handed balance in the discussions, which are entered into heartily by men and women of all shades of opinion. The reception tendered by Mr. and Mrs. Coleman is enjoyable, democratic, and truly social.

We give under separate headings condensed reports of the five principal addresses. They are notable articles by men of reputation, and their discussion from the floor was full of interest.

The Sagamore Beach colony was primarily a Christian Endeavor community. It is a village of homes, with parks and waterworks, and with restrictions against the sale of liquor and against frivolous amusements. It is a serious-minded community, bent on having a jolly good time while doing good. President Francis E. Clark makes his home there, and so does that genial editor, Amos R. Wells, whose writings inspire more young people to more good purposes than any one other man in America. The residents are happy in the companionship of each other and the sea, and the guests of the summer conference have happy memories.

Lakewood Road.

The eighth annual session of the Sagamore Sociological Conference, which opened at Sagamore Beach, Cape Cod, Tuesday, June 30, and continued Wednesday and Thursday, July 1 and 2, was unique among Boston's summer gatherings, for every one of the 500 educators, reformers and social workers invited to be present attended as the guest of a group of hosts which includes such men and women as George W. Coleman, president of the Conference; Mrs. Glendower Evans, Arthur J. Crockett, of the Modern Priscilla, and Rev. James A. Francis, of the Clarendon Street Baptist Church. The Conference was followed on July 3 by a Council of Open Forums, conducted as a round table discussion by the leaders of Open Forums all over the country.

The Conference was marked by a group of speakers both unusual and distinguished. The nature of the season's topic—"The Race Problem in America, With Special Reference to the Negro, the Asiatic and the Jew"—made the personnel of the speakers most interesting. Among them they represent authorities on or representatives of every race mentioned in the discussion.

The Conference opened with a group of folk songs of many nations, rendered by Henry L. Gideon and by Mrs. Gideon, who was Miss Constance Ramsay, of Pachesham Park, Surrey, England. Mr. Gideon, besides being organist and choirmaster for the past six years at Temple Israel, is a member of the faculty of the Boston Music School Settlement, the director of the Temple Singers, a concert company of soloists and choristers and a lecturer on musical topics for the Boston Opera Company. He is a Kentuckian and a graduate of Harvard, who has lived and studied abroad for many years. These songs from the Chinese, Japanese, Negro and Yiddish, proved an admirably attractive introduction to the discussions.

The opening service was conducted by Rev. William E. Barton, D. D., whose theme was "The Descent of the New Jerusalem."

On the same evening Professor Daniel Evans opened the discussion with a paper entitled, "Is Race Antipathy Rational?" Professor Evans was born in Wales, and as a lad worked as a breaker boy in the coal mines of Pennsylvania, where almost all the nationalities now migrating to America are represented. He is a graduate of Bowdoin College, and is at present professor of Christian Theology at Andover Theological Seminary, Cambridge. "Each man should be proud of the race to which he belongs," said Prof. Evans, "but prouder still that he is a human being and belongs to humanity."

"WHAT THE NEGRO WANTS."

The second day of the Conference began with tenor solos by Mr. Roland W. Hayes, a negro singer of Boston; Rev. William DeBerry, of Springfield, Mass., spoke on "What the Negro Wants." Mr. DeBerry is himself a member of the race for which he pleads, and is pastor of St. John's Congregational Church, in Springfield. He is a graduate of Fisk University, and thoroughly conversant with the conditions and needs of the Negro both in the North and South. Mr. DeBerry's address was followed by one on "What We Can Do for the Negro," by Rev. Benjamin F. Riley, of Birmingham, Ala. Doctor Riley has had a most unusual career. Born in Alabama, educated at Erskine College, Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Crozer Theological Seminary, and the University of Alabama, he became president of Howard College, and after five years left to take the position of professor of English Literature at the University of Georgia. He is author of a notable book "The White Man's Burden." In 1909, as he says, "I was lured from a lucrative and pleasant position to seek an adjustment of racial conditions, because these conditions had reached a point that was deplorably horrible. For five years, in the face of opposition and prejudice, Dr. Riley has devoted himself entirely to work among the Negro race, his attitude being expressed in his book, "The White Man's Burden." "The Negro," he says, "asks not for a fish, but for a hook." He believes the solution of the problem lies in educating him to help himself.

These two addresses, approaching the topic from opposite viewpoints, developed a striking unity of sentiment, and were received with enthusiastic applause.

DR GRIFFIS SPEAKS.

Dr. William Elliot Griffis, who spoke on "The Asiatic in the United States," is one of the greatest American authorities on the subject, his knowledge being based on a long residence in the Orient. A Philadelphian by birth and a graduate of Rutgers College and Union Theological Seminary, he served in the Civil War and soon after went to Japan, where he was successively organizer of schools, Superintendent of Education in the Province of Echizen, and professor of physics at the Imperial University of Tokio. In 1907 he was decorated by the late Emperor Mutsuhito with the Order of the Rising Sun. Since his return to America he has served as a Congregational pastor in Boston, and in Ithaca, N. Y., and has written extensively on various phases of history and travel. His address was one of keen analysis.

At the morning session on Thursday, Mr. Robert Haven Schauffler read his new poem, "The Crucible," which recently appeared in The Century. Mr. Schauffler is well known both as a poet and musician, being the author of several books of verse. His stirring "Scum of the Earth," which appeared in the Atlantic Monthly a year ago, was a rousing plea for justice to the immigrant.

Following the reading, the entire session Thursday morning was given up to general discussion with no special speaker scheduled.

The last speech of the Conference on Thursday evening was that of Prof. Nathaniel Schmidt, of Cornell, on "Has Race Anything to Do With the Prejudice Against the Jew?" Most people are surprised to learn that Prof. Schmidt was born in Sweden and received part of his education at the University of Stockholm. He has also been a student at the University of Berlin, and at Colgate University, at which latter institution he was professor of Semitic Languages and Literature until called in 1896 to a similar position at Cornell. In 1904 and 1905 he was director of the American School of Archæology in Jerusalem, and he has contributed to the New International, the Jewish, and other encyclopedias, and is the author of several historical works, including "The Prophet of Nazareth." Perhaps no man in the country is better fitted to speak on the subject assigned to him, and his address was an inspiration.

The Sagamore Sociological Conference both in its speakers and its guests is itself a typically American, and hence national conglomerate, "melting pot." Councils of this sort will contribute to the solution of the pressing racial problems of America.

Would that Christmas lasted the whole year through, and that the prejudices and passions which deform our better nature were never called into action among those to whom they should ever be strangers.—Dickens.

CONSUME YOUR OWN SMOKE.

By H. O. Spelman.

When in reaching for roses you grasp but a briar;
Or in striving to help men you kindle their ire,
And their unthankful lives set your pulses on fire;
Don't flame forth in anger on other good folk;
But bank your own fires, consume your own smoke.

When you see how for glory and power men strain,
And multitudes barter their souls for mere gain;
Don't hold the whole race in a righteous disdain,
And strive to cut loose at a single fell stroke;
But bank your own fires, consume your own smoke.

When your brothers lose heart in life's furious game,
And in anger and hatred charge others with blame,
And contention and strife set their hearts all aflame;
Don't add to the fuel by laughter and joke;
But bank your own fires, consume your own smoke.

SALUTES OF MANY KINDS.

In the United States the characteristic salutation is "Hello!"

The Arabs say on meeting, "A fine morning to you!"

The Turk says with gravity, "God grant you his blessings!"

The Egyptian is a practical man. He has to earn his taxes by toil under a burning sun. Accordingly he asks, "How do you perspire?"

The Chinese loves his dinner. Hence, he asks, "How are you digesting?"

The Greeks, who are keen men of business, ask one another, "How are you getting on?"

The national salutation of Naples was formerly, "Grow in grace!" At present, in most parts of Italy, a phrase equivalent to "How are you?" is used.

The Spaniards say, "How are you passing it?"

The French, "How do you carry yourself?"

The German, "How goes it?"

The Dutch, "How do you travel?"

Why the World is Sad

An Interpretation of the Present-Day Universal Disquietude.

BY H. ERWIN STAFFORD.

OUR age is known by many names. It has been termed the age of industry and big business, the age of invention, of vast feats of engineering, of book-making, the young man's age and woman's age (though the latter is never given in exact figures). But this is pre-eminently an age of discontent, for into our national life has come a disturbing vision. We may cry out peace, but there is no peace.

The discontent that characterizes the hour is not only individualistic, but it is social. It does not belong to any particular group of individuals, nor to any class brought together as a social aggregate. For there is unrest in high places as well as among the lower strata of life. Nor do we find the great middle class any more at rest. Our nation is sad.

WORLD-WIDE DISCONTENT.

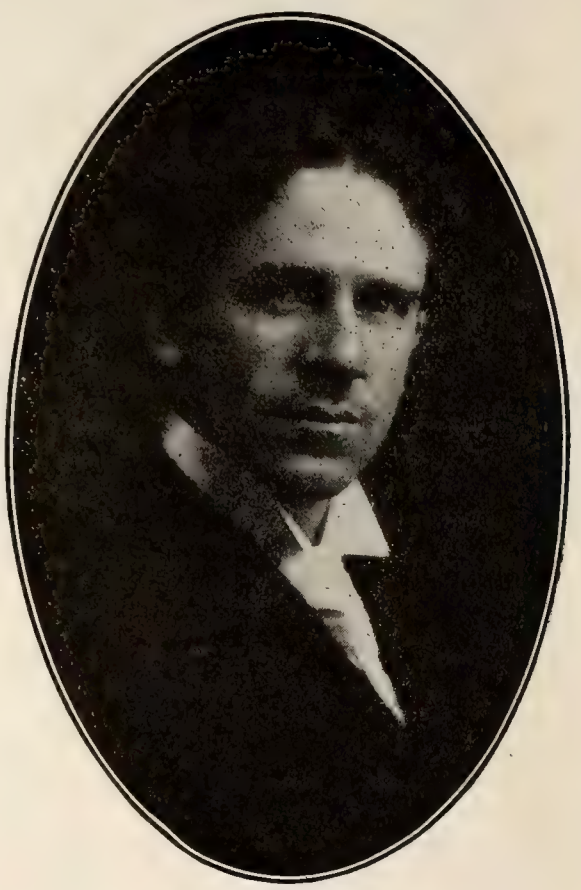
We are told by certain thinkers that this discontent is confined to our nation, and is due to our democracy. That the very liberty we have had has in turn become the destroying factor. But it requires only a surface study of the nations to reveal the fact that discontent is world-wide. Britain is one seething, shifting, swarming mass of restlessness. Germany is ill at ease, as is shown by the large number of social Democrats elected to the Reichstag. France is shifting, and the trample of her feet resembles the revolutionary sounds of not long ago. Portugal has had a revolution. And what shall we say of those semi-civilized nations, but that they are even deeper in the ills of discontent? The Duma has not satisfied the Russian, nor the present attempt at government, the young Turk; while the Balkan states have just registered their discontent in the horrors of war. The heathen lands are clamoring for a change. The restlessness of China is declared in terms of a revolution. India stands upon the threshold of expectancy. All the nations are sad.

Nevertheless, it is strange that we are so ill at ease under the splendid conditions of prosperity that obtain. As a whole, our nation was never more industrious. More land is being tilled, greater crops are being produced, our factories are turning out more and better products, our banks are more reliable and our nation is growing wealthier every day. Wealth is giving us conveniences in the home, on the street, and at the market, which we never had before—conveniences in communication, in travel and in industry. Our railways, steamships, and trains are moving parlors and palaces. At no time in the world's history were books, education, the arts, and entertainment better, cheaper, and brought to a greater number of people.

DISCONTENT DUE TO NEW VISION OF GOD.

Why then, in the face of all these things, are the nations sad? We are told that the people have lost faith in God, have forgotten him, and wandered away from his great love, peace and joy; that lack of faith means lack of purpose.

It is not because our nation has lost faith, but because the people have gained a vision of God, and his truth. That vision has given men an enlarged horizon. It has pointed out new purposes. The vision has directed them toward new duties. It has declared a new attitude for man to man. It has disturbed the satisfaction the nation had in itself. Once, wealth was satisfied with its own pleasures. The mansion upon the avenue with its many servants, the summer home in the mountains, the cruise among the tropics in the winter, brought joy, and satisfied. The wealthy were content to use their wealth for themselves. The great middle class has been successful in business, piled up big bank accounts, bought automobiles, fitted its homes with conveniences, educated its children, formed literary clubs, but still it is sad. Labor enjoys the best wage that it has ever enjoyed (we remember that the purchasing power of a dollar is less than it has ever been, and therefore the high wage does not count for as much as is sometimes boasted). But the laborer lives in better homes, has better equipment, better opportunities for his children, and better educational facilities for himself. With the stereopticon and moving picture he may journey through all lands, and by means of the victrola may have the masters transported to his fireside. Yet, he is sad. He has had a vision of God.



Rev. H. E. Stafford.

THE SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS RISING.

Likewise, the nations "that sit in darkness have seen a great light" and are sad. While the new aspirations of the young Turk have been declared in terms of politics, still underneath is an inner vision gained through religious light. The sun of righteousness is rising upon the heart and mind of Turkey. The Chinese Republic expresses itself in terms of government, but it is only the fruit of seeds long since sown in the heart of the nation by the faithful missionaries of the cross. India, too, is aiming to throw off the bindings of caste and politics, because she is receiving a new faith. But the very restrictions of a traditional past are keeping these nations from enjoying the light of truth and therefore they are sad.

But why is the world sad because it has seen God? For the same reason that the noble youth who received a vision from Jesus was made sad. He hesitated midway between what he was and what his vision showed him he could be. Had he been able to blot out the vision, he might have retained his whole measure of joy or had he gone on unto the complete fulfillment of his duty as seen in the new light, he would have been extremely happy, but hesitating, he was sad. The wealthy of our land have seen God, but they are failing to follow the vision. They have looked at their charities, their gifts toward education, toward science, toward art, and toward religion, and behold, these do not satisfy. Their vision asks for a larger measure of life, and until this is given, they will be sad.

THE FORD EXPERIMENT.

Some have tried to get joy through sharing profits in their business, such as Mr. Ford. Truly, this is commendable. In this step, Mr. Ford has outstripped his fellows, but he has only demonstrated to the great hungering, needy multitudes the vast margin which exists between the cost of production and the selling receipts. His new plan solves nothing. It only deepens in the mind of the thinker the conviction that the people are being denied their rights—that there is an eternal wrong at the bottom of it all. Until this wrong is righted, and until men follow their vision, they cannot rejoice.

Likewise, the middle and the laboring classes are sad because both have seen God, and yet are unable to follow him. There are some who are sad because they will not pay the price for righteousness. But most are sad because they cannot. Thus, the material world as a joy-giver has been tasted and is proving insipid.

I am optimist enough to turn prophet for a moment. The day is already dawning when our nation will swing from its great material pursuit to the real issues of life, to that which is life indeed. For the grapes of material joy have filled the presses many times, but lo, the wine is unfit for life. Men are turning to taste anew the water that quenches all thirst.

And what shall we say of the foreign nations, save that their heathen faith is holding them in bondage. The God they see is the God they can love, and would follow. But to break the bonds that hold them fast, and to enter into the full promise of their new vision, is a task that is hard indeed. And so the people that sit in darkness are sad because they are seeing the great light, and cannot follow it.

"GOD HAS SPOKEN."

This vision of God and the possible righteousness toward God and man will continue to haunt men until the world's performance catches up with the ideal vision which they have received. For God has spoken, and the vision will remain. No rest will be given until our nation and the nations of the earth make its life without—its life in the market, on the street, in the factory, in the council, and legislative hall—correspond with the vision which it holds within its soul. Once before in her history did our nation experience this truth. A day came when a vision of righteousness toward the bound man, of liberty toward the burdened, disturbed her peace. Not until our nation arose, and went forward to fulfill her vision, did she find rest and joy. Christ has appeared in the home. He has entered the shop. He has caused his face to shine in the office. The halo of his glory illuminated the legislative chamber, and he has brought restlessness and discontent. But, behold, his people are rising to put the new passion in a new life, to join with their Christ in his new conquest, and to fulfill his vision of a new earth with a new brotherhood. The day is not far distant when a sweeping transformation shall proclaim the good and acceptable day of the Lord.

The Responsibilities of the Christian Life

A Message to a Slumbering Church.

A SERMON TALK BY CHARLES M. SHELDON.

IN the passage first quoted there stands out very plainly the truth that they who profess to be the children of God are named, "Ambassadors For Christ." It is not optional with them; they may fail of fulfilling the high function of their office, but they are ambassadors nevertheless.

In the second passage quoted there is the implied truth that upon these ambassadors there is laid responsibility, and that it must be accounted for at some future time before the judgment seat of Christ.

Now if it be thought a hardship that these responsibilities should be laid upon the children of God let me say, that not to have this consciousness of responsibility is to live an insipid, tasteless, useless life. To have no keen, stinging sense of having been given something to do, and for the doing of which I shall be held to account will make of us useless creatures indeed. The man who has no sense of responsibility is the man whose brain will be an empty place, not peopled with great thoughts; a man whose muscles are flabby; whose blood is water; whose heart knows no noble impulses, whose life is a dreary waste.

RESPONSIBILITIES LAID ON CHILDREN OF GOD.

I want to speak to you in all earnestness of some of these great responsibilities that are laid upon us as children of God. I desire that we may see that there are some responsibilities laid on us that are not upon those who are not Christians. When we cross the line, and declare ourselves children of God, then there come to us some forms of responsibility that we did not have laid on us before. I have heard it said, that the Christian is no more responsibile in any sense than any other man, but I am sure that we shall see that it is not so; that there are forms of responsibility that belong to the ambassador that do not belong to other men and women.

When a citizen of Great Britain comes to this country there are some responsibilities that he is under from the moment that he lands, but when he becomes an actual citizen of this country there are new responsibilities that rest on him because of his having become a citizen, and it is just so with those who declare their allegiance to Jesus Christ.

GROWTH AND FRUITAGE.

First: That form of responsibility which is really the ground of all growth and fruitage. The child of God is responsible to yield himself up to the power which can alone produce growth and fruitage. Christian character is not so much like a house that is built, as it is like a tree that grows. The acorn put into the ground has life in it, and the life finds its expression in the tree—the trunk, the branches, the foliage. So, the Word of God has the life in it, and planted in a human mind and heart it finds expression in Christian character. Now, will you note the law of growth in the natural world? There is no prodigious effort. Go into the forest and you do not hear the trees groaning out their desire for growth; go into the flower garden and you do not hear any sighing after growth or beauty. Now what is really taking place is this. The trees, and the flowers are yielding themselves up to the power that worketh in them, and growth, and fruitage are the results of such yielding. In the springtime the trees put on their new garments, the fruit trees don their new robes of wondrous beauty and the flowers begin to bloom because they have surrendered to the life-giving current that flows through their being. Cut into the tree anywhere and you will find the sap—the life-blood of the tree. And this is the secret of all growth, and all fruitage. Now, there is a beautiful analogy here. The Christian grows, and bears fruit because he yields his being up to the power of the Infinite; and the responsibility that is primary and all-important is just this: that we open every avenue of our being to this current of life and power in order that it may permeate every part of the life. Not to respond to these forces of life which beat at the doors of my being is to become withered and useless. If I want light in my dwelling I am responsible to press the button. If I want water, I am responsible to turn the faucet; the light and the water are there calling to me, but I must respond to their call.

Rev. Charles M. Sheldon.

RELIGION, A REAL AND VITAL FORCE.

In the second place the Christian is responsible to make the world see and know that religion is a real and vital force in the lives of men and women. It is not enough that there should be righteousness, love, purity, kindness in books and sermons; they must be shown to men and women in concrete form; they must be incarnated in living men and women. Righteousness must go about on two feet. There must be righteousness that lifts a voice in mighty protest against wrong; that looks out on the world through eyes that flash with indignation when the poor are outraged, when compassion is smothered and pity is withheld. Purity, honor and chastity must live in real men and women. We are responsible to make the world understand that religion is real; as real as men and women are. The world is tired of unreality; hungry men are not asking to look at pictures of joints of beef or loaves of bread, they want the real thing. Thirsty people are not asking for pictures of water fountains, they want the real thing.

"Now then, we are ambassadors for Christ." II Cor. 6:20 "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ." 2 Cor. 5:10.

EXAMPLE AND INFLUENCE.

And then, we are also responsible to see that both our example and our influence are of such a character that they shall lift up and bless, rather than pull down and curse those who are affected by them. We are responsible to set before our children and for young people such an example as shall lead them in the way of righteousness. We must see to it that the shadow of influence that we so continually are casting shall be of the right sort. No man has any least shadow of right to expect that his boy will be any better in a moral sense than he is. He furnishes the pattern and he must not curse fate if the goods are made up by the boy after the pattern given. If men want their boys to be in Sunday-school after they are fifteen years of age, let the fathers see that they themselves are in Sunday-school now. There is ever upon us this responsibility to be present at the services of the church unless some unavoidable thing prevents. To say that you must do on Sunday some things that you never have time to do on other days is to juggle with the responsibility that God has laid upon you as a Christian man or woman. If any one shall think that I am in error about this I ask that you think it all out to its logical ending and see if the preacher is not right.

SERVICE.

We are responsible also to give ourselves in service to those who are less strong and less fortunate than ourselves; and we are to do this in a manner, and sometimes in a measure that is sacrificial. Indeed I am inclined to believe that Joseph Parker was right when he said: "Whatever is not sacrificial is satanic."

And at last, but not least by any means, the church as a whole has upon her the responsibility of evangelizing the world. I do not say of converting the world for I do not find that in scripture; on the contrary, the scriptures teach that the world will not be entirely converted when our Lord returns, but, we are responsible to make Christ known to all men and women whether they receive the message or reject it.

And how shamefully the church has failed to measure up to her responsibility. Never has any body of men and women had such opportunity; never such wide-open doors; never such a receptive spirit in heathen countries as now. And yet the church dallies with her God-given opportunities; the treasuries of the Mission Boards plead by their emptiness. Oh, that there were some magic by which the eyes of the church might be opened.

Oh, that some message of man, or angel, or Spirit might reach the slumbering consciences of man and women. May God help each of us to see our responsibility and to meet it as we ought.

War in the Balkans

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT, JR.

Editor's Note: When the conference of peace commissioners sent by the contending Balkan States to London finished its work two years since it was hoped that the troubles of that affected portion of the world were over, at least for years to come. It now appears, however, that after all the bloodshed, loss of life and destruction of property, the Balkan region is as little satisfied as before, and present reports presage an early outbreak of hostilities between the old enemies, Greece and Turkey. This only enforces the time-proven truth that war never settles any question which diplomacy and conference might not more effectively and permanently decide. It is the brute in man that demands the appeal to the sword. In the meantime what is the position and duty of Protestant Christianity in such a crisis? This our Syrian correspondent discusses in this article.

NOW that war seems about to be declared between Greece and Turkey, after the eyes of the world have been focused for two years on the Balkans, a few words as to some of the features of the situation which have a religious significance may be of interest.

At the very beginning of the contest, certain of the more far-sighted London papers warned the world that before the struggle was brought to a close civilization and Christianity would come to a shocked realization of the actual social conditions of the contending states. I was in Paris at the time of the opening hostilities, and we received daily bulletins of barbarities and atrocities, growing constantly worse, but in general attributed largely to the Turks. Whole villages destroyed and the people ruthlessly massacred formed no uncommon topic.

Then came a little book by Pierre Loti "Turquie Agonisante," in which he defended the Turks vigorously pointing out that they were but fighting for their own rights against an encroaching neighbor. He put the blame for barbarities upon the allies of the Greeks, calling Ferdinand of Bulgaria a cold-hearted war machine, Nicholas of Montenegro a stock exchange broker trading on the misery of his people, and Peter of Servia a blood-stained usurper. Behind these three loomed up the late King George of Greece, "who seems to be ashamed of his associates and to dread their touch."

Such were the reports of the day, and we heard Turk and Bulgarian spoken of as rival savages. Now we find, after statistics have come to hand, that while no nation is free from blame and every one has been criticized or applauded, in reality it is the Greeks who have done the must looting and robbing,—murder being, of course, a necessary accompaniment of the raids,—the Servians second and last of all the most blamed of the two—the Bulgarians, while Turkey, ever bloody in war, has done no more than retaliate. Like an animal at bay, hemmed in on every side, it must be expected to strike out at the opportunity. Such an estimate shocks us who feel more akin to the Greeks than to the Slavic or Turkish races. But it must be remembered that it is not the government which can be censured, nor the king. The blame falls rather upon the guerilla bands which fight for Greece but independent of all general discipline. When we examine the facts it is apparent that reckless slaughter and wanton cruelty are no more a part of their program than they were of our own armies in the Civil War. But there are thousands of wild fighters, loosely attached to each flag who are trying to obtain revenge for the oppression of centuries and are not restrained in their method of going about it.

In all this turmoil the question of Christian missions supported by Protestant communions, is a vital one, for we are facing a triple foe striving to annihilate us. Austria, its long arm pointing in the direction of its political aims, is throwing all the power of its bigoted and despotic type of Romanism against the Protestants, hoping to push them out of the lands where it has influence. Russia, the champion of the oldest and most archaic form of Christianity, is doing all in its power to kill our work and overthrow the results already attained. While Turkey, ever the hot-bed of Islamic hostility to Christianity as a whole unites with her former foes against the greater danger which she sees sapping her strength. When one counts—as far as one can do in such a complicated mass—the number of races, languages, religions, age-long feuds, bigoted leaders and conflicting policies struggling in the little area of the Balkans, he does not wonder that the tangle seems inextricable, and that extermination and repopulation have been suggested as the best means of attaining peace.

It seems impossible that Turkey can live. Only the other day Lord Bryce predicted that it was but a matter of years, or perhaps even months, until it was driven beyond the Bosphorus. And then what the situation will be no one can say. Beside this problem that of Mexico seems but child's play, and we are in daily dread of more war, bloodshed, suffering.

There is, however, one result that has come from the intrusion of the Balkan states into Turkish affairs, and that is the freeing of the Moslem religion from the domination of the Porte. The Turkish masters and Arabic speaking subjects have long been at odds. Now, during the lull in hostilities, hordes of Turkish officials have come from their lost pasts in the Balkans to replace Arabic-speaking men in the government service in Asia. The people have endured much, but they will hardly submit to this new burden. And while the struggle may bring Mohammedanism to a higher plane of enlightenment, under a new leadership, still it will bring peril to the would-be non-combatant Christian who may be forced to take sides for momentary protection. Christian missions have not a moment to lose. If all cannot be made followers of Christ—and we know that such a thing is out of the question in a day,—they must at least be raised to a level where the conflict, when it comes, will be carried on, if I may be permitted the paradox, with Christian forbearance, —which Christians have not always shown,—and not be a swift return to savagery and barbarism. Here is the point at which we have our work to do —to smooth out the troubles, not only between ourselves and Islam, but between the contending forces within Islam itself. In Syria much good has been done, for in many times of peril the new spirit of tolerance brought in by the Christian schools has poured oil on the troubled sea of bigotry and hatred, and bloodshed has been averted. But there is still much to do, and there are all too few of us to do it.

Scientists Fight Alcohol as Poison

NATIONAL CONVENTION OF ALIENISTS AND NEUROLOGISTS IN CHICAGO PASS STRONG RESOLUTIONS.

WAR on alcohol was declared last week by the national convention of alienists and neurologists in session at the Hotel La Salle, Chicago.

Not only was the vote unanimous, but there was no attempt to discuss what was declared to be the most stringent set of resolutions ever adopted on that subject by a body of medical men.

Not satisfied with declaring alcohol responsible for a large proportion of the world's insanity, epilepsy, feeble-mindedness and "other forms of mental, moral and physical degeneracy," the resolutions recommended that state legislatures prevent traffic in alcoholic liquors; that physicians initiate and carry on a public education of the public as to alcohol's "deleterious effects," and practically pledged the medical profession to take the van in seeking legislation for the extermination of alcoholic liquors.

PLAN LEGISLATIVE WORK.

The presentation of the resolutions by the committee on alcoholism as a positive factor of insanity followed numerous citations of alienists' investigations which were anything but favorable to alcohol; in fact, liquor did not appear to have one friend in the court of medicine. It seemed probable that before the end of the convention steps would be taken for the organization of a committee to begin the work of educating the public and seeking prohibition legislation from state legislatures next winter.

Dr. Frank I. Drake of the Wisconsin state penitentiary at Waupun struck a hard blow at alcohol, and then opened a source of fruitful and interesting debate on the always popular subject of verbal joust among alienists, namely, eugenics.

"Of the 727 admissions to the Wisconsin penitentiary during 1912-13." said he, "42 per cent admitted they had used liquor to excess and but 7 per cent denied the use of liquor in toto. I believe that I am well within the limits of truth when I say that 60 per cent of our convicts find their way to prison directly or indirectly because of alcohol."

The following resolutions were passed by the convention:

RESOLUTIONS.

"Whereas, in the opinion of the meeting of alienists and neurologists of the United States in convention assembled it has been definitely established that alcohol when taken into the system acts as a definite poison to the brain and other tissues, and that the effects of this poison are directly or indirectly responsible for a large proportion of the insane, epileptic, feeble-minded and other forms of mental, moral and physical degeneracy; and

"Whereas, The laws of many states make alcohol freely available for drinking purposes, and therefore cater to the physical, mental and moral degradation of the people, and many hospitals for the insane and other public institutions are now compelled to admit and care for a multitude of inebriates, and many states have already established separate colonies for the treatment and re-education of such inebriates, with great benefit to the individuals and to the commonwealth; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we unqualifiedly condemn the use of alcoholic beverages and recommend that the various state legislatures take steps to eliminate such use, and that we recommend the general establishment by all states and territories of special colonies or hospitals for the care of inebriates; and

"Resolved, that organized science should initiate and carry on a systematic, persistent propaganda for the education of the public regarding the deleterious effects of alcohol; and be it further

"Resolved, That the medical profession should take the lead in securing adequate legislation to the ends herein specified."

The signers are Dr. Charles Read, Chicago, chairman; Dr. Arthur M. Corwin, Chicago; Dr. W. S. Lindsay, Topeka; Dr. Thomas D. Throckmorton, DesMoines, and Dr. Theodore A. Diller, Pittsburg, for the committee on alcoholism as a positive factor of insanity.

"I Shall Not Pass Again This Way"

(A copy of this poem, much worn, was found in the desk of Mr. Daniel S. Ford, proprietor and editor of the Youth's Companion, after his death when his desk was cleared by loving hands. It explains much of Mr. Ford's wide and generous benefactions.)

The bread that giveth strength I want to give;
The water pure that bids the thirsty live;
I want to help the fainting day by day;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give the oil of joy for tears,
The faith to conquer cruel doubts and fears,
Beauty for ashes may I give alway;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give good measure running o'er,
And into angry hearts I want to pour
The answer soft that turneth wrath away;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give to others hope and faith;
I want to do all that the Master saith;
I want to live aright from day to day;
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

A CREEDAL CONSTITUTION

THE efforts that have been made by the friends of Phillips Bible Institute at Canton, Ohio, to defend the action of its founders in incorporating a creed in its constitution are good illustrations of the fact that the Disciples have not fully lost their sensitiveness to the fundamental issue of creedal subscription which was so important an item in the program of the fathers a century ago. The most impressive feature of that historic protest against the sectarianism of the age related to this very matter of creed formulation and insistence. No one of the fathers questioned the right of any man to announce his own convictions on Christian doctrine at any length he chose, and with any amount of detail. That against which they made their most insistent protest was the formulation of a statement as a test of orthodoxy in connection with the organization of any church or other religious institution. It is a strange commentary upon the rapidity with which high ideals may be forgotten that Mr. Phillips and the other founders of the Canton School, where, if anywhere, loyalty to the ideals of the fathers might have been expected, should abandon this well-defended ground, and resort to the very expedient practiced by sectarian organizations from the days of the Reformation down. The creed which was incorporated in the constitution of the Phillips Bible Institute was as formal and definite a commitment of the institution and its instruction to a human creed as was the confessional test of the older Presbyterian Church with its articles of faith. It is a matter of satisfaction that the friends of the school, notwithstanding their vehement disclaimer of their creed and their attempted defense of their constitution, have revealed their sensitiveness to the widespread criticism which such a disclosure of creedal reversion has aroused. They are now asking for assistance in drafting a constitution which shall be acceptable to the Disciples and not inconsistent with the spirit of the foundation. It ought not to be difficult to draft such a constitution. We should like to see this young institution, which is not without the ability to render valuable service in the training of men and women for certain types of Christian work, rid itself of the taint of sectarianism which it has unhappily and perhaps unintentionally gained. It is too late in the day for any organization claiming relationship with the Disciples to revert to the old and discredited creed basis for its foundation.

FLYING OVER JERUSALEM

THERE are few spots left on earth that are secure from the encroachments of modern invention. Jerusalem has been invaded by the flying machine. The daring aviators set forth from Constantinople, and were wrecked near Smyrna, but procured a new machine which they shipped to Beirut, by steamer. From Beirut they ascended in their new monoplane, flying southward along the coast and then east to Jerusalem where they were hailed with great demonstrations. Jerusalem has witnessed many miracles, but few so startling as this. He who wishes to see Jerusalem with some vestages of its antiquity remaining would better go there soon, for the day of modern modernity has arrived by rail and aeroplane.

LIQUOR ADVERTISING

A FEW weeks ago the announcement was made by the Chicago Record-Herald that it would henceforth refuse all liquor advertising. The announcement was received with great satisfaction by a host of readers, and on the strength of that promise a very considerable body of subscribers was added to its list. It seemed a timely and wise step to take. The country is ready for it. In a short time the leading daily papers all over America will adopt the same policy, and the Record-Herald appeared to have undertaken the courageous task of pioneering in a field where there would surely be a rapidly growing following. Since that time, however, the paper has come under a new management, and its name has been changed to the Chicago Herald. Features of interest have been added to the paper. But it is a disappointment to see the Herald returning to the old alliance with the liquor power in its acceptance of advertisements of this objectionable character. It is the more to be regretted since the step toward a clean and progressive policy with regard to liquor advertising had already been taken. We hope that the patrons of the paper will join in a vigorous protest against a return to the whisky alliance. We do not believe a high grade journal like the Herald has to depend upon liquor advertising, though we are not unaware of the very strong pressure that the liquor trade is able to bring in behalf of its interests. But we do not like to see a newspaper going back on a bold and welcome act of independence once taken.

FRATERNITY INTERESTS

THERE is a very definite increase in fraternity interest of a higher type in college and university circles at the present time. The Greek letter fraternities have long had a place in the leading schools. Sometimes their influence has been admirable and sometimes indifferent or disastrous. Generally speaking the personnel of the students making up a particular chapter has been the determining influence in its moral character. Some fraternities have made earnest attempts to improve the tone of chapter life and with excellent results. Fraternity alumni have also used their endeavors with the same good results. It is encouraging, however, that a more general effort is now put forth by inter-fraternity co-operation. It is felt that the fraternity idea is capable of much greater value in educational institutions than has yet been realized from it. So definite has this feeling become that by mutual consent among fraternity leaders, the churches are being asked to co-operate in college and university centers, and Sunday, September 6, has been designated as "Fraternity Day" in which the effort is to be made by ministers and Christian leaders to impress college men with the interest the church actually has in student life, and particularly in those groups of students living in fraternity houses, and open to such Christian influences as Bible class instruction and many forms of social and Christian effort. The idea of such a fraternity Sunday is admirable, but of course must be left to the local ministry to use it as occasion may suggest. But those ministers who are really interested in college life and who know how strong are the bonds in which fraternity men are held will not fail to take advantage of this opportunity for direct approach to the chapter life in their cities.

THE VALUE OF A GOOD NAME

HOW few young people realize the power which lies in them to stain their family name. The reckless deed of the young man or woman causes a whole family to hang its head in shame. I once knew a family with an unusual name, one degenerate member of which committed an atrocious murder. So full were the papers of the details of this horrible crime, trial and execution, so inevitably did it brand every man who bore that name with something of his own disgrace that the whole family appeared in court and by legal proceedings renounced the name and chose a new one. Up to that hour that name had been dear to them. It was the name of their ancestors, but they cut the tap roots of their family life, they renounced their fathers and their fathers' fathers in an effort to defend themselves against the shame that came upon them by reason of one man's sin. That man murdered not merely the one present name in the indictment, he murdered a whole family, he blotted out all of the records of future generations, the inheritance of a household transmitted through the name.

MR. ROOSEVELT AND THE OUTLOOK

THE news that Mr. Roosevelt has severed his connection with the Outlook is matter of more than passing interest, and is not without significance as to his program of future activities. It will be remembered that Mr. Roosevelt assumed the position of corresponding editor almost immediately after his retirement from the White House, and even during the strenuous days of the campaign four years later, he did not give over his activities on the journal. Now, however, he writes that the call of public service and the realization of the aims of the Progressive Party demand a larger measure of his time than is consistent with an editorial position. Politicians of all groups must regard this utterance as a note of battle. Mr. Roosevelt is a man of such resourcefulness and vigor that he has seemed competent to carry many burdens at the same time. This release from connection with a newspaper which afforded him a unique opportunity for public appeal must imply that he proposes an even more aggressive championship of his political ideals than in the past.

Mr. Roosevelt is a man for whose personality and convictions the public has the greatest respect. One may approve or disapprove of his political opinions, but no one is in doubt that he is to be taken seriously in whatever he attempts. It is impossible to regard him with indifference. And even when in his versatile adventures into regions quite remote from statesmanship he has spoken with the air of finality on a variety of subjects astonishing to the ordinary mind, there was not lacking the tone of sincerity and painstaking investigation which went far to guarantee of his utterances. Few men of this or any other generation have dipped into as many questions and written as widely and as well as Mr. Roosevelt. He is a citizen of whom America may justly be proud. And whatever may be his political future, his actions will be watched with the keenest interest by people of all shades of opinion.

JUDGES AND JURIES

THE laws require that the twelve men in the jury shall come to a unanimous verdict before condemning any man. But the supreme court can nullify a law by a vote of four to three. Would it not be well if the courts were bound to some approach to unanimity of action such as is imposed upon juries? If it is better for nine guilty men to escape than one innocent man to be punished, is it not better that a law should stand which the pople have enacted through their law making bodies rather than that courts balancing their judgment on a knifeblade edge should tip the legislation into the scrap heap by the doubtful decision of the middle man on the bench? The Supreme Court exercises its large powers, larger than the framers of our system of government ever intended, through our desire that there should be some check on hasty legislation. But what check have we on hasty court decisions that become law?

ULSTER AND IRELAND

THE situation in Ireland continues to be tense, and perhaps increases in seriousness, notwithstanding the passing of the Home Rule bill and its all but complete enactment as English law. It was natural that the world should take for granted the practically unanimous wish of Ireland for self-government since that has been the plea of its people for half a century. In Mr. Gladstone's day it was the burning question, a question which finally wrecked the Liberal party which undertook to be its champion. Upon the return of that party to power under Mr. Asquith eight years ago, the program of home rule was again taken up, and steadily it has been pressed under the constant spur of the small body of Irish Nationalists who have virtually held the balance of power in the Liberal party. Now that it has become a realization, it is astonishing to find that one entire section of Ireland, constituting at least a fourth of the population, will have none of it. The northern counties, that pass under the name of Ulster, are protesting to the point of armed rebellion against the provisions of the Home Rule Bill. It is difficult to determine the merits of this controversy. It is not wholly religious, for though Ulster is predominantly Protestant, and the rest of Ireland has a strong Catholic majority, yet a very large section of the Protestants of Ireland are enthusiastic Home Rulers, while the Liberal party in England which has promoted the law is almost completely Protestant. It is rather a sectional difference, and there is reason to fear that the cause of Ulster's defiant attitude is its unwillingness to join with the remainder of Ireland in a common program of any sort. The Liberal leaders have shown a strong desire to conciliate the Ulster belligerents, and it is hoped by all that peace and not war may be the outcome. But certainly the great majority of the Irish people are quite right in insisting that they be permitted to enjoy that self-government for which they have pleaded and striven for generations.

IS CRIME INCREASING?

JUDGE Gemmill, of the Municipal Court of Chicago, emphatically denies that crime is increasing. He said that the reason more people are arrested now than formerly is that very often offenses now are counted crimes which a few years ago had no recognition as such.

More than half of all the people arrested in Chicago in 1912 were charged with crimes which did not exist as crimes a few years ago. In other words, they were arrested for breaking laws which were not on the statute books until recently.

To be specific: Of the 16,000 people of all ages and sexes actually tried in the Municipal court of Chicago in 1912 who were charged with misdemeanors 8,600 were accused of violating laws which did not exist fifteen years ago.

Furthermore, an increasing number of arrests may be the best possible sign of improving conditions.

"It will be frequently found," says Judge Gemmill, "that the communities where law and order reign, and where justice and righteousness most prevail, will have the most criminals not because the people are most depraved but because they have higher ideals and insist upon higher standards of living.

The passage of the pure food law made 50,000 criminals of persons who before that time had been looked upon as good citizens; the law forbidding the employment of women for more than ten hours a day instantly made criminals of thousands of employers; they had not changed, but the public conscience has changed.

"During the last year I tried hundreds of cases against men and women who were arrested charged with violating the laws against child labor. Most of these offenders had yielded to the urgent entreaties of mothers to employ their boys and thus give them an opportunity to earn a little with which to buy clothes and books and other things desired in needy homes. Under the law as it now stands these employers were criminals. Thirty years ago they would have been hailed as benefactors. No one, however, will say that child labor laws have not been a distinct step in advance."

More laws have been put on the statute books, as Judge Gemmill points out, within the last twenty-five years than during all the previous history of the republic. And there has been a great change in the character of these laws.

In the old days almost all the criminal laws were negative. "Thou shalt not" was the way they all began. They forbade a man to do certain things and punished him if he did them.

The new laws are positive. "Thou shalt" is the present command. Under the law railroad companies must equip their trains with safety appliances; children, within certain ages, must be sent to school; manufacturers must provide sanitary working quarters for their people; they must equip their dangerous machinery with protective appliances; there are scores of other laws of the same kind.

Epworth League Convenes at Buffalo.

The Epworth League seems to have lost none of its oldtime enthusiasm. The reports of the convention of the Methodist young people which was held at Buffalo early this month sound like the reports that used to go up from the Christian Endeavor hosts, assembled at one of the great gatherings in the early days of that movement. Among the notables present at the League convention were Bishop Quayle; Dr. H. M. Du Bose, of Atlanta; Ex-Governor Hanly, of Indiana; Dr. Paul B. Linn; Hon. Henry J. Allen, of Wichita, Kan.; Bishop W. F. McDowell; Rev. W. F. Sheridan; Editor Dan B. Brummitt; Dr. Thomas Nicholson, of the Board of Education; Wm. H. Anderson, of the Anti-Saloon League, etc., etc. Henry J. Allen, who has made himself famous by his lay evangelistic work, in Kansas, made a deep impression upon the convention. We quote from one of his addresses: "A great student of the human heart said that money was the root of all evil, and when he said it he was not looking at money but at the human heart. We live in a day when we hear of social service and the uplift and child welfare and the awakening of the national conscience—and what is it? The spirit of Jesus Christ. It's the approach of his program. Take Jesus Christ into actual partnership for one year and see what it will mean to your lives and the lives touching yours. I'll make this proposition: If any individual here this morning will give ten per cent of all he makes next year to Jesus Christ and is not satisfied when the year is up, let him send me an itemized statement to Wichita. I'll make it good."

Fifteen Thousand in Parade.

"Buffalo's greatest Protestant Demonstration" was the parade on July 4, which seems to have somewhat exceeded in numbers, if not in impressiveness, the demonstration of the Sunday-school forces in Chicago, during the preceding week. It is reported that 15,000 League members marched through Buffalo's streets on the hot afternoon of the Fourth. A most touching incident is reported by the Epworth Herald: "Before the procession left McKinley Circle there occurred an incident of which the significance was probably not seen by everyone. Gathered there in the shadow of that marble shaft which has been raised to the memory of the martyred President, these young Methodists, proud to belong to the denomination that gave him to the nation, lifted their voices in the strains of 'Nearer, My God, to Thee.' And as the last whisper died away, while yet the crowd was still, before the crash of the drums awoke them to life and to the long march ahead, it seemed as though a benediction settled on that place."

Prohibition Resolutions Approved.

The following resolutions, passed enthusiastically by the convention, show where the Epworth League stands on the drink question: "Whereas, the national prohibition resolutions now pending in both Houses of Congress measure the most significant and important stage in the fight for a stainless flag.—Be It Resolved, That the Ninth International Convention of Epworth Leagues declare it to be the conviction of the more than twenty thousand organizations representing a million Methodist young people that the most urgent matter now before the nation is the national prohibition amendment at present pending.—Be It Resolved, That we urge upon our representatives and senators that they support and pass these resolutions at as early a date as possible." Of course, the resolutions were adopted.

Editor Dan Brummitt, looking back over the great meeting of the young people makes the following comment on the significance of the convention: "One thing stands out above all others in looking backward at Buffalo. The Epworth League is entrenched in the hearts of its members, and in the thought of the Church's leaders. It never had a more definite, more workable or more spiritually and practically acceptable platform than that on which it stands today. It may need to adjust itself to changed conditions in other departments of Christian activity, and always it must adapt its activities to its own changing forms of expression. But the Epworth League, as an institution, is, in theory and practice, as truly necessary as any other department of the church."

Rev. A. Z. Conrad, of Park Congregational Church, Boston, who is promoting a "Win-One" campaign.

Chicago Gets Christian Endeavor Meet.

The decision of the executive committee of the Illinois Christian Endeavor Union to hold the state convention in Chicago next year in conjunction with the international and world's Christian Endeavor conventions, will be followed by similar decision by other state organizations, according to Christian Endeavor leaders. The four-day convention of the Illinois organization which closed last week at Peoria, is said to have been the largest convention ever held by the Illinois organization. One hundred and fifty delegates attended from Chicago. Plans for a law enforcement campaign in Chicago have been formulated by local leaders in harmony with the resolutions adopted by the convention, which provides for a statewide campaign.

Chicago Has Vacation Schools.

Play, study and work are combined at the vacation Bible schools whose sessions have opened in numerous Chicago churches. No books are used. Basket weaving is taught as is also biblical geography by means of maps drawn in the sand. An outing is given the children once a week for the purpose of nature study. Among the churches in which schools are operated are the following: Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church, Aiken Institute (Baptist); Lincoln Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Moody Church, Olivet Institute (Presbyterian), Moody Church and Halsted Street Institutional Church, Halsted and Nineteenth streets.

Professor Urges Sunday-school Reforms.

Instead of dwelling on abstract questions in the "Temperance Lights," "Mission Pointers," and "Why We Shouldn't Smoke" columns of Sunday-school weeklies, Prof. Theodore G. Soares of the University of Chicago recommends that the Sunday-schools implant civic ideals in the minds of the community by cutting the long grass of the church lawns, washing the windows, and cleaning out rubbish in the alleys back of the church buildings. These suggestions were made at the Sunday-school Institute held at the University of Chicago a few days ago. His topic was "Civic Ideals and the Sunday-school Curriculum." "Bigotry and intolerance should be driven out of the children's classes in the Sunday-schools," said Professor Soares, "if we are to educate the children according to the best ideals. The best way to do this would be to lay stress on the actions of really great figures, such as Florence Nightingale, Jacob Riis, President Lincoln, and not spend our time telling the children what not to do. The examples of great characters would be enough to set a standard of correct living for them." Professor Soares urged his audience to begin the celebration of great national festival days in the churches, to stimulate the instinct of patriotism to something higher than the thought of battle and bloodshed. He advised the commemoration of the birthdays of Lincoln and Washington by pageants in which all the Sunday-school children take part on an occasion set apart for them. He said that the emphasis in the celebrations should be placed not on the military deeds of historic heroes but on their work for peace.

A Valuable Sociological Study.

The American Sociological Society reports the publication of Volume VIII of its records, entitled, "Problems of Social Assimilation." The table of contents includes the following essays: "A Vision of Social Efficiency," Albion W. Small. "The Neighborhood in Social Reconstruction," Robert A. Woods. "The Assimilation of the American Indian," Fayette Avery McKenzie. "The Rising National Individualism," Herbert Adolphus Miller. "Racial Assimilation in Secondary Groups," Robert E. Park. "The Prussian-Polish Situation: An Experiment in Assimilation." William I. Thomas. "An Outline of Social Study for Elementary Schools,'' John M. Gillette. ''Social Assimilation: America and China,'' Charles R. Henderson. ''Assimilation in the Philippines, As Interpreted in Terms of Assimilation in America,'' Albert E. Jenks. ''Financial Statement of American Sociological Society.'' ''Constitution of the American Sociological Society.'' ''Membership List of the American Sociological Society for 1914.''

Episcopalians Against Saloons.

At the council of the Protestant Episcopal church in Arkansas, held at Fort Smith, the church placed itself on record as being fully and heartily in favor of and in sympathy with the present movements to restrict and suppress the liquor traffic. This is the first time such a thing has happened in the history of the church. Dr. W. A. Walton sounded a note which gave courage and inspiration to the convention to express the sentiment embraced in the following resolutions: ''The Diocese of Arkansas, in council assembled, desires to put itself upon record as being in hearty approval and sympathy with the current movement to restrict and suppress the sale of intoxicants, and also that we are ready to do all in our power to make effective the recent legislation on this subject by the state and nation.''

Epworth League for United Methodism.

The sentiment of the International Convention of the Epworth League, held at Buffalo, was all for the union of the two Methodisms of the United States. ''These young folks,'' says one of the Methodist weeklies, ''know nothing of the administrative difficulties, to say nothing of the less tangible, but more potent, hindrances to union. They are willing to leave all such details to experts. But they do believe and say that no impossibility ought to stand between the Methodisms which once were one, and keep them always apart. They have no arguments; they have only a conviction and a confidence that Methodism ought not to be content longer with a divided communion.''

University in Religious Education Move.

A new department for Religious Education intended especially to train foreign missionaries and Sunday-school workers, is to be opened at Brown University at Providence, R. I., next September. An effort will also he made through the department to give a more distinctive religious tone to student and faculty life, and to bring out the religious value of such subjects as Social and Political Science, Philosophy, History and Economics. Courses in these subjects are announced as part of the curriculum of the new department. The requirement of daily chapel attendance will hereafter be strictly enforced. The requirement has been waived hitherto in case of Catholic and Jewish students, of whom there are many at Brown. The result has not been satisfactory, however, and as the service, though usually conducted by a Baptist or other Protestant clergymen, is undenominational, the attendance of all students will hereafter be required. The new policy will apply to the Woman's College as well as to the men. As a result of Pres. W. H. P. Faunce's urgent appeal during the past year for student vounteers for China, Mr. G. S. Goodspeed of the class of 1914 will enter upon some form of Christian service in China next October. Mr. Goodspeed, who will also represent the Standard Oil Company in a business capacity, was prominent in Y. M. C. A. and Sunday-school work while at Brown.

Salvation Army Leader Gets Degree.

DePauw University, Methodist Institution at Greencastle, Ind., honored itself by giving the degree of doctor of divinity to Colonel S. L. Brengle of the Salvation Army. Dr. Brengle is a true doctor in divinity, preaching and practicing the healing of souls with much success.

Prepares ''Movies'' for Churches.

Dr. Charles Stelzle, formerly at the head of the Social Service Department of the Presbyterian Church, but now en-engaged as a general Christian social efficiency engineer, has organized a moving picture company to produce films for church use. It is announced that beginning October 1 this company will supply four hundred churches in four hundred cities of the United States with a high-class weekly five-film motion picture entertainment. The company has at the present time a photographer in Palestine taking pictures, another man is searching Europe for the best educational films, while a third is collecting from all over America photo plays suitable for church use. The plan is to have sixty centers with a moving picture operator for each center. This operator will give an exhibition in one church in a city each night in the week. The cost to the church of the entertainment will be $20 per night.

SOCIAL SERVICE AT EPWORTH LEAGUE CONVENTION.

Some Statements from Harry F. Ward, Secretary of the Methodist Federation for Social Service.

There are two great industrial wrongs —overwork and underpay.

A large part of the industrial army goes into battle unequipped. To subject the ill-nourished, untrained individual to the highly developed operations of the factory is to impose a double strain.

God did'nt make the human frame to work indoors, but we compel people to crowd within brick walls and keep pace with swift and unwearying machinery. The last attachment to a high-geared machine is a boy or a girl, and when that attachment gets loose you are likely to find it in the dance hall or the saloon or the brothel.

Men used to start war by carrying fire from clan to clan. Today we must start the war on industrial wrongs by carrying facts from church group to church group.

It is time to raise up young people who are forever done with mere party interests and party favor.

You can count on the fingers of one hand the states that forbid night work for girls.

Night work and the long day and the seven-day week exist to serve your convenience. An aroused local sentiment can stop them.

We must shift our religious emphasis. We are not to seek a more abundant life to come, but a more abundant life today. We are to change conditions and to change the individual's life, so that these will work together to make the new earth.

When the great call for volunteers was made in the early part of the Civil War, the North responded, "We are coming, Father Abraham!" The new call to our Methodist youth must have an answer of equal fervor: "We are coming, Lord Jesus, ten hundred thousand strong!"

A common cause welds us together. This is a crusade, not to capture the tomb of Jesus, but to show the toil-burdened the heart of the living Christ, and to put his mastery in the seat of power from which Mammon must be driven.

Death of Dr. W. B. Palmore.

The death is reported of Dr. W. B. Palmore, editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate. Dr. Palmore is well known as soldier, editor, lecturer and churchman of the Methodist brotherhood. The following biographical sketch, from ''Who's Who'' tells an interesting story: ''Palmore.—William Beverly, clergyman; born in Fayette County, Tenn., February 24, 1844; son of William Pledge and Elizabeth Ann (Hobson) Palmore; educated in private schools and Vanderbilt University; received degree of D. D. from Central College, Fayette, Mo.; served under Gen. John S. Marmaduke, C. S. A., and surrendered his division flag at close of Civil War; ordained to M. E. Church, South, ministry and began preaching in Kansas City, Mo., in 1877; entered editorial work in St. Louis in 1890; editor and publisher St. Louis Christian Advocate. Has lectured and preached in nearly every country of the world since 1880; assisted in establishing College Palmore in Mexico and Palmore Institute in Japan. Member Second Ecumenical Methodist Conference, Washington, in 1891; Third, London, 1901, and four General Conferences of the Church. Founder of the Order of New Century Knights (boys). President Board of Curators of Central College for Women; ex-Chaplain Missouri Senate and Missouri State Penitentiary; chosen Prohibition nominee for Vice-President of the United States in 1908, but declined. Prohibitionist.''

South American Sunday-school Tour.

South America is ready for a Sunday-school advance. With the recent great increase in the number of young people in the Christian and other institutions of learning in South America there is a call for training through the Bible that shall head these educated young people toward Christianity. The Sunday-school is greatly needed in this program, and missionaries agree as to its important position in the scheme of religious education. The World's Sunday-school Association is planning to put a man in South America in the near future to develop this increasing interest and to meet the great need. The American General Secretary, Mr. Frank L. Brown, is forming a party of Sunday-school workers to make a tour of various ports of South America on the ''Lapland,'' to hold meetings and conferences with missionaries and native workers in the Sunday-school. The ''Lapland'' will sail from New York about January 15, 1915. All persons interested are requested to communicate with Mr. Brown at 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City.

Of Human Interest

Lincoln and Sickles.

Although the late Gen. Daniel Sickles was politically opposed to President Lincoln, and although he was not a soldier by experience or profession, yet Mr. Lincoln never failed to confer command on him when a proper opportunity offered, notes the Youth's Companion. The promotion of Sickles often excited the surprise of the President's friends.

"The real cause," recently said Representative Farr, of Pennsylvania, whose father was intimate with President Lincoln, "was the President's deep sense of gratitude. He never forgot a favor; more, he never seemed to feel that he had sufficiently repaid one, even though it were a matter of simple courtesy.

"At the time of Lincoln's election to the presidency, there were in the House of Representatives a few Republicans who were still nursing their disappointment that the obscure western politician had won the nomination over the much more distinguished Senator Seward. After Congress convened that winter, Mr. Lincoln came to Washington and having occasion to come on the floor of the House one day,—a privilege he enjoyed as a former member,—he walked in without any previous notice to the members.

"His presence was not particularly noticed by anyone, for the members were engrossed in their own affairs. But Mr. Sickles, who was a member from New York, saw him, and spoke to his friend and fellow Democrat, 'Sunset' Cox.

"'I think,' he whispered, 'that Lincoln feels hurt because none of the Republicans have called attention to the President elect's presence on the floor. He's a modest man, oversensitive, indeed, and just now he's miserable over what he fears is an intentional slight. Of course you know, and I know, that it isn't, but Lincoln doesn't know it, and it's one of those things that you can't explain away. Go over to one of your Republican friends, and tell him before it's too late. They'll understand it, coming from you.'

"'Sunset' Cox, who was a privileged character, and as intimate with the Republican members as with the Democrats, hastened over to one of the Republican leaders. A moment later, with Mr. Cox beside him, the Republican, eager to repair the neglect, rose and called the attention of the speaker to the presence of the President elect. At once the whole House rose to receive him.

"'It's all right, Cox,' whispered Sickles, with gratification. 'I can tell from Lincoln's face.'

"Sometime after, Mr. Lincoln took occasion to thank Cox for standing up with the Republican leader on that day to represent the Democrats.

"'Bless your soul, that was Sickles' doing! replied Cox, and he told Mr. Lincoln the whole story—a story he never forgot."

Queen of England on a Ladder.

As I sat on a summer balcony in Venice, writes a contributor to the Youth's Companion, I heard from a charming Dutchwoman this pleasant story about Queen Mary of England. The husband of the Dutch lady was the founder of one of the largest lace houses in Venice, and she had always taken an active part in the business.

"O course," she said, with Dutch common sense, "no one can say that lace is one of the necessities of life, so they who sell it must seek the places affected by the wealthy. We have a branch establishment at St. Moritz every summer. One year I was there with laces that cost us 200,000 francs, and I had with me a young woman to help me with the sale. The insurance company refused to insure us because they had lost so much through fires in that country. The wooden chalets burn like tinder, and the water supply is always inadequate.

"My chalet was often visited by very great ladies. The sister of the Emperor of Germany bought little, but she loved to look at the beautiful laces. The Princess Lætitia of Savoy was another habitué, but the most friendly were the Duchess of Teck and her tall daughter, the Princess Mary, then the Duchess of York.

"One morning I heard a great commotion in the street, and I stepped out to see what was wrong. A chalet was on fire not far away. A turn of the wind, and we should be caught. More than the flames even, I dreaded the thieves who take advantage of such scenes of confusion. I stepped back into my chalet and locked the door, that we might be undisturbed. I pulled out packing cases and trunks, and I and my assistant were beginning to pack up the laces and embroideries when the Duchesses of Teck and York came by.

"'Oh, let us help you!' they insisted. 'It would be dreadful for those lovely things to be injured or lost.'

"They worked like Turks. The Duchess Mary was so tall that she could reach everything, and as she handed the laces to me I packed them carefully in the cases. The gentleman in waiting went back and forth, and kept us posted as to the progress of the fire. The Duchess Mary even went up on a ladder and fetched down the mirrors. I have never had better or more energetic assistance, and it was all done with such simplicity, good sense, and good fellowship. Fortunately, although five chalets were burned, the wind did not bring the fire our way."

ABOUT PREACHERS AND OTHERS.

The story is told of a certain man who did not approve of foreign missions. One Sabbath, at church, when the collection was being taken up for these missions, the collector approached and held out the collection box. The man shook his head.

"I never give to missions," he whispered.

"Then take something out of the bag, sir," whispered the collector, "the money is for the heathen."

A Scotch minister had been away on a vacation, and on his return asked the sexton how all had gone in his absence. "Very well, indeed," was the cheering response. "They do say that most meenisters leave some one worse than themselves to fill the pulpit when they go away, but you never do that, sir."

A soldier is allowed to "change his religion," as it is termed, if he can convince his commanding officer that he had good reasons. On one occasion a man intimated his desire.

"Now," said the colonel, "what are your reasons? Have you conscientious convictions in regard to the matter?"

The man intimated that he had.

"And," continued the colonel, "to what denomination do you wish to be transferred?"

Said the ease-seeking Tommy, "I disremember the name, sir, but it's them as parades for church half an hour later than the others."—Quiver.

He was enraptured with the scenery. His fair companion at the country resort sat upon the stone wall beside him.

"Behold that exquisite sunset!" he exclaimed. "Note the delicate flesh tints, the cream shades, the long dashes of vermilion and the almost living fire that leaps up from the sinking sun as from a fountain. Behold the framework of darkening skies and of deep green. Isn't it wonderful?"

His fair companion sighed heavily.

"You just bet it is!" she exclaimed. "It looks just like a great big lobster salad."—Lippincott's.

Julia Ward Howe to Sumner.

In Mr. H. J. Warner's "New Letters of an Idle Man" appears the following brief anecdote concerning Julia Ward Howe:

She had invited Charles Sumner to a party to meet Edwin Booth, the actor. Sumner was disinclined to come. "The truth is," he said, "I have got beyond taking an interest in individuals."

Mrs. Howe made no reply at the time, but in her diary that night she wrote, "Charles Sumner has got beyond taking an interest in individuals. God Almighty has not got so far."

Getting Round a Proposition.

Here is one that was told at a recent dinner by Senator Thornton of Louisiana, in demonstrating that there is always more than one way of getting around a difficult proposition.

One afternoon Hans and Fritz were rambling along the street when they came abreast of a laundry. Instantly Fritz stopped and began to study the characters on a sign that announced Sing Lee's excuse for being in America.

"Vot makes you stob here, Fritz?" asked Hans, wonderingly. "Vot vas you looking adt?"

"I vas looking adt dot sign, Hans," was the smiling rejoinder of Fritz. "Can you readt him?"

"No, I can't readt him," answered Hans, glancing at the sign, "but if I hadt my horn here I could blay him."

Another Gladstone Story.

Mr. Gladstone once said that he had solved the domestic problem in this way: "Whenever Mrs. Gladstone insists, I submit; and whenever I insist, she submits." He didn't say, however, whether they took turns about insisting and submitting. The Boston Transcript remarks that marriage is a failure when one of the parties insists on being the insister, and doesn't take turns in submitting to be the submitter.

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

Conference of Mission Boards Working in Mexico

In response to a call from the Missionary Boards, carrying on work in Mexico, a conference was held in Cincinnati, June 30—July 1, in the chapel of the Methodist Book Concern Building. This was the first conference ever held on Mexico by the missionary forces in the United States, and the fact that all eyes are now turned upon that distracted country made it indeed a notable gathering.

Our sixty representatives were present, from the northern and southern Presbyterians, the Methodist Episcopal and southern Methodist churches, the Congregationalists, the northern Baptists, the Protestant Episcopal Church, the Friends, and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions of the Disciples of Christ. About twenty-five of those in attendance were missionaries from Mexico.

The conference was deeply indebted to Dr. Robert E. Speer, of the Presbyterian Board, and Bishop W. F. Oldham, of the Methodist Episcopal Board, who suggested the plan of work on which the meeting was conducted. Other well-known leaders in missionary work who were present were Bishop W. R. Lambuth, who was made chairman of the conference, Bishop McConnell of the Methodist Church, Dr. John Howland of the Congregational Board, Dr. W. W. Wallace of the Presbyterians, and others, too numerous to mention. Of the chief women, working in and for Mexico, there were not a few present. Miss Belle H. Bennett, president of the Women's Council of the Methodist Church south, Miss Mabel Head, the secretary, Miss Gibson, president of the Scarritt Bible Training School, Mrs. F. T. Miller, of the Baptist Women's Board, Miss Roberts, and Miss Case, each of whom has worked in Mexico for more than a quarter of a century, and other splendid women were in attendance. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions is the only agency in our church doing work in the republic, and it had a delegation of nine to represent it. By request, President McLean, and Secretary Stephen Corey of the Foreign Society were members of it, as well as three women from our National Executive Committee, three men from the Faculty of the College of Missions, and Miss Elma Irelan, who made the fatiguing journey from Piedras Negras, in order to give us the benefit of her long experience as a missionary in Mexico.

ROBERT E. SPEER.

After the meeting was organized, Robert E. Speer distributed some helpful literature to members of the conference, and gave an illuminating statement of the plans and aims of those who called it. He said that the only hope for Mexico was Christian education—that the whole history of the country showed that political rule could not work out its redemption from the present deplorable conditions. The duty of doing this character-forming work was largely laid upon the Christian churches of the United States—because of our near neighborhood to Mexico, and because of work already begun there. The necessary withdrawal of American Missionaries, and the partial suspension of missionary enterprises on account of the revolution, gave us the opportunity of making a new start when our workers were able to return to the field. He urged that when we do, we rectify the mistakes of former administrations; these mistakes were largely a lack of co-operation between the various boards, and a consequent overlapping, both of territory and work; one of the results of this was, that only fifteen out of the thirty states of Mexico were being effectively occupied, and fully five millions, of the fifteen millions of the people there, were not reached by missionary agencies. The greatest need, therefore, was adequate occupation of the field, and that could only be accomplished by united effort. In order to effect this, he urged that we consider all missionary enterprises in Mexico as being done under the auspices of one great church there, and recommended the formation of committees, on the territorial distribution of the field among the boards working in the country, on co-operation in literature and in a number of specified lines of education, and a general committee to take up any problems not included under these heads. All boards represented in the Conference were given membership on these committees.

THE DIVISION OF TERRITORY.

Fully one half of the two days' session was devoted to the deliberations of these important bodies. Possibly the committee on Distribution of Territory had the most difficult task; it held four different meetings, and every phase of the subject was carefully and prayerfully studied; had not a beautiful spirit of Christian courtesy and generous concession prevailed, no decision could have been reached; finally it was able to recommend to the conference that the region south of Mexico City should be assigned to the Presbyterians, most of the states in Central Mexico to the two Methodist boards, the northern states and most of the section on the west coast to the Congregationalists, the Baptists, the Friends, and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions—the Federal District and the city of Mexico being open to all who desired to enter. When this report was adopted by the conference, the whole body arose and sang the doxology.

The assignment to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions was entirely satisfactory to its representatives; it was given its present field of operation with sufficient neighboring territory for enlargement—with some probable future adjustments to be made with adjacent workers.

One of the items in the report of the General Committee was, that the various missionary agencies in Mexico should call themselves "The Evangelical Church of Mexico" with the name of the special board or church in brackets underneath. President A. McLean made an earnest plea that it should be called, "The Church of Christ in Mexico," and many agreed with him; but after much discussion, the report of the committee was finally adopted.

Of course, the conference only served in an advisory capacity and its recommendations will be referred back to the various boards for their action—but the decisions of such a gathering as that are bound to carry great weight with them. After all, in this liberty-loving age, it is the voice of bodies that claim no authority, but that of experience and devotion to the interests of the kingdom of heaven, that wield the greatest influence; the World's Missionary Conference at Edinburgh assumed no legislative or ecclesiastical authority, and yet, how profound and far-reaching has been its effect on the thought and action of the Christian world! May the number of all such assemblies increase and may they promote the unity of the Church of Christ and the extension of his reign over the whole earth!

CHAMP CLARK ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

That woman suffrage is as inevitable as the rising of tomorrow's sun, that it will prevail in all the states within a few years, and that he believed in it and would vote for it, was the threefold message which Speaker Champ Clark of the U. S. House of Representatives gave to the officers of the National Suffrage Association when they, with representatives of thirty-eight states, carried 300 petitions to him and asked for his support in passing the national amendment.

Speaker Clark is reported as saying, in part:

"There are two methods of amending the Constitution. You can begin here or you can begin in the states. Whenever three-fourths of the states recommend an amendment to the Constitution, then it goes. Woman suffrage is as inevitable as the rising of tomorrow's sun. I have always believed that.

"But the only question for you folks to consider is how you can most expeditiously get what you want, because I think you are going to get it. My own judgment is that you can get it quicker through the states than through Congress. At the rate you are going now, it looks to me as if you might get it in three, four, or five years.

"In some places there is a great prejudice against woman suffrage. You want to remember one thing, that if you lose the fight you are out for years. Whenever the subject comes up for a vote in Missouri I am going to vote for woman suffrage.

"This is not because all women are fitted to vote; I would not like to say that all men are fitted to vote. If you ever do vote, and I think it is certainly coming, I hope you will vote for the best principles and the best men."

The opinion of Champ Clark is of interest and value to us, not only because he is speaker of the House of Representatives, but also, because he is an honored and beloved member of the Church of the Disciples of Christ. Since he made the speech quoted above, Missouri has wheeled into the ranks of campaign states, so he will have the privilege of expressing his convictions at the polls this fall—may all the good men of his state follow his example at the election next November! A recent dispatch says: News has come this week from Missouri that the requisite 23,000 signatures to the woman suffrage initiative petitions have been secured. These petitions are to be filed with the Secretary of State before July 1, and this means that Missouri is a campaign state, and that the vote on whether the women of Missouri shall have equal suffrage with the men will be taken in November, 1914.

Disciples Table Talk

Nebraska's State Convention.

Nebraska's Disciples are planning their convention for July 27-August 2, inclusive, at Bethany Park, Neb. W. A. Baldwin is in charge of the program, which has been planned with a view to making it extremely practical. A young people's conference on missions is provided, with Ray Rice in charge. This will come in the early morning and should be one of the chief attractions. The Bible lecture from nine to ten o'clock will be given by H. O. Pritchard, of Eureka College. Following this will be departmental conferences from ten to eleven under four separate heads as follows: General Church Efficiency, Bible School, C. W. B. M., Y. P. S. C. E. There will be no other program at this hour. From eleven o'clock forward programs of regular form will be given covering every line of church work, Education, Missions, Men's work and Temperance. Mrs. Laura Delaney-Garst will be chief speaker for the Woman's Board. Stories for the children each day in the forenoon will be under the charge of a skilled worker. Swings and other forms of entertainment for them will be provided. Advance orders for tents should be sent to W. A. Baldwin, 426 Bankers Life Bldg., Lincoln.

Christian Men's Union, Dallas, Tex.

About 75 men of the Dallas Christian Churches met at the South Dallas Church recently. Constitution and By-Laws were adopted for an organization of the men to be known as "Christian Men's Union." The purpose of the organization is to promote the missionary interest in the city, to buy lots for new churches, organize churches, strengthen the weaker congregations and organize Sunday-schools. M. M. Davis, pastor of the Ross Avenue Christian Church, delivered an address. The meeting was presided over by Dr. J. L. Holloway. The next meeting will be held in August at the Oak Cliff Christian Church.

T. F. Paris to Capitol Hill, Des Moines.

G. W. Bassett, after only three months with the Capitol Hill Church of Christ, Des Moines, closed his work the last Sunday in June, on account of failing health. He will spend some time visiting his father in Missouri and then seek a milder climate in the South or Southwest. Mr. Bassett has incipient tuberculosis, affecting one lung, and by the advice of physicians must go to a drier climate. Some church in the South or West, Colorado or New Mexico, should call him. He is a very capable man, having been pastor of the great church at Independence, Kansas, before coming to Des Moines. T. F. Paris has taken the work as pastor of the Capitol Hill Church. Mr. Paris has been the general field secretary of Drake University for the past few months, during the campaign to raise the $200,000 needed to free the institution from all indebtedness and clear the way for the "Men and Millions Movement." The Capitol Hill Church is just beginning the erection of a new $50,000 building, which means an added stress upon the resources of both pastor and people. The present building is altogether inadequate to their needs.

E. C. Mobley Remains at Gainesville, Tex.

Ernest C. Mobley, of the Gainesville, Tex., Church, writes that after he had received a unanimous call to First Church, Denton, Texas, the Gainesville Church voted that he should remain. This is Mr. Mobley's sixth year there. The Denton committee offer until January 1 for a decision.

Hiram College Gets Chicago University Man.

B. S. Dean writes that the new chair of education, in Hiram College, has been filled by the election of George T. Colman. Mr. Colman took his A. B. and A. M. at Williams College, Mass., and takes his doctorate from Chicago University. He has taught two years in the government schools of the Philippines and is exceptionally qualified for the work at Hiram to which he has been called. Courses of instruction will be offered which more than meet the requirements of the new Ohio Code or certification of public school teachers without examination.

Texarkana Church Does Itself Honor.

Clifford S. Weaver, pastor at Central Church, Texarkana, (Tex., Ark.), has become the object of a rare piece of generosity at the hands of his congregation. The membership of this church have presented their pastor with sufficient expense money and a furlough for a two months' sojourn in the Holy Land and he is to select the time most propitious. The Christian Century would like to publish stories of other similar gifts. This is an honor not only for Mr. Weaver, but more especially for his congregation.

Wilkinsburg, Pa., Work Makes History.

W. Scott Cook reports that the church at Wilkinsburg, of which he is pastor, has made some history during the last year. A hundred new members have been added in the twelve months. The men's class enrolls over 100, with still larger attendance. The school has increased 30 per cent in average attendance. Mr. Cook will enjoy a well-deserved vacation on his father's farm, at Mingen, O.

Secretary Bert Wilson, of the Foreign Society, who will be one of the lecturers at the Bethany Assembly School of Methods.

Some Hiram Notes.

B. S. Dean, of Hiram, sends the following notes of the work in that school: Miss Anna Applegate has been called as teacher of French. Miss Applegate took her A. B. and A. M. degrees from the University of Illinois and studied in Paris. She has had successful experience as a teacher of French in an American college. ——Most of the new teachers are from families of Disciples and will be a valuable accession to the Christian forces of the college.——The experience of a co-operative book store last year was so successful in reducing the expenses of students that a move is to be made the coming year on a much larger scale. A college commons or co-operative reading club is to be formed to furnish excellent board at cost.——Every year families move to Hiram with older children to enter college and younger ones of public school age. Such persons will be interested to learn that Hiram has a first class high school and the village is now building a $25,000 fire proof school building.—— Last year many near-by pulpits were supplied regularly from Hiram. Still more men properly qualified could have been used.

Ann Arbor Work Flourishes.

G. W. Knepper and the Ann Arbor, Mich., church are doing the largest work among students of all churches in that city. Fifty-six additions since last October, $1,300 given last year for missions, one volunteer won, trained and supported.

For a Michigan Chautauqua.

The Michigan Disciples are still making plans for a general Disciples Chautauqua, somewhere in Michigan. A Commission has been appointed to look after these plans, consisting of M. H. Garrard, Battle Creek; A. H. Martin, Grand Rapids; George R. Stewart, Detroit; Judge Ernest Nichoson, Luther; J. Frank Green, Owosso; George W. Knepper, Ann Arbor; Mrs. A. E. Jennings, Ann Arbor. The Commission is already well advanced in the preliminary plans, and will try to make it possible to have the first meeting of the assembly next summer, 1915. A number of excellent locations are under consideration, where delightful outing grounds may be made. But the Commission is open to receive additional proposals from cities, railways, individuals and others.

Forward Move at Henryetta, Okla.

T. L. Noblitt, pastor at Henryetta, Okla., writes in praise of the work of the Minges evangelistic company in the meeting just closed in Henryetta. Over 250 were enlisted for Christ and on the closing Lord's day, preceded by three days' preparation, a building plan was launched, and more than $1,600 raised, mostly in pledges, toward a $30,000 church edifice, to be thoroughly equipped and modern in every appointment.

Total for Easter Offering.

The National Benevolent Association reports that the Easter offering of the association to date, (July 13) amounts to a little more than $24,000. Since last year's Easter offering, which amounted to more than $25,000, included a special personal gift of $4,000 from a friend who has made no Easter gift this year, it will be seen that the present amount of $24,000 represents a substantial gain to the credit of the schools and churches. For this gain the Association is grateful, but suggests that it is not too late for delinquent churches and schools to have part in this work.

One Morning Service at Norwood, O.

C. R. Stauffer reports the combined service for school and church a success in his field at Norwood, O. On the first Sunday this plan was tried, everybody was delighted. The pastor preached to the largest regular audience that he has ever preached to since being pastor of the church here. More members partook of the communion than at any previous regular service.

Indiana University Bible Chair.

Joseph C. Todd, secretary of the Indiana University Bible Chair, reports that during the last year the time of the secretary has been given to publicity, financing and the local work of university pastor. Attention has been largely given to finding funds to purchase buildings and grounds for the work and keeping up the annual budget of religious conditions at the university.

Mr. Todd, writes: "Here at the university the religious life of the students has never been in a better condition than last year. The agencies at work at the university have worked together. There are five of us giving practically all our time to the religious activity of students. Mr. A. L. Miller, the Y. M. C. A. secretary, Miss Virginia Hinkins, the Y. W. C. A. secretary, Rev. T. R. White, the Presbyterian university pastor, Rev. William Burrows for the Episcopal church, and Joseph C. Todd, university pastor for the Bible Chair, have constituted our forces. These constitute the University Religious Workers Council." The report of the treasurer, Dr. Rodney D. Smith showed that the Bible Chair had met all its expenses during the past year, all bills were paid, and a cash balance remained in the running expense fund of $237. The financial secretary reported that the total response to the Bible Chair appeal up to June 22, 1914, in cash and pledges has been $19,450.12. He also reported a growing constituency of financial friends, that many churches and Sunday-schools were beginning to give the work a place in their offerings, and that over $100,000 had been promised to the work in bequests. He reported also that he had visited 56 counties and spoken in 112 churches in the interest of the Bible Chair, that he had delivered 128 Bible Chair addresses in churches, made 64 other addresses in the field, made 31 convention addresses, and sent out 10,000 copies of the Bible Chair Bulletin.

Special Sermons at Norfolk, Va.

During July, Chas. M. Watson, pastor at Freemason Church, Norfolk, Va., is preaching a special series of sermons. On July 5 the theme was "Social Service," with reference to the work of Jacob Riis. July 12, "Religious Education," Henry Clay Trumbull. July 19, "World Wide Missions," Wilfred T. Grenfell. July 26, "Personal Evangelism," Henry Drummond.

C. Manly Morton in Rich Field.

At Statesville, N. C., there was but one Disciple member in town, though the town boasts a population of ten thousand, until C. Manly Morton preached there for two nights recently. The court house hall was used for the service. As a result six were baptized, two of these a man and wife each nearing the sixtieth year. Arrangements were also made for a meeting to be held early in August. An effort will then be made to organize a church. One of the men baptized is a well-to-do lumberman, and has promised to give the material for a house of worship if the meeting is a success. Another has promised to give liberally of his means for the support of the work.

University Dinner.

The Quarterly dinner of the members of the Disciples Divinity House was held at the Hyde Park Church on Tuesday evening of last week. There were about thirty present, besides the hostesses. A social hour was spent preceding the dinner, and afterward addresses were delivered by Jasper T. Moses, Prof. Earle, of Christian University; Prof. Ivener T. Meyers, of Transylvania; and the officers of the Divinity House. The attendance at the sessions of the Summer Quarter is the largest yet recorded.

At Pentwater.

Pentwater is the point of interest for many of our people at this season of the year. It was never more beautiful than this summer. There are fresh arrivals every day. The demand for cottages at Campbell Park has been unusual. Dr. W. T. Moore has preached at the church the last two Sundays.

The July "Christian Union Quarterly."

The Christian Union Quarterly for July has among other contributions, the following: "The Way to Christian Unity," by D. C. Lathbury; "The Place of Freedom in the Union of Christendom," by H. L. Willett; "Possibility of Protestant Union," by Arthur E. Main; "Christian Union and Some of Its Hindrances," by E. V. Zollars; "The Present Status of the Christian Union Movement," by B. A. Abbott.

Dr. Willett at Meadville Theological Seminary.

Dr Willett delivered the annual lecture on the Ballou Foundation at the Meadville Theological Seminary, in connection with the convocation exercises, and also the convocation addresses to the graduating class.

Pomona Church Has Educational Secretary.

C. R. Hudson and the church at Pomona are rejoicing in the coming of Frank B. Ward, of Des Moines, Iowa, to become the superintendent of Religious Instruction for that congregation. This is the first church in Southern California to employ a specialist in this capacity. The Pomona Church is steadily going forward and Mr. Hudson is held in the highest esteem, both within the church and in the entire community.

Work in Alberta, Canada, Progresses.

The church at Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, has providentially, it seems, been able to secure a new church home, writes J. E. Wilkinson. For some time the work has been at a seeming standstill, because there was no satisfactory place to meet. For some time a morning service in a moving picture house has been the only service possible. Mr. Wilkinson writes of the interesting development here: "A short time ago we learned of some of our neighbors, who were to build, so we secured their building, and moved it on a leased lot. It gives us a very good place when remodeled. It will be ready for the Alberta convention July 10-12. The Dedication services will be held at that time also. Edmonton, a growing city of 75,000, is a great field and should be worked by our people. Practically no one even among the most of the other churches knows any thing of our plea or the restoration movement. The writer is at the present time doing what pastoral work he can, but with the work of breadwinning, he cannot do what should be done. If any one knows of any of our people coming to Alberta, he would confer a mutual favor by letting us know, as it is very easy to lose our people in this great North-west." Mr. Wilkinson's address is, 45 Short St.

Drake Elects New Trustees.

C. C. Dowell of Des Moines and C. G. Saunders of Council Bluffs, both '86, were re-elected members of the Drake University board of trustees at the annual meeting, June 9. In addition two other alumni,

Rev. C. S. Weaver, pastor at Texarkana, whose congregation is giving him a free trip abroad.

Lawrence G. Focht, '94, of Eagle Grove and Oran F. Schee, '98, of Oskaloosa were elected members. Messrs Saunders and Dowell retain their places on the board as the representatives of the alumni. Both men have been members of the board for years.

Oregon Disciples in Convention.

The Disciple churches of Oregon held their twenty-fourth annual convention at Turner, Ore., July 8-16. The convention owns ten acres of beautifully shaded ground there, with a tabernacle seating 2,000 people. There are about 130 churches in the state and about 18,000 members. The convention comprised six separate sessions in the following order: Ministerial, Educational, Christian Endeavor, State Missions, Women's Work and Bible-school. An excellent program was being carried through. Many people annually bring their tents and camp in the inviting shade at Turner.

Dr. Powell is Abroad.

COLLEGE OF MISSIONS PROSPERS.

The Registrar of the College of Missions, at Indianapolis reports the following achievements made during the past year:

1. The college sends out this year the largest class in its history. On June 5 twelve young men and women, having completed required studies, were graduated and set apart for service in four countries as follows: eight to India, one to China, two to the Argentine Republic, and one to Liberia.

2. Since 1910 there have been in attendance fifty-eight regular students, i. e., those definitely preparing for, or already engaged in, mission work in connection with a mission board. Besides these, ninety-eight occasional students have pursued elective courses. The regular students have represented thirty-two different institutions of learning, and four religious communions. Of the graduates twenty-five have received foreign appointments under three boards as follows: thirteen to India, two to China, three to Liberia, two to the Belgian Congo, four to the Argentine Republic, and one to the Philippines. Another has been assigned to Chinese work on the Pacific Coast of the United States. Of missionaries on furlough the enrollment has included nineteen, representing India, Japan, Congo, Mexico, and Porto Rico.

3. The total attendance during 1913-1914 was twenty-seven regular and fifty-five elective students. The outlook for 1914-1915 promises encouraging increase.

4. Our faculty has been enlarged by the appointment of instructors in Chinese and Spanish.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO NOTES.

Professor George Burman Foster, of the Department of Comparative Religion in the University of Chicago, gave the address at the recent memorial exercises in honor of Paul Laurence Dunbar, the famed negro poet. This was the seventh annual memorial and was held in Chicago.

Professor Ira M. Price, of the Department of Semitics in the University of Chicago, was elected a member of the International Lesson Committee for next year at the recent meeting of the International Sunday School Association in Chicago. Professor Price was secretary of the committee during the past year and presented its report to the Association.

Professor Theodore Gerald Soares, Head of the Department of Practical Theology in the University of Chicago, has recently been elected as Lecturer on Biblical Literature in Rockford Colege. This lectureship has previously been filled by President Gulliver of the college. Professor Soares is the editor of an important new series on "Principles and Methods of Religious Education," just announced by the University of Chicago Press. The books, of brief compass, will be definitely practical and will be addressed to immediate and pressing problems of religious education.

The series of lectures now being given at the University of Chicago on the "Aims and Methods of Modern Theological Scholarship," is attracting especial attention. Professor George Burman Foster, of the Department of Comparative Religion, gives the next lecture in the course, on July 24, his subject being, "The Philosophy of Religion." The following lecture, on July 28, is on "The Present Problems of Systematic Theology," and the speaker is Professor Gerald Birney Smith, of the Department of Systematic Theology. Professor Theodore Gerald Soares, Head of the Department of Practical Theology, lectures August 11 on the "Present Problems of Practical Theology," and Professor Charles Richmond Henderson, Head of the Department of Practical Sociology, gives the closing address in his discussion of "Christianity and Social Problems."

The University Preacher at the University of Chicago for July 19 is Professor Charles Richmond Henderson, Head of the Department of Practical Sociology; Dean Shailer Mathews, of the Divinity School, will be the speaker on July 26, and on August 2 Dr. William Byron Forbush, president of the American Institute of Child Life, Philadelphia. Dr. James Hope Moulton, of the University of Manchester, will be the Convocation Preacher on August 23.

GOOD NEWS FROM DISTANT LANDS.

Miss Lavinia Oldham, Tokyo, Japan, reports four baptisms since May first.

The International Sunday-school Convention held at Chicago the last of June passed a resolution as follows: "We declare ourselves as distinctly missionary in vision, purpose, program, and achievement."

Last week a friend in Kansas sent $1,000 to the Foreign Society as a direct gift for its work.

The Commission to the Far East, consisting of Secretary Stephen J. Corey, Prof. W. C. Bower, and R. A. Doan, sailed from Vancouver on the S. S. Empress of Japan July 23, for the Philippine Islands, China, and Japan. They will reach Manila Aug. 6.

Word has been received of the death of Y. Suto, our excellent Japanese brother and pastor at Sendai, Japan. He was baptized at Sendai in 1899 by M. B. Madden. He has been a faithful man and has been a tremendous influence for good. He leaves a wife and two children. He will be sadly missed in the Japan work.

The receipts of the Foreign Society for the first fifteen days of July amount to $27,216, a gain over the corresponding fifteen days of last year of $5,956. The Sunday-schools show a gain of $4,870, and the churches, as churches, $1,075. Please see that your offering is forwarded to the office of the society.

Remember the Foreign Society is sending forth twenty new missionaries this year, the largest number during any one year in the history of the work.

This is the 29th year of the society. Many missionaries have gone to the field in that time. A number sleep in heathen soil. A number have returned broken in health for life. Dr. W. E. Macklin has been in the service longer than any other worker. A great work has been done. Foundation stones have been put in and we are now ready for great things. The order from our Captain is onward, ever onward!

STEPHEN J. COREY,
Secretary.

WITH THE BROTHERHOOD MOVEMENT.

Many new Brotherhood Chapters are being formed regardless of the summer weather which is possessing most of the land.

The most successful Brotherhood Chapters are those meeting weekly for Bible study and at such other times on Sunday and during the week, as the program of service necessitates.

The National Secretary's new book, "The Problem of Lay-Leadership," has just been accepted by Revell and Company, New York publishers, and will soon be in type.

Many Men's Classes, Official Boards and Brotherhoods are reading and studying "Making Good in the Local Church," and the little book is being cordially recommended by our leaders of thought and action.

Our financial supporters are standing by the Brotherhood Movement loyally and it looks as if we will go up to Atlanta with all bills paid. Let those who have yet to pay their pledge for the current year remember that we are counting on them for their contribution in order to pay all bills and do the required amount of work during the remainder of this convention year.

Our president, Judge J. N. Haymaker, is sending out a letter urging a liberal attendance of our men at the Atlanta Convention in October.

The transportation arrangements for the Atlanta Convention are well under way and a beautiful booklet of the trip is now ready and will be sent free upon application to the National Office, Kansas City, Mo.

The secretary was prohibited from attending the Northwest conventions by a rush of business duties in the Central west, but our work was presented by Graham Frank and George W. Muckley, to whom we are much indebted.

A Brotherhood is being organized at Janesville, Wisconsin, where F. L. Van Voorhis is the live and energetic preacher.

Preachers are still asking "How to organize the men." The packet of literature which we are sending free for the asking tells how it is done successfully. Send for it.

Your preacher should be sent to the Atlanta Convention, October 7-14, 1914, and the Brotherhood Chapters could not do a better thing than to arrange to care for his mileage and hotel while at the convention. Other churches are doing this, why not your church?

The Layman's Missionary Movement will hold its annual conference at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, July 27 to August 2. Lake Geneva is a delightful spot, and the conference should be attended by a number of our Brotherhood men.

Your secretary has been asked to serve on the Committee on Time and Place of our next convention, by President Hill M. Bell.

Drake University is the first of our colleges to recognize Men's work by a series of papers, which will be delivered by your secretary the last of September.

Many Brotherhood Chapters, and Men of the Movement are assisting in making the "Every Member Canvass" for missions, benevolences and in some cases, the current expenses of the church. This is a most worthy work, and if your church has not yet made the "Every Member Canvass," you would do well to get the literature from Grant K. Lewis, Carew Building, Cincinnati, Ohio, and set about it.

We are still receiving requests for the pamphlets issued a year ago, covering the three chapters of "Making Good in the Local Church," but regret to say that after printing and circulating 45,000 copies, they are now out of print. The same material largely rewritten appears in the book.

The Brotherhood Service Programs for next season are not yet ready, but will appear in book form under the title "The Problem of Lay-Leadership" about September first. The price of the book as not been set.

F. M. Bunting, one of the most able business men of the church at Rock Valley, Iowa, and a liberal supporter of the Brotherhood Movement from its inception, dropped dead in his home city recently. We have lost a true friend and we mourn his departure.

E. E. ELLIOTT,
Secretary.

NEWS FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

"The Christian Sahayak" published at Jubbulpore, India, by our brethren is a Christian newspaper, published both in Hindi and English. This paper announces that the cholera in the city of Damoh has reached the stage of epidemic. It had continued a month and there was no sign of abating. Indeed, ten to fifteen deaths every day are reported. There have been one or two deaths among our Indian Christians. This epidemic has been aggravated, if not caused by the shortage of water resulting from last year's failure of the rains.

There were 176 baptisms at Monieka, Africa, last year and the native Christians gave $200 themselves.

Last year the Living-link churches, as churches, contributed $60,702.98. Fine showing! Let us increase the number of Living-link churches.

The hearts of the missionaries are saddened these days because of the wonderful opportunities open in China of which they are unable to take advantage. When will we rise to the importance of the pressing emergency in that great land?

"Twelve more baptisms Sunday, June 7, five of our school girls, four school boys and three women from the neighborhood, making forty this year, the best year in our work here." Mary F. Lediard, Takinogawa. Tokyo, Japan.

The church at Urichsville, Ohio, J. A. Canby, minister, will in the future support Arthur Bowman at Wuhu, China, as their Living-link. Mr. Canby says: "You can hardly know the joy I feel in having some part in bringing the church up to this standard. We also have money provided for a Living-link in the home field and intend to do some work among the foreigners in this country."

The medical missionary at Monieka, Congo, Africa, Dr. L. F. Jaggard, received $1,200 last year from all sources on the field. This is twice his salary. The money goes for the enlargement of the work.

News just comes from the last Central Conference of the Congo African missionaries that there were 1,034 baptisms during the year and an offering for missions from the native churches of $1,181.81. Our four Congo churches report a combined membership of 3,736. In every way the year has been the greatest in ths history of the mission.

During the past half-dozen years the receipts of the Foreign Society have sprung from $274,324 per annum to $434,183, a gain of $159,859. This is an average increase of 26,643 per year for the past six years. And besides this there has been an increase in the receipts this year up to date. There has also been a very considerable expansion of the work on the fields during that period. The number of native workers has about doubled, and in that time eighty-four new buildings have been provided, or an average of fourteen each year. This is more than one each month for the six years.

A letter from J. C. Ogden dated May 17 at Kian Ting, China, says: "We were on the houseboat from March 14 to May 12. We traveled forty-four days—a distance of about 800 miles. Now we are 1,800 miles west of Shanghai. We are twelve days east of Tachienlu or about 300 miles. It is 460 miles from Tachienlu to Batang. I cannot begin to tell you how happy I am. I feel that I am in my old harness again. I preached both last Sunday and today to crowded houses of Chinese, and it is my purpose to use the opportunity before me to talk, and teach and preach all along the way from here to Batang."

Secretary.

THE BARREN FIG TREE.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR AUGUST 9, 1914.

Mark 11:12-33. Memory Verses, 22, 23

Golden Text.—By their fruits ye shall know them. —Matt. 7:20.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(12) And on the morrow, when they were come out from Bethany, he hungered. (13) And seeing a fig tree afar off having leaves, he came, if haply he might find anything thereon: and when he came to it, he found nothing but leaves: for it was not the season of figs. (14) And he answered and said unto it, No man eat fruit from thee henceforward for ever. And his disciples heard it.

(15) And they come to Jerusalem: and he entered into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold and them that bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the moneychangers, and the seats of them that sold the doves; (16) and he would not suffer that any man should carry a vessel through the temple. (17) And he taught, and said unto them, Is it not written, My house shall be called a house of prayer for all the nations? but ye have made it a den of robbers. (18) And the chief priests and the scribes heard it, and sought how they might destroy him: for they feared him, for all the multitude was astonished at his teaching.

(19) And every evening he went forth out of the city.

(20) And as they passed by in the morning, they saw the fig tree withered away from the roots. (21) And Peter calling to remembrance saith unto him, Rabbi, behold, the fig tree which thou cursedst is withered away. (22) And Jesus answering saith unto them, Have faith in God. (23) Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou taken up and cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that what he saith cometh to pass; he shall have it. (24) Therefore I say unto you, All things whatsoever ye pray and ask for, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them. (25) And whensoever ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught against any one; that your Father also who is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses.

Verse by Verse.

BY CLARK BUCKNER.

v. 12. And on the morrow: It was on Monday. The triumphal entrance into Jerusalem was on Sunday. Bethany: It was on the eastern slope of Mount Olive.

v. 13. Seeing a fig tree afar off having leaves, etc.: It was natural that he should look for figs on a tree which was full of leaves. He found nothing but leaves: The fig-tree stood for the city of Jerusalem. It was the great religious center. In it were the great temple and the religious teachers of the Jews. But their religion was without fruits. Was not the season of figs: One might say that Jesus had no right to expect figs out of season; but, in as much as the tree was in leaf, which was an unusual thing for that season, it seems that he was perfectly justified in so doing.

v. 14. No man eat fruit from thee henceforward forever: This is a prophecy which has been fulfilled. Prior to the times of Jesus the Hebrew religion had won many converts in various Roman provinces. He in this prophecy states that, because of their lack of fruits, the Jewish religionists shall win no more proselytes.

v. 15. He entered into the temple: It was his custom to enter the temple daily to teach. Began to cast out them that sold and them that bought: Do not fail to notice that those who bought were guilty as well as those who sold. In the temple: The particular part in which Jesus found this merchandising was the court of the Gentiles. Sold doves: It would be well for you to read John 2:13-17.

v. 16. And he would not suffer that any man carry a vessel through the temple: Jesus objected to their making a public thoroughfare of the place which was dedicated to the worship of God.

v. 17. Is it not written: Another illustration of Jesus' familiarity with the scripture. See Isa. 56:7. My house shall be called a house of prayer: There is much that is worthy of our careful consideration as we think of the tendencies of our modern church with regard to the uses of the house of worship. Our church buildings should be primarily places of worship. For all the nations: Not for Jews only but for Gentiles as well.

v. 18. Sought how they might destroy him: They could stand it no longer. They had come to see that if Jesus was not put out of the way, they would lose their places as leaders of the people. This attack on the habits and sources of revenue was more than they could bear.

v. 19. Every evening went forth out of the city: He probably went out to Bethany to spend the nights.

v. 20. They saw the fig-tree withered away: Some writers have pointed out that this is the only one of the miracles of our Lord which was not performed as an act of mercy. But we think that the forcible illustration which he thus brought before them was as truly an act of mercy as were the other miracles.

v. 21. The fig-tree which thou cursedst is withered away: Here is a note of perplexity. They could not understand fully.

v. 22. Have faith in God: Their lives will be fruitful, he promises, if they use the life-giving power of God.

v. 23. And shall not doubt in his heart: Jesus is teaching that real faith is not always in the profession; that fruitlessness comes from lack of dependence on God.

v. 24. All things whatsoever ye pray and ask for, etc.: But we must comply with the conditions if we would receive.

v. 25. Forgive: Read Matt. 6:12.

At the Heart of the Lesson.

BY REV. A. Z. CONRAD, PH.D.

DISAPPOINTED HOPES.

"And when He came to it He found nothing but leaves." The disciples were undoubtedly disappointed. The full leaved fig tree illustrates the fair promises which sound like a sweet melody in the ear of youth. It is like the pictures of prosperity which imagination paints. It stands typical of proffered friendships and services apparently made in good faith. It very appropriately represents the illusions of life. The discovery of fruitlessness is simply the disillusionment of life. It means disappointment, sometimes depression and almost despair. Many a fair morning develops into storm. Many an open door with an invitation to earthly paradise leads to desert waste. The mirage is always deceptive. The fair cities, beautiful fields, and placid lakes prove to be only atmospheric and empty of all reality. It seems to be necessary to development and discriminating judgment that we should pass through bitter disappointments. How many a promised fortune has proven to be "nothing but leaves." Humiliating and heart breaking is this experience when we enter the realm of religion. Those whose hopes fasten upon anything else than the eternal God manifested as Father, Savior and Sanctifier are doomed to continuous unrest and unrelieved disappointment.

WITHERED AND WORTHLESS.

The next morning they passed by this same tree, and we read, V. 20, "They saw the fig tree withered away from the roots." What was the difference between the tree today and yesterday? Only a difference of appearance. It was just as worthless when adorned with leaves only it kept up appearances. Now the appearances are gone and a just appraisement of the tree is possible. If only the veil were removed many a sleek, fat body would prove to contain a shrivelled soul. The disciples were astonished. Peter exclaimed upon the startling degeneration. Evidently the surprise of the disciples lay not in the cause or the curse which had fallen upon it, but in the fact of Christ's power over nature. Here was a second lesson which Jesus designed to teach. The imperialism of faith He makes of paramount importance, just at this juncture. He had already revealed the peril of false pretense. He is now to assure His disciples that they are to be conquerers in the world, compelling all material things to serve the purpose of the kingdom. Anything that needs to be done can be done. Omnipotence is available up to the point of necessity. Man is to be as great as the demands of the kingdom shall require. This greatness is to come through faith. Faith in God, is a brief but a mighty command. "Whoever shall say of this mountain, 'Be thou taken up and cast into the sea,' and shall not doubt in his heart but shall believe that what he saith cometh to pass, he shall have it." Is this literally true? Certainly. If the interests of the kingdom of Jesus demanded the removal of the mountain and the disciple became clear that this was necessary and had an unwavering faith that it would be done and should call upon God for its removal it would be removed. But, let it be remembered that faith is the gift of God. God does not give us faith merely to disappoint us. No one would ever have such a faith as that independently of circumstantial requirement and of kingdom appointment. In all the things which we do require and which are essential, we are to exercise just as definite a faith and just as unwavering a faith as is here commanded. The two supreme conditions presented are belief and forgiveness. There must be unlimited and unqualified trust in God first. Secondly, a disposition to employ power bestowed to increase human benefaction. In other words there never can be such a faith as is here suggested unless there is with it the kind of resignation which led Jesus to his Cross.

TEMPLE DESECRATION.

The first and second parts of the fig-tree-instruction are separated by the visit to the temple. V. 15. "And He entered into the temple and began to cast out them that sold and them that bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money changers and the seats of them that sold doves." A two-fold lesson of great importance is here presented. In the first place, Jesus Christ is Master of the temple. Just as in the case of the fig tree, here where He had a right to expect the deeper realities of religion, He found nothing but leaves. There was much of Pharasaical profession and the smoking altars where they professed deep reverence and holy awe were belied by the commercialism which had been introduced into the religious life. Everything had been made subservient to the material interests of the ruling classes. They were mixing business and religion in a most dangerous and destructive manner. Under the pretense and profession of necessity, they had permitted the Courts of the Temple to be desecrated by the selling of animals for sacrifice and the tables of the money changers, where all sorts of dishonesty and extortion were practiced. There is a good deal of dispute about the sanctity of church edifices. There is much in association. People speak contemptuously sometimes of there being any sanctity attached to wood or brick and stone. That all depends. There may be. Material things may be so employed as wonderfully to influence religious life. Houses erected for the worship of God should be so associated with the spiritual development of those who convene for worship that every influence shall be uplifting and ennobling. Peculiarly has this reference to the sanctity of the temple of the holy spirit, the human heart. "Know ye not that your bodies are the temple of the Holy Ghost?" The dual life cannot be led successfully. The heart must belong in its entirety to God. All the business relations of life must have as their objective aim the glory of God and the service of humanity. Jesus enters this personal temple. What does He discover? Does He approve or disapprove of what He finds? This becomes a deeply personal question and the cleansing of the temple must always bring serious and solemn judgment to the individual life and heart. How much there is in almost every life that had better be eliminated. If permitted He will cleanse the temple completely.

There is such a thing as righteous indignation. Jesus felt it, expressed it when he cleansed the temple.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR AUGUST 5, 1914.

The Mountains and Their Messages.
Ex. 20:1-21; Matt. 5:1.

What use shall we make of nature in religious teaching? Our view of nature will determine the answer. The man who wrote, "Nature is a sin-distorted, sin-cursed thing," would put sharp limitations upon our use of nature material. He says it should not be the leading material in any lessons for Sunday-school study. We may agree with him in the latter opinion without believing that nature is the abominable thing he says it is. Men of perverse wills and polluted minds make nature vile. Clean-minded men may see in it a revelation of God. If it is sin-distorted and sin-cursed, it is so in the minds of men who are alienated from God. The child of God is permitted, to see in it the glory of God. Our religious instruction is defective if it leaves nature out of the account.

SOLITUDE.

Solitude may be found anywhere on sea and land, in the desert, in the crowded streets of the city, on the prairie, and in the forest. The mountain has invited many minds to solitude. We need its message.

"The World is too much with us; late and soon,
Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers;
Little we see in Nature that is ours;
We have given our hearts away, a sordid boon!"

Solitude makes us fit for society. We talk too much and think too little. We must be amused. We cannot sit down and listen to nature and to God. We mistake cleverness for wisdom. The voice of deep calling unto deep does not fall upon our ear. We do not know our own hearts well enough to trust their fondest desires. The clatter of the marketplace drowns the voice of the Eternal.

FREEDOM.

The mountains about Jerusalem protected the city from its enemies. Many a patriot has been protected by the mountains against the oppressor. The freedom of the mountains has seemed to men to be a gift of God. It has not been won from reluctant tyrants; it has been enjoyed by those who have chosen to dwell in fortresses built by the hand of God. Freedom that comes by the art and device of man is not quite what we like; it seems to lack permanence. Religion assures us of a freedom that cannot be taken away. It supports the conviction that the world is so made and man is so made that the only stable social order is one in which freedom is made sure to all. That the mountain should be associated in the thought of man with the God of freedom was natural. Nor has the time passed when the contemplation of the great natural barriers behind which men have been safe from the tyrant should be mixed with feelings of reverence for him who gave men the right to see the world as it is and to speak what they feel.

MOSES AND CHRIST.

From the high places have come divine messages to men. With Mt. Sinai is associated the law of Israel. The freedom of the mountain is the freedom of law and justice. The word that comes from it is that men should live together and respect their common rights. One who flees to the mountains to escape the obligations of society abuses a sacred place. In his sanctuary the independent man is most dependent. He must have right thoughts about God. Just any sort of religion will not satisfy. For him human life must be a sacred thing. The religion of the high place is that of the heart; it is inner. It unifies the life.

A Real Bargain!

We have purchased a limited supply of THE MESSAGE OF THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST, BY DR. PETER AINSLIE, and THE CALL OF THE CHRIST, BY DR. H. L. WILLETT. The writers of these books need no introduction to our people, as both are well known throughout our entire brotherhood. It is not often that we are in a position to offer books of this character at such a bargain. You should have them in your library.

THE MESSAGE OF THE DISCIPLES has had a large sale and is now in its second edition. It consists of a series of lectures delivered before the Yale Divinity School with unusual success, and is an interpretation of the message, origin and history of the Disciples of Christ. Every minister and every layman should possess a copy of this work. . .. .

THE CALL OF THE CHRIST is a study of the challenge of Jesus to the present century. It has been called "a work of striking power and reality," a positive yet persuasive presentation of the claims of Christ. It will strengthen the faith of those in doubt, cheer the sorrowing and impart to every reader a satisfactory and realistic vision of the Master. A new edition of this book is now on the press, which shows that the demand is not yet supplied.

WHY USE THE GRADED LESSONS?

Because they present Scriptural and moral truths in such form that they can be understood by those who are to receive them. Children are in their very nature GRADED; therefore the instruction given them must be graded according to their varying powers to receive. A teacher would not last long in the public schools who would ask first graders to master the works of Plato. Neither should a system of Bible lesson study continue that offers to Primary pupils such difficult problems as are presented in the books of Leviticus, Isaiah and Romans. It is a principle as old as modern education that knowledge should be ADAPTED TO THE PUPIL. Shall Religious Education alone be exempted from observing this fundamental principle?

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Character Talks

PEOPLE WHO SEE

"Blessed are your eyes for they see." People who can see are scarce. The measure of a man's worth to the world and the world's worth to him is largely determined by his capacity to see. "In the seeing soul all true worth lies." The difference between people is mainly in their capacity to see. The man who can do, but not see things, receives wages; while he who can both see and do things receives a salary. Jesus did not only train his disciples to see wheat, but also flowers. This is not a work-a-day world only. There is music, poetry, art, and beauty everywhere. The man who can see these will never be poor, regardless of wages or salary; for he has invested rights in the world's best. The real leaders in the world are the seers. The subject of wages or salary never concerns them. Their reward is in getting things seen. Getting people to see God is the highest service to man. Only he who sees God can get Him seen. Blessed are your eyes IF they see.

"The Conquest is just what you say it is—'a journal of character-building,'" writes one of our superintendents. "The Conquest" takes itself seriously. That's why its readers take it seriously. Is the paper your school is taking one that emphasizes the things that should be emphasized in a Sunday school—serious Bible study, religious ideals and Christian service? "The Conquest" has as its aim not simply to give schools what they have been used to—small talk of school work; but to publish such material as will actually GROW CHARACTER.

Have you seen "The Conquest?" "Character Talks" is one of its features. J. H. Goldner, of Cleveland, will contribute the "Talks" for July. Send for a copy of "The Conquest."

"IT is with great reluctance that the author has gained the consent of his own mind to write this book and to send it forth. In a time when men's souls are vibrating to problems involving the most vital interests and ideals of humanity one's prestige is not likely to be enhanced by connecting one's name with a book on "The Meaning of Baptism." It will seem like turning from the living present to the dead past to discuss this question again. Modern-minded men in all the churches—including also the churches that have made a feature of the dogma of immersion—have little interest in the controversy. The great new issues of life and death have for them displaced those problems of ecclesiastical refinement which engaged their fathers. . . . . .

"It is not because I am so much interested in the baptism question, but because I am profoundly interested in the life and death problems of modern religion that I have let myself be persuaded to write this book and to send it forth. . . . . .

"Among my own people, the Disciples of Christ, I am frank to say, this dogma of immersion (by this I do not mean the practice of immersion) has been like a ten-cent piece held before the eye, shutting out the sun. The great ideals of their movement for Christian unity have been much obscured and, for many minds, wholly eclipsed by this doctrine which Alexander Campbell introduced into their thinking not many years after their movement was launched by his more catholic-minded father. My conviction is profound and urgent that the Disciples' plea for Christian unity will continue to be abortive so long as Mr. Campbell's view of baptism persists among them."

The Lame Man's Look

"And Peter, fastening his eyes upon him, with John, said Look on us."

They were not much to look at. The fishermen in town and strangers there had little about them to attract the attention of anyone but a beggar. Even he could see small prospect of any large return as the result of his solicitation. They would give him something perhaps, but it would not be very much. They probably were not men of wealth, and their ideas of benevolence would be those of the country. But on the other hand, they were not so thoroughly accustomed to the constant solicitations of alms which callous the residents of every great city. Not that poverty was unknown in Capernaum, not that there were no beggars in Bethsaida; there was no hamlet in Palestine then and is not now where one does not hear the incessant cry of penury and pain, but in the country beggary was occasional, and in the city it was continuous. Whoever lives in town and does not die of nervous prostration must learn to look on suffering without tears and listen to the cry of pain without perpetually shuddering. Lameness and blindness were an old story to everybody in Jerusalem. Whoever made his way to the Temple had to pass between open ranks of the sick and suffering. These men from the country might be more kind. They were not rich men. It was useless to expect much, but they would be apt to give a little. So the lame man, with no particular eagerness and yet with a feeble expectation that they would do something for him, stretched out his hands for aid.

"Look on us," said Peter. Perhaps he resented it a little that the beggar asked almost without looking. Perhaps Peter saw that the beggar judged him by the cut of his coat, even as a few weeks previous the servants in the high priest's court had mentioned his Galilean speech. Perhaps Peter felt a little sting in the half contempt of the beggar whom he was asked to feed. At any rate he had no inclination to do anything for an inattentive beggar.

"Look on us." Up to that time the world had not looked upon these men with any degree of interest. They had lived their obscure lives in their own home place fashion. Only in the last few weeks had they become in any degree conspicuous. People had been looking at them with whispering curiosity, such as no man enjoys. It was not that kind of look which Peter invited now. It was a look of wide-awake interest, of genuine and alert expectation.

The lame man looked. There stood Peter in his fisher's coat, the same which he had wrapped about him when he drew the net to shore a little while before, and John was dressed not very differently.

The lame man looked, and saw no large promise beyond what his first half heedless inspection had revealed; and yet he could not look away. There was something about these men that gave him pause.

"Silver and gold have I none," said Peter, "but such as I have give I thee. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk."

Jesus Christ of Nazareth! The lame man had been hearing about him. Was it not He whom they crucified only a few weeks before? Was it not He who had been nailed to the cross and laid in the tomb? How should He be able to lift any man up? Some of the lifting power of Christ was in the arm of Peter. He took the lame man by the hand. It was a rough, strong hand that Peter extended, clasping the beggar's dirty palm. It was a strong, vigorous pull which he gave to the flabby muscles of him who long had lain at the Temple gate, but he got him up, and once upon his feet, to his surprise, the lame man found new strength in the ankle bones. He stood alone. He stepped. Then with a thrill of joy he leaped and he was lame no more.

The world never has faith to ask for what it needs most. It is forever seeking alms when it needs healing. It is forever despising the messengers of God because they do not bear his lesser gifts. It is forever measuring its hopes on the basis of earth's meager probabilities. It is forever judging the church of Christ by the number of dollars which it contributes to this charity and to that mission. These should be the beautiful limitations of its standards of value.

It belongs to us ever to remind the world of what is its real and deeper need. It is important that we ourselves should never forget what is the one surpassing blessing which we are privileged to bring to men. Silver and gold we have, but that power which is ours in the name of Jesus Christ is far richer than any gift that these can buy. It belongs to us to bid men to rise from their spiritual lethargy, to lift themselves above the mean and sordid conditions of their lives, to cease to sit forever as paupers just outside the beautiful gate of their spiritual inheritance, to rise and walk and leap in the joy of their free sonship.

Teacher Training Standards

BY WALTER S. ATHEARN.

Editor's Note: At a meeting of the Educational Committee of the International Sunday-school Association held in Chicago last October, Dean Athearn was selected as a committee of one to investigate present conditions and present a plan for the revision of the teacher-training standards now in operation. The result of his investigations and the proposed revision of standards as approved by the Committe on Education were presented at a teacher-training conference held during the recent convention of the International Sunday-school Association, in this city.

DURING the past few years there has been constant demand upon the International Committee on Education for modification of the standards adopted in 1908 after a conference of the International Committee and the representatives of the Educational boards of the co-operating religious bodies.

In recent months this pressure has come with much insistence from departmental specialists who insist that the present courses do not provide for the specialization required by the modern graded Sunday-school.

Before recommending a modification of standards, the committee thought it wise to make a survey of the entire field in order that its conclusions might be based upon actual facts and represent the real needs of the country as a whole.

The investigation included the following items:

(a) A cross-section survey of the results of teacher-training. A questionaire was sent out to graduates of First Standard Courses. By this method the work of 500 typical classes was studied, 200 in Pennsylvania, 200 in Iowa and 100 in Indiana, Missouri and North Dakota.

(b) A critical examination of the most generally used teacher-training text-books.

(c) An examination of the text-books used by extension departments connected with colleges and universities.

(d) An examination of the literature and methods of government bureaus and agricultural boards engaged in the instruction of the average citizen in specific fields.

(e) A study of the methods employed by the various states in the training of rural teachers and the standardization of rural schools.

CHARACTER AND CAPACITY OF TEACHER TRAINING GRADUATES.

In the survey of teacher-training classes one student was selected from each of 500 classes. The classes represented city, village and rural churches and all types of religious organizations.

Three and one-third per cent of the 500 reporting had less than common school (eighth grade) education, and these graduated from the First Standard course with an average grade of 97 per cent. 43 1-3 per cent had a common school education, and 53 1-3 per cent had high school, normal school or collegiate training.

As further evidence of the general intelligence of these teachers, our reports show that each one takes and reads on an average of 5 1-12 standard magazines, daily papers and technical journals. The Ladies Home Journal, Saturday Evening Post, Literary Digest, Everybody's, Better Farming and Woman's Home Companion are the most generally read.

During the past year, these 500 teachers report, with names of books that they have read, 2,070 volumes of history, literature, science and biography. This is an average of over four volumes for each teacher.

In addition to these general books these 500 teachers have read during the past year, 1,083 books which may be classified as Religious Fiction; i. e., "Ben Hur;" "Titus, a Comrade of the Cross;" "Inside the Cup;" "The Calling of Dan Matthews;" etc. One out of eighteen has read "Inside the Cup" and one out of fifteen has read some one of Harold Bell Wright's books.

The average teacher has more than a common school education, reads six books per year and takes 5 1-12 magazines and periodicals.

In a letter to this committee, Dr. Henry Wallace, editor of Wallace's Farmer and member of the Roosevelt Farm Life Commission, says: "I think I may safely say that the standard of intelligence among church members in the country is considerably higher than among church members in town, and I would not be far wide of the mark if I said that on all questions the average country intelligence is higher than town intelligence." Mr. W. D. Henderson, director of the Extension Department of the University of Michigan, writes: "My experience with people of ordinary grade of intelligence would lead me to say that the ordinary high school text-books can be used with a fair degree of success." Chas. H. Williams, director of University Extension, University of Missouri, says: "We find most of the people taking work below university rank quite capable of doing work which is equivalent to average high school work."

It is safe to conclude that the average American is sufficiently intelligent to read the daily papers, standard magazines, agricultural bulletins, and teachnical literature bearing on his own work, and it is clear that the Sunday-school teachers are not below this general level of intelligence.

NET RESULTS OF FIRST STANDARD COURSE.

(a) The average final grade of each of these 500 students was 98 per cent. Only three received less than 90 per cent and none below 85 per cent. It is very seldom that one who takes the examination is failed by the examiner. A very indefensible practice of giving grades to "encourage the backward" has had the sanction of many state secretaries, and a state teacher-training secretary honestly marking papers what they deserved has more than once felt the discipline of those higher up. The uniformly high grade of the students is an uncomplimentary reflection on the nature of the text-books, the character of the examination questions and the educational ideals of the examiners.

(b) The average time required to complete the First Standard text is 3¼ hours per week for 50 weeks or 162½ hours to master fewer than 150 pages of text illustrations.

College and high school assignments usually require 10 pages of text and collateral reading for each hour of study. Extension and correspondence courses connected with colleges, making their appeal to the same grade of intelligence, require a minimum of ten pages of text for each hour of recitation. But the student of the First Standard text-books finds difficulty in mastering a page an hour! This suggests an inquiry into the nature of the "first standard" text books.

(c) Our questionaire reveals the fact that the First Standard course has not encouraged the purchase or reading of Biblical or professional literature. Of the 300 teachers answering this question 260 had purchased no books bearing on any phase of Sunday-school work. Forty had purchased a total of 145 volumes. This is an average of less than half a volume to the teacher.

Of the 300 classes represented, only fifteen had access to any kind of a library during the course, and these were in most cases the ministers' libraries, not selected to meet the special needs of the teacher-training class. Out of the 300 teachers, 276 reported that their classes depended solely on the text-book, and twenty-four reported that the teacher occasionally referred to a Bible dictionary or encyclopedia.

In answer to the question, "What books do you own bearing on Sunday-school organization, methods, child study, Bible history, geography, etc?" one teacher replied: "I do not own any books like these mentioned except my teacher-training book and it has excellent teachings on all subjects above mentioned and I use it solely as my only reference book when I get puzzled in any of these subjects." This simple confession is one of the most serious indictments the First Standard courses could have. They have not led to the use of reference books and they have led teachers to feel that they have mastered subjects to which they have not been even introduced.

(d) In reply to the question, "Have you done any advanced teacher-training work since you finished your first standard course?" there were 480 answers, 416 of whom said "no" and 64 said "yes." There are many evidences to show that the sixty-four who went on to advanced work had other incentives besides the influence of the First Standard course.

(e) Fifty-one per cent of the total enrolment in the 500 classes investigated dropped out before the completion of the course. Various reasons were given. "Lack of interest" was most frequently named. Large classes suffered the greatest slump. Classes of 40 would graduate 10 or 12; while classes of 10 or 12 would graduate 8 or 9. This suggests problems which cannot be gone into in this report. It is clear that there are many other reasons for the shrinkage in class enrollment besides the difficulty of the course itself, but it is the opinion of the writer that a modification of the content of the course would remove one of the greatest causes of this failure to hold the enrolment.

A COMPARISON.

Compare this record with the report of the Dean of the Extension Department of the University of Wisconsin. The report shows an enrolment of 2,804 machinists, clerks and day laborers in classes in bookkeeping engineering, mechanical drawing and kindred subjects. The average assignment was 13 pages per lesson, the tests were rigid, and the length of the course was two years. Only 278 out of the 2,804 dropped out in two years. The courses were thorough, and they were written to meet the needs of the students. This suggests that an enlarging and rewriting of the First Standard courses would enable them to hold a larger per cent of the enrolment.

A QUANTITATIVE ANALYSIS OF THE FIRST STANDARD COURSE TEXT-BOOKS.

When subjected to a quantitative analysis the four most widely used First Standard course text-books would yield the following results:

Book No. 1. Biblical material, 54 pages; the Maccabeean Period is completed in ten lines; the Greek period in nine lines and Isaiah in seven and one-half lines. Twelve pages are given to organization; seventeen pages are given to the teacher. In these seventeen pages the mind is discussed in two pages; apperception completely handled in thirteen lines; memory in three lines; imagination in sixteen lines and the will in four and a half lines. The pupil is treated in seventeen pages. Of these seventeen pages the play instinct occupies four lines, imitation, eight lines.

Book No. 2. Biblical matter, 55 pages; Maccabeean Period, four lines; Greek Period, eight lines; Roman Period, six and one-half lines; Period of the Judges, seven and one-half lines. Twenty-one pages are given to organization. The history of the Sunday-school occupies one page and the principles of grading are given in their entirety in nine lines. Twenty-one pages are given to the discussion of the teacher. The fullness with which the important topics are discussed may be indicated from the following statement:

Perception—6 lines.
Conception—4 lines.
Judgment—3 lines.
Reason—4½ lines.
Methods of teaching—2 pages.

Twenty-five pages are devoted to the study of the pupil. Relative importance of topics in the mind of the author is shown by the following treatment:

Imagination—9 lines.
Physical development—9 lines.
Memory—12 lines.
Attention—18 lines.

Book No. 3. Biblical matter, 77 pages; Maccabeean Period, five lines; Greek Period, three lines; Roman Period, four lines; Judges, two lines; Abraham, four words: "The Friend of God." Fourteen pages are given to the discussion of organization. History of the Sunday-school is complete in one page and the grading of the Sunday-school complete in two pages. Eighteen pages are given to the discussion of the teacher of which the art of questioning occupies three pages, principles of teaching two and one-half pages, preparation of the lesson two and one-half pages; twenty-four pages are devoted to the study of the pupil. The play instinct is handled in fourteen lines; the beginners' department covers one page and the whole problem of adolescence is discussed in fourteen lines.

Book No. 4. Biblical material, 125 pages. The sweep from creation to Abraham occupies 3 1-3 pages; from Abraham to Jacob, four pages; forty pages are devoted to the discussion of the school; thirty-one pages to the discussion of the teacher; forty pages to a discussion of the pupil. Imagination is discussed in thirteen lines; fancy in three lines; beginners' department, three pages.

QUALITATIVE ANALYSIS OF FIRST STANDARD COURSE BOOKS.

These books cannot only be criticized because of the scrappy and inadequate treatment of the topics discussed, but they can also be severely criticized on account of the nature of the material which fills the few pages devoted to the various subjects under discussion. Here are some examples: One author says in his preface: "Biblical geography is woven around three rivers, five mountains, and twelve cities. Of the cities, three begin with B, three with G, three with J, and three with T." In order to preserve the alliteration some cities of relative unimportance are raised into prominence, thus sacrificing accuracy of statement in the interest of a very inferior memory device.

One author handles the whole subject of religious art in three lines as follows: "The walls should be covered with the most appropriate pictures and these should be changed and re-arranged often." But what are the most appropriate pictures, upon what principles are they to be selected and upon what principles shall they be re-arranged?

Another author describes the extent of Palestine as follows: "The Palestine of today is about the size and shape of the state of New Hampshire. The distance north and south from Dan to Beersheba is about 150 miles." But the book contains no map showing the location of Dan and Beersheba and nothing to show that these names refer to places instead of men or animals. The book takes this knowledge for granted. And this is one characteristic of all the First Standard text-books; they take for granted entirely too much knowlege which it is their business to teach.

ACCURACY SACRIFICED TO SIMPLICITY.

Another typical paragraph attempts to set forth the difference between work and play as follows: "A boy may work hard all forenoon to build a house or a dam, when he is really too tired to bring coal or run errands. The child who would tire of work in an hour, plays for a whole afternoon. Work is forced, play is spontaneous. Work is 'have to;' play is 'want to.' When a child does a thing because he likes it, the work element is gone and the play spirit enters."

It is clear that the author in seeking simplicity of statement has sacrificed accuracy of statement, and in the end has said nothing which adds to the information or power of the student. Compare this statement with that of Bagley, in Chapter VI of his "Educative Process" and it will be very clear that the more scientific statement is also the clearest statement.

Take another illustration: One author devotes five lines to sensation and perception as follows: "Sensation is an impression made upon the mind by an outside stimulus; the agents through which sensations are received are called senses. They are taste, smell, touch, hearing and sight. Perception is the recognition of a sensation." Betts in his "The Mind and Its Education" devotes a whole chapter of twenty pages to sensation and perception. The four lines quoted above from the First Standard text-book are very much harder to learn than the twenty pages from Betts, and when you have memorized them you do not know anything about the subject. It is no wonder students drop out of such courses.

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF TEACHING IGNORED.

The teaching process requires instruction, drill and test. The First Standard course text-books have usually ignored the element of instruction and proceeded to drill and examination. Memory devices have been at a premium. Drill is not a method of acquisition; its function is to turn experience into habit. Vocalization and repetition are the technique of drill. But preceding this drill exercise there must be observation, instruction, illustration, reflection, and even the use of the new matter in harmony with the background of previous experience.

Now the chief sin of the writers of these First Standard text-books is that they have tried to make knowledge automatic before it had been apperceived. They force their pupils to the task of organizing a large body of facts and principles into a coherent system without having first given them the facts which were to be synthesized and automatized.

The writers of these texts have been encouraged to ignore the element of instruction by the fact that so many fields were to be covered in a single year. Only second to the sin of asking the mind to make bricks without straw is the ignoring of the element of time in the learning process. New facts must be related to old facts, and this requires time. A student could not get a college education over night even though knowledge could be put up in concentrated tablets. We must allow time for digestion. Twenty years ago the public high schools introduced the student to science by giving

The City's Eggs in One Basket

BY CLEMENT G. CLARKE.

The following address was delivered in the First Congregational Church, Peoria, by the pastor, Rev. Clement G. Clarke. It is a reply to a special whisky edition of the Peoria Star which was published for the apparent purpose of impressing the public with the false belief that Peoria's present and future prosperity is entirely dependent upon the manufacture of that poisonous drug known as alcohol.

I DO not know how the flaunting of such paid-for display of sophistry in a city's newspaper may strike you, but to me it is a challenge and a dare that I choose to take up. It is an insult to patriotism more exasperatingly filled with taunt and effrontery than any Mexican performance toward the United States, and if I could, I would make the liquor power salute with all its guns the unsullied flag of our America. It is a libel on Peoria to claim that all her eggs are in the whiskey basket: it is not so. Moreover, the eggs that are in that one basket are bad eggs. Yes, watch the basket. The American people are watching the basket, not to guard and preserve it but sooner or later to destroy every egg which it contains. The storm is brewing which threatens to sweep basket, eggs and all into the midst of the sea.

DOOM TO THE LIQUOR BUSINESS.

Perhaps we should be charitable. There is no doubt but the liquor interests are becoming desperate. It is the desperateness of the felt situation which makes them advertise and argue; remonstrate, cajole and plead. Perhaps we must bear with them while we ourselves take comfort. Perhaps we should pity instead of upbraid such papers as choose even yet to cast their lot in with these Philistines. Perhaps we should compassionate those who have set out to watch this one basket. To keep that watch is by them no longer called a joke. They are prophesying their own downfall. As one of their own national organs recently said: "There is to us the handwriting on the wall and its interpretation spells doom."

EVIDENCES: A TELL-TALE LETTER.

Evidences of the same sort are on every hand. The Prohibition fight is no longer a laughing matter. It is of national proportions and it was in fear of this that the above referred to article was written. I wonder if you read of Illinois' presentation to the house committee in Congress to which the Hobson bill has been referred. There are two striking features: (1) Miss Helen Hood, president of the W. C. T. U. of Illinios, offered a petition from the state of Ilinios with more than 100,000 signers calling for the passage of that bill. That was important, but even more striking was the surprise introduced by William H. Anderson, president of the Anti-Saloon League of New York, who read a letter from the president of the Keeley Institute at Dwight, Illinios. That letter was the transcript of one that had been received by the Keeley Institute from the Kentucky Distillers' Distributing Company of Kansas City signed by W. Franklin, president, December 3, 1913. Said this liquor man writing to the Keeley Institute: "Our customers are your prospective patients." And then the letter went on to offer to the Keeley Institute for a consideration the mailing list of the liquor company as they were selling out. For 40,000 names $400 was wanted; for from 20,000 to 30,000, $300; for 20,000, $200, and this comment was made: "The list is the result of thousands of dollars of advertising. Each individual is a regular user of liquor, and there is not a single one who would not like to quit that habit. Each man is keenly alive to the injury of his practice and he is only awaiting some way of stopping."

What do you think the effect of that letter was on those congressional listeners? "Our customers are your prospective patients. Buy our mailing lists?" There you have as perfect a commentary as can anywhere be found on the true character of the liquor business. By dint of earnest endeavor they have undermined the manhood of their thousands of customers and now with unblushing hardihood they offer for sale the mailing list of their wreckage. There is open confession of the fruitage of liquor labor. They sow in whisky, they reap in Keeley Cures; they sow in wines and alcohol, they reap in hospital charges; they sow in distillery product, they reap in drunkards' graveyards. And this is the business that Peoria citizens are called upon to keep protective watch over! The liquor men in that congressional hearing last Wednesday morning suffered strange pallor of countenance while the temperance forces gleefully huzzaed.

THE COUNTRY GOING DRY.

And there are other reasons why the scare is lodging in the liquor camp. There are other reasons why they should pay purchasable daily newspapers to bolster up their waning respectability. One reason is that they saw 1,000 saloons voted out of the state of Illinois ten days ago; like Pilate's wife they have suffered many things these days in a dream because of a strange apparition. They have seen the figure of woman with a ballot in her hand. They have seen the cartoon in the Chicago Record-Herald as to who it is that is putting the "D" in "DRY." They are seeing these wet and dry maps of this state and of all the nation growing white and whiter. Forty-six out of ninety-two million of our people live now in dry territory. Two million one hundred thirty-two thousand square miles out of our total 2,973,000 square miles have forbidden the existence of the saloon. There are thirty-two states, according to the Anti-Saloon League, in which the combined number of saloons is less than the number in Chicago alone; of the 2,856 counties in the United States over 1,700 have abolished the saloon. Five hundred cities with a population of more than 5,000 each and about 200 cities with a population of more than 10,000 each have the saloons wiped out. In nine states there is state-wide Prohibition. Our country's map is growing white and this helps explain the desperateness with which the liquor men rush to newspapers to make their "great review editions."

BAD PRODUCT, BAD BUSINESS.

Grant for the moment that all of their contentions are true as to what the distillery business does for Peoria—that it employs so many men, pays so much taxes, uses so much corn and all the rest—grant it for the moment and I do not see how that affects the argument one particle. It only exhibits the mighty scale on which the argument moves. If the product of all that corn is poison; if the consequence of all that consumption of corn is one stupendous Keeley cure patient list; if all that coal has been used in making up death-doses, and all that machinery put in operation to blast lives and destroy families and multiply defective children, I for my part can't see how the conclusion to be reached is, that that precious business is carefully to be guarded. If that is the product, and it is; if the outcome of all this investment is a new kind of slavery, another species of prostitution, and it is, then I pity the city that is going to be caught by that kind of argument leading to that kind of conclusion. The only conclusion that logic or common sense, either one, leads to is the same one that finally prevailed in the slavery issue, which sooner or later is going to prevail in the vice issue, and which as matter of fact the American people are rapidly coming to in the liquor issue—and that is, that the whole accursed institution must stop.

SOPHISTRY.

Yes, some men would go out of business, some United States revenue would have to be raised in some other way, some banks would have to change accounts, some laborers would have to find more profitable employment elsewhere, some coal would be released for the warming of shivering families or the propelling of more productive engines—there would have to be some adjustment of course; there always must be when any new improvement is introduced into society, but the result is benefit not injury. I say again, I count it axiomatic that if the product is bad society benefits when the producing agency ceases. If the product of the Peoria distillery is bad product, then we bless Peoria when we smother the distillery fires. How long will the people be blinded by that sophistry which argues that if ten cents worth of good is done by one dollar's worth of harm the bargain is a good one? How long will society count respectable those men and those businesses whose income is in the thousands from the hurt they work on society, if only they dole out in charity and the employment of labor some scores or hundreds of dollars as recompense? How long will we forgive men for slaughtering innocents if only they continue to be generous in burying the dead? How long will society accept without murmur the candidates or hospitals, prisons and insane asylums, if only the business which makes them inebriate and criminal will continue to build their retreats? How long will people tolerate the distillery whose veriest by-product is possibly a paltry good when the great overshadowing output of that institution, its real product, is death, damnation and the whole category of human undoing.

PROOF THAT THE EGGS ARE BAD.

Bad? Would you argue it? Dare you contend at that point? It is at that point only that you can possibly save the day, but I assert that you do not dare deny that the product of the distillery is bad product. Based on the study of statistics for the year 1908, Edward B. Phelps issued a book that was counted conservative in spirit and scientific in method in which he concluded that 66,000 men and women died annually in this country because of the direct or indirect effect of the product of the distillery. Again the most horrible crime known to humanity was perpetrated by an eighteen-year-old boy on the fourteen-year-old daughter of a well-known judge in this state. This was his explanation: "I had drunk about a pint of whisky and eight bottles of beer the night before;" and Collier's Weekly rises to remark, "Who are the Brewers and Whisky makers who stimulated this crime and made money out of it by supplying liquor to a dealer in a Prohibition town? They are probably highly respectable citizens of Peoria where no social odium attends the making of money by the stimulation of vice. If the Chicago Tribune can identify these men and print their photographs, it will add one more to the many public services which have distinguished that paper." Bad product, bad business, therefore; and in spite of all this great list of the fine and glorious things which the whisky business does for Peoria, the sooner that it dies the better for the nation, the state, the city itself.

CONSTRUCTIVE INDUSTRIES.

This insolent business has so dictated the policy of this city, and so coerced the wills and almost the intelligences of this people that it now asserts with some expectation that it will be believed that it —the distilling business—is the one great industry of Peoria, and that the success of Peoria's future is inextricably intertwined with the success of the distillery. In my opinion the exact opposite is the truth. Peoria will succeed, will flourish among the cities, in the proportion of her emancipation from this tyrannical usurper. The good eggs in Peoria's basket are the industries whose products are constructive of society's comfort and well-being. The constructive industries produce real machines, put out farm implements that are to help in raising food products, make real wire, real automobiles, real mowers, reapers, wagons, plows. The constructive industries see to the distribution and sale of all these things, they are the wholesale houses of groceries, dry goods, shoes and machines, and if the money that is now invested in making the stuff which destroys society were but invested in the constructive industries Peoria then might be proud. Peoria then might prosper. There are no distilleries in Des Moines but Des Moines seems fairly prosperous; it has outstripped Peoria in population. Minneapolis has no distilleries, but Minneapolis is fairly prosperous. It takes all that raw grain called wheat by the millions of bushels and instead of making it into poison makes it into flour and feeds instead of debauches the world. Peoria could sell her corn without converting it into whisky. There are enough hungry mouths even in America to take care of all those extra bushels. Minneapolis has gotten on fairly well by keeping her wheat for good products, she has a population of about 350,000 today, and Peoria would really begin to prosper if from the poison business she would turn her wealth to the productive industries, her grain into food, her coal into human comforts, her labor into that which satisfieth. Let us look briefly at some of the facts:

SOME FACTS.

For $1,000,000 invested in liquor, seventy-seven men are employed; for $1,000,000 invested in iron, 248 men are employed; for the same amount in the paper industry, 367 are employed; $1,000,000 in leather calls for 469 men, in textiles for 578 men, in lumber for 579 men. That is to say, the same amount of money invested in other and productive industries in Peoria would employ five times as many workmen as Peoria's distillery investment calls for. Would that help or hurt the city? Would that decrease or increase the number of its homes? Would it add to or subtract from the chances of increased population? If you convert your distillery investments into bona-fide manufactories, will you hurt or help your community?

I am told that reliable figures for 1910 place the number of men employed by Peoria's implement factories at 3,200 and the wages paid to these same men is $2,335,000. I have not the figures, but I am creditably informed that the number of laborers relative to the amount of capital invested is far smaller in the distillery business than in the implement business in Peoria. Verily, Peoria's eggs are not all in one basket. Its good eggs are none of them in the basket we are so eagerly besought to watch.

Again, what of those 12,000,000 bushels of corn? I have already indicated the answer. They are consumed in Peoria today, that is true. They might be shipped away from Peoria if the distilleries closed. That also is true. But would that disturb the prosperity of Peoria? Would not that money go into other industries and would not that corn go for better uses? Poison is its product now; it does its share toward slaying 66,000 human lives per annum now; then it would feed cattle and hogs, it would nourish the bodies which now is destroys. I ask if in all reason there ought not to be some statute making it criminal waste to take food product and convert it wholesale into the elixir of debauch?

NOTHING TO BE PROUD OF.

Yes, the distilleries pay a tremendous internal revenue tax. That is not the measure of their glory but of their shame. Perhaps it complicates the problem, perhaps it makes more difficult of passage any legislation that looks toward disturbing the source of governmental revenue, but that proves nothing toward the legitimacy of its claim to being a defensible business. The man who consumes the liquor pays four and five times as much for it as the government receives from the manufacturer for the privilege of making it. The internal revenue tax is less than one-fourth of what the consumer pays for his liquor; which, when re-stated, means somewhat as follows: The distillery busiess in Peoria pays the United States government $35,000,000 yearly for the privilege of taking $150,000,000 yearly out of the dinner pail and off the backs of the nation's workers. It does that and wants to be praised for it. It builds a battleship costing ten million dollars and asks Uncle Sam's sons and daughters to give back forty millions by way of even exchange—not forty millions alone but forty millions plus all the wreckage that purchased whisky does in home and hospital and prison. It does that and seeks to pose as a benefactor. It gives one million dollars for four million dollars and insists that every dollar it receives shall be blood money and paid at the sacrifice of human comforts. If the facts could be known the distillery would not boast of its help to the government in the payment of internal revenue. If Peoria's internal revenue alone could pay for the Panama Canal in five years, it means that the consumers of Peoria's liquor pay every single year for that which tends to destroy them an amount sufficient to pay the whole canal bill.

EVIL CANNOT BE GOOD.

It is the same reasoning which enables them to point with pride to their contributions to almshouses, hospitals and prisons while it is the product of their business that makes all these institutions necessary. It is the same sophistical reasoning which makes them argue that, in case their business should be wiped out, it would not be the big distillers who would suffer but the army of employees. Alas the poor laborer! But have you read what John Lennon, treasurer of the American Federation of Labor, has to say of the whisky business in relation to the worker? "Every element of influence that the saloon exercises upon human society, is antagonistic to every thing that organized labor stands for," writes he. It is against all increase in wages. "The saloon is sending more children into the factory, the mines, the mills and shops, that might be at school or play, than the influence of the trade union has been able to eliminate either by direct action or legislation." Oh, you need not waste any tears on the laboring man in connection with anything that looks toward the suppression of the liquor traffic! And you need not weep for your city if you see the laws of the land pressing in upon its distillery business. Mr. Dan Sheen is responsible for the story that not long ago in a large gathering some one shouted: "What's the matter with Illinois?" and from over on the other side of the hall the answer came: "Peoria!" And Peoria will continue to be the matter with Illinois so long as it undertakes to deceive itself into thinking that its gigantic manufactory of evil can somehow or other be a good.

LLOYD GEORGE AGAINST LIQUOR.

Lloyd George, one of the truly able statesmen of the age, says: "If we are going to found the prosperity of the country, its commercial prosperity, its industrial prosperity, upon an impregnable basis, we must cleanse the foundation of the rot of alcohol. If we are going to deal with the problem of unemployment—and any government must take that into account—we must first of all put an end to the mischievous operations of the great recruiting sergeants of the unemployed army—drink, with its press-gang of public houses. If we are going to deal with the problem of the housing of the people, what is the good of doing it when you know that as long as drink is allowed a free hand on the hearth the result will be that, although you may convert every slum into a garden city, other garden cities will soon be reduced to slums again? That is why I rejoice that the government, called to power, as I think, to redress long-standing wrongs, to remedy old evils which have festered for generations, has made up its mind to devote the prime of its strength to dealing firmly, dealing thoroughly, and dealing I hope once for all, with the greatest evil and the greatest wrong of all of them."

HE NEEDED THE MONEY.

Upton Sinclair told this story about a school address he once made: "It was a school of little boys," said Mr. Sinclair, "and I opened my address by laying a coin upon the table. 'I am going to talk about socialism,' I said, 'and when I finish, the boy who gives me the best reason for turning socialist will get the money.' The boys were all converted. I began to question them. 'You are a socialist,' I said to the first. 'Yes, sir,' he replied. 'And why are you a socialist?' I asked. He pointed to the coin. 'Because I need the money,' he said."

The Disciples Must Have a Creed!

A Humorous Article on An Exceedingly Serious Situation.

BY PERRY J. RICE.

DISCIPLES OF CHRIST must have a creed, a formulated statement of fundamental doctrines, and it must be made authoritative. Men and women who would teach in our institutions of learning or occupy positions of trust among us must assent to it, and ultimately all who would enjoy our fellowship must declare themselves in hearty accord with it.

I have been slow in arriving at this conclusion, but I have fully arrived and I am satisfied that many others have reached the same conclusion. To be sure, for a century and more we have insisted upon the impropriety of such instruments, but times and conditions have changed. Our contention has been heard and heeded by others, but it no longer applies to ourselves. As one of our ablest men has well said: "The drift of the Protestant world ever since we started our contention has been away from the idea of authoritative creeds. However, it seems to me," he adds, "that the tendency of the present time is to go to the opposite extreme and insist upon a freedom of belief that would endanger the life of Christianity itself."

It is therefore our solemn duty to call a halt. Are we not responsible, in large measure, for this deplorable condition of things? Of course we did not intend to allow such freedom and latitude of investigation and speech, but great numbers of people have taken advantage of the liberty we advocated and have been saying strange things. Quoting from a recent article in one of our church papers: "We never intended to hold up the idea that it is not permitted to any body of Christian men in any capacity to require from any one a statement of faith as to the fundamentals of our holy religion." And since we have acquired a history and a standing as a people we feel that it is proper also to require a statement "as to the genius and purpose of our religious movement." If we are not permitted to do this "how can a church or a college protect itself against rationalistic or infidel teaching?"

CAN NO LONGER TRUST OTHERS.

There was a time when we felt we could trust each other, when we even went so far as to feel that we could trust the on-coming generations to state religion for themselves in their own terms, but it is now evident that we can not do so. Experience has proven the unwisdom of such a policy. Men have abused their freedom and have promulgated heresies which can not be tolerated. There have been a few dreamy souls among us who have felt that in the free exchange of ideas we should find a corrective for one another's eccentricities and heretical tendencies. But new ideas have been so numerous of late and their advocates have been so insistent that we dare not trust ourselves and our holy cause to such a course any longer.

Once we deemed it quite sufficient that a man should avow his faith in the terms of Peter's noble confession at Caesarea Phillippi. Upon that simple confession we have admitted people to baptism and to our church fellowship, and into such a place in our counsels as they merited. We had the rather naive conviction that in the free exercise of individual opinion and judgment every man would sooner or later find his level and that the true worth of every contention or propaganda would quickly be disclosed. There was a splendid idealism about such a position that appealed to the imagination of many people; but to our sorrow and chagrin we find that it will not work. While a few of us have succeeded in "jollying" ourselves into the belief that the men in our colleges are loyal, some of us are aware that "the wish is father to the thought." We are fully convinced that many modern heresies have already taken deep root in our institutions of learning.

PETER'S CONFESSION NOT SUFFICIENT.

Moreover, we now see that this simple Petrine confession is not sufficient. We must define its terms. When any one confesses Christ now he must do so in language that will make it perfectly clear that he is not a Unitarian but a Trinitarian. It is true Isaac Errett once said that we Disciples are neither Unitarian nor Trinitarian, but that was in the days when we were still of the opinion that a man could adequately express his faith in the language of the New Testament. We now know, by bitter experience, that it must be expressed more specifically. It is a little humiliating for us to have to fall back upon the language of the creeds which we have so long repudiated, but we must do it and we may as well face the fact.

One of our able theologians recently wrote out his confession which involved belief "in God the Father, in Jesus Christ his divine and only begotten son, and in the inspiration of the Scriptures." It reads well, but one of our wealthy laymen, while commending its form, declares that it would be "useless without defining what is meant by such words as 'divine,' 'inspiration,' 'son,' etc." It is plain to be seen therefore that we must have a creed to define for all of us these New Testament terms. There was something after all of vital importance in all those controversies of the past. We have been entirely wrong in supposing that the Scriptures furnish an all-sufficient rule of faith and practice. They must be authoritatively interpreted, and we dare not any longer concede the right of private interpretation.

REASON IS PLAIN.

The reason for this change of front on our part lies on the surface. Certain men, who profess to be scholars have been doing their work on the assumption that there is more to be known about God, about Christ and about the Scriptures than our fathers knew. They have been unable to digest them, and and have used very freely the liberty which has been accorded them. The result is, a whole batch of new ideas and hypotheses have been offered us and we have been unable to digest them and feel instinctively that they must be heresies. This mischief must be stopped and the way to do it is to forever settle the question as to what is permissible to hold and teach regarding the Christian religion, and put it in a form that will be authoritative.

The necessity for this sort of thing has often been felt before, and more than once, under similar circumstances, councils of wise men have been held to do the very thing that we now feel must be done again. The plan has not worked very well in the past, but we know more now. May it not be safely, though humbly affirmed that we who have so zealously sought to restore the primitive gospel have succeeded, and are able to give it its final setting, especially if we confine our statement to the fundamentals?

WE HAVE THE MEN TO DO IT.

We have some very competent men among us who have carefully avoided any contact with the institutions of learning and research that have been so bold in the use of Christian liberty. They have confined their reading pretty largely to the Scriptures, our current literature and a few books which our sages have published, and would therefore be undisturbed by modern heresies. Some of them have great renown. One has been honored by the government in times past. He has traveled "under ten flags" and throughout a long ministry has been accustomed to giving final and absolute statement to religious truth. It is understood moreover that he has been practicing the art of creed-making of late, and considers himself quite competent to state for his brethren and for all the world the essence of Christian truth. Besides this, a wealthy layman has published a book in which one of our college presidents "has found nothing from which to dissent" and in case any question should ever arise about any man's loyalty to these proposed standards of orthodoxy the whole matter could be easily adjusted by referring to the teaching of this book.

Indeed it seems to me we are in fine position to do for Christianity and the Church universal just what has needed to be done for a long time, and thus put an end to all controversies and all heresies. Others have tried to do this and have failed, for lack of knowledge no him five sciences in a single year: two months each in physics, botany, zoology, geology and astronomy. Such books as Steele's "Fourteen Weeks in Zoology," etc., will be recalled in this connection. But today the high schools ask the student to spend at least a full year on each science that he undertakes in order that he may not contract intellectual indigestion. In our colleges this element of time is being recognized. Classes that formerly recited five hours a week for one semester, now recite two or three hours per week for two semesters. No more material is covered, but the pupil has time to organize his new facts around the other facts of his experience, and his knowledge when acquired is practical and usable and not a detached body of matter to be recalled by the aid of memory devices.

It has been a mistake to try to introduce a student to Old and New Testament, Biblical Geography, Genetic Psychology, Pedagogy, Organization and Administration of Religious Education—all in fifty weeks with one recitation per week. In other words our scheme of twenty lessons on the Bible, ten on the child, ten on the teacher and ten on the school is contrary to the learning process and must fail, regardless of the manner in which the texts are written. We have tried to dilute the medicine in order to give all kinds at once and produce a quick cure. But there is no royal road to learning—and even religious education must recognize the laws of the mind. Psychology and pedagogy demand the extending of the time or the elimination of many of the branches of study. No other branch of education would think of trying to organize or even introduce so many bodies of knowledge in so brief a time, and religious education must not attempt the impossible.

TECHNICAL TERMINOLOGY NEEDED.

Still another defect in the literature of the first standard course is the avoidance of technical terminology. Accuracy of statement requires the use of a technical vocabulary. Dr. Henry Wallace, editor of Wallace's Farmer, in defense of the technical terminology used in government agricultural bulletins, says: "People soon learn to use familiarly technical terms of any science or art, if they are really interested in that science or art. Automobile terms are Sanskrit to me, because I am not interested in automobiles, but they are as my native tongue to my children and grandchildren. To cattle feeders, protein, carbohydrates, and fat are quite as familiar as flesh-formers, heat-makers and bone-builders; and so on all through. We master technical terms when we are interested in the subject." In the field of religious education we have kept our pupils on the non-technical "teen age" literature until they cannot read a standard text on adolescence.

These subjects can be presented in such a manner as to create increased capacity for study and investigation. Farm bulletins use technical language, but each technical term is clearly defined and illustrated on the same page on which the term occurs. It is the function of the farm journals to help the farmer interpret his bulletins. In the field of religious education the same method should be followed and the Sunday-school papers should help to illuminate the themes discussed in the text-books.

The average man might not be able to find interest in the ordinary high school physics, but if he owns a gasoline engine or an automobile, he can comprehend a book of more than high school grade, bearing upon the principles of physics required for the operation of the engine or the automobile. The problem of the extension teacher is to rewrite the text in terms of the experience and problems of those who are to use the text.

KIND OF TEXT-BOOKS NEEDED.

Those who wish to create a body of teachers with the professional spirit must address themselves to the same problem. Such text-books will be thorough, scientific and practical, and they will give increased capacity for the mastery of advanced work in the same field.

Types of books which make psychology and pedagogy simple and at the same time preserve scientific accuracy and cultivate a capacity for further study are Betts, "The Mind and Its Education," and "The Recitation." These books are selected because they are among the most popular books now used in training the rural school teachers of the nation. They can be used with success in the third year of the average high school, and it is safe to say that the average Sunday-school teacher can master that which is within the grasp of high school juniors. Such books as these are to be commended as models for those writers who are preparing text-books for Sunday-school teachers.

This report demands the rewriting of the first Standard Course text-books in terms of the problems of the teacher, and in harmony with sound educational principles. It demands also the extension of the time in which the work is to be done. The writers of most of the present text-books in order to put four bodies of knowledge into fifty brief lessons have either condensed their matter until it was indigestible (notice the discussion on sensation and perception, quoted above) or they have diluted the subject matter until it became substanceless, and meaningless (note the quotation on work and play, given above.)

There would be no objection to a one-year course provided it was entirely given over to a single field, i. e., Bible study and provided also that the quality of the subject matter was satisfactory.

In insisting on the revision of the text-books the committee wishes to insist that the poorer the teachers and the teaching equipment, the better the text-book must be.

The courses provided in this report give continuity of work and they provide all the elasticity necessary for departmental specialization.

SUMMARY.

This investigation has already shown:

1. That the results in increased teaching efficiency are entirely inadequate when compared to the time and energy expended.
2. That 51 per cent of the enrolment fails to complete the course.
3. That the reading habit has not been created, and libraries have not been encouraged.
4. That a sense of self-sufficiency has been created in those who are unprepared.
5. That the First Standard course has not served as an incentive to more advanced study.
6. That the First Standard text-books have been inadequate in both the quantity and quality of their content.
7. That the element of time required for the learning process has been ignored in the "50 lesson" scheme.
8. That the average Sunday-school teacher is prepared to pursue a much higher type of work than that provided in the First Standard courses, and that such courses are now offered to the same people in secular branches by extension bureaus of state and nation.
9. That text-books of the newer type are available in all the fields of religious education.

For these reasons our committee recommends a revision of the existing standards to harmonize with the recognized principles of education and to meet existing educational needs. Every phase of the program here presented has been put to practical test under the personal observation of members of this committee.

[Dean Athearn's proposed "Revision of Teacher Training Standards" will be published in a later number of The Christian Century.—Editor.]

The World's Verdict

BY THOMAS CURTIS CLARK.

One sent out his ships to earth's farthest shores,
And brought to his coffers the Orient's stores;
  The wild desert sands
  Became gold in his hands,
And the world called him genius—and wondered.

One sought out the secrets of planet and star;
He reveled in problems of granite and spar;
  He thirsted to know
  All the earth could bestow;
And the world called him scholar—and praised him.

One looked on a suffering, down-trodden race;
He wept as he gazed upon each troubled face;
  He heeded their plea,
  And he set their hands free;
And the world called him brother—and loved him.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

UNITY BY EXCOMMUNICATION.

NORTHERN California Disciples, meeting in annual convention at Santa Cruz week before last voted by a considerable majority to unseat the delegates representing the First Church at Berkeley.

The resolution adopted by the convention was virtually the same, we are informed, as that adopted a month or so prior at a meeting of representatives of eight or nine churches of the bay district at San Francisco, which resolution with its preamble was as follows:

Whereas: the First Christian Church of Berkeley has departed from the historic position of the Christian Churches in the manner of receiving members into its fellowship; and

Whereas: this church is seeking to introduce its divisive plan into other Christian churches in California; and

Whereas: we believe this so-called open membership plan is contrary to the teachings of the New Testament, contrary to the teachings and practice of our churches for more than a century, contrary to sound public policy in our Christian commonwealth, and destructive of all true missionary work; and

Whereas: we believe the First Church of Berkeley has by its own deliberate act removed itself from the fellowship of our common brotherhood; now therefore, be it

Resolved: that the First Church of Berkeley is not a member of this district convention of Christian Churches, and cannot be such a member until such time as it shall publicly return to the historic position of Christian Churches.

The bay district procedure differed from the state convention procedure in that no chance was given the church or pastor for participation in the deliberations or for defense against the charges recited in the preamble, while at the state convention the debate lasted for four hours with Rev. H. J. Loken, the pastor, and eight delegates from Berkeley church present and claiming fellowship. The convention was the largest in its history. It was manifest that the reactionary sentiment had been well organized beforehand under the leadership of Rev. D. A. Russell, dean of the Berkeley Bible Seminary, and Rev. E. B. Ware, editor of the Christian Church News, a state organ, and with the encouragement of Rev. A. C. Smither, of St. Louis, Mo., who since becoming manager of The Christian Evangelist has been especially active in fomenting division and strife in connection with the Berkeley situation.

The drastic character of the action taken at Santa Cruz is indicated by a member of the Berkeley church who writes as follows: "We are now, to all intents and purposes, excommunicated from the fellowship of Disciple churches in California. They will not recognize our delegates nor receive our offerings of money, nor tolerate our coöperation in any manner."

The resolution was introduced by Rev. E. B. Ware.

Rev. A. C. Smither made the principal address in favor of it.

Rev. H. O. Breeden, pastor at Fresno, led in opposing the resolution, and in advocating the seating of the Berkeley delegates, but his substitute resolution was defeated.

This action is the most flagrant if not the only case of excommunicating a church in the whole history of the Disciples of Christ. It will do more to convince the Christian world of the utter insincerity of our plea for Christian unity than any single act of ours that the Christian world has ever witnessed.

What is the offense of the Berkeley church?

Just this: in loyalty to Christ it has resolved to receive into its fellowship any person whom Christ has received into his Church.

For doing what Christ has already done, and what is plainly his will it should do, it suffers excommunication from the fellowship of a group of churches claiming to stand for Christian unity!

Will the action of the California convention be approved by the conscience of the Disciples of Christ of the nation?

To believe that it will is to despair utterly of ever reaching the goal which has been the inspiration of our hundred years of history.

Without doubt the excommunication of Berkeley church is destined to become a historic event.

THE DIVIDING LINE.

WHERE is the dividing line between geology and astronomy? You might say that geology's sphere is under foot and astronomy owns everything overhead, but the geologist will not consent. Neither will the astronomers assume responsibility for what is happening in the atmosphere of the earth, most of which, that is to say smoke and grime, and fog and clouds is much in their way. The pin-point line of division between these two sciences is not the surface of the earth, but a distance above it. How far above? That is an interesting question. A few nights ago we asked Professor Chamberlain, of the University of Chicago, and he answered immediately that the geologists owned everything up to 620,000 miles from the earth's center, that is to say about one million kilometers. That, he said, is the point at which the attraction of the earth meets and neutralizes that of the sun. Up to that limit, he thinks, there must be atmosphere, exceedingly attenuated, but still belonging to earth. There are no rocks for geologists to break, unless a stray meteorite, now and then, and no air to breathe while breaking them, save this highly purified air; but even so, there is a distinct line where the work of the astronomer ends and that of the geologist begins. We are glad to know this. We assume that while there can be no actual neutral zone, there is no necessity of a survey. No one is camping on that Rio Grande of the sky awaiting the finding of a board of arbitration. The geologists and astronomers have agreed upon the limit for themselves. We are glad of it. We do not want to be asked to go there and measure any disputed boundary. It is better for the parties at issue to settle it out of court. Six hundred and twenty thousand miles it is. Call the next case.

DO PEOPLE READ THE CLASSICS?

IN AN entertaining paper in The Atlantic it is charged that people no longer read the great authors: "The reading of the great past literature has become a specialty, abandoned with obvious relief by the general reader to the conduct of the select few authors. Tested by range and power alike, the spell of Dickens was perhaps the most potent ever exercised by literature, and its appeals were to elementary and perennial instincts; but the youth of today are impervious to that magic which fifty years ago counted Dickens among the reasons for being glad to be alive."

To this the New York Nation replies:

"This is plausible, and it isn't so. Scan the literary columns of today, and the impression cannot be avoided that Wells and Shaw and Masefield and Bennett not only have more meaning to us than Dickens has, but that Dickens has really no meaning at all, for the reason that he died before a great many of those who write and read literary columns were born. But this is what we have called generalizing from newspapers. For that matter, it is unjust to the newspapers. For, by turning from the leading literary articles to the minor literary notes, and, better still, to the book advertisements, we shall find that Dickens is not dead. If we supplement our researches in the publishers' catalogues with statistics from the circulating libraries, we shall find that the magic of Dickens is far from vanished. It would be a perfectly safe wager to make that Dickens has many more readers than Shaw or Wells or Bennett; and that he moves them with greater potency.

"No; the reading of the great past literature has not been abandoned by the general reader. The critic who would maintain this, in face of the plainest facts, simply shows that he is himself a victim of the passing cult of the hour, mistaking speed for depth and mere assertion for reality. The publishers of the Everyman's Library have sold dead authors to the extent of millions of volumes. The publishers of Doctor Eliot's famous five-foot book shelf assert that they have disposed of very dead writers by the million. The encyclopedias, concerning themselves as they do with a vast mass of dead literature, dead history, dead art, dead religion, nevertheless continue to sweep the country. We have never been inclined to take too seriously the immense commercial vogue of the standard "sets," the near de luxe editions of the Jane Austens, the Trollopes, with the Balzacs and Voltaires. We have regarded the primary appeal of those long lines of handsome volumes as largely in the nature of wall decoration. Yet even of this immense body of subscription library furniture a very considerable portion cannot in the nature of things fail to become something more than that. Bought as so many yards of gay binding, it ends by being discovered as literature in thousands of homes."

VULGARITY AT WEDDINGS

WE are always glad of a healthy protest against hoodlumism at weddings. Not that we object to mirth or even to a certain good-natured boisterousness, but the conditions are often unpardonably rude. The Saturday Evening Post has this sensible word headed "Here Comes the Bride."

"She comes breathless, perspiring and more or less dishevveled, pursued and surrounded by some well-dressed male and female rowdies who throw rice and confetti at her, while their clamor announces to the passengers lounging in the station or looking from the car windows that she has just been a party to a ceremony which some old-fashioned folks regard as having a rather sacred character or at least as being of a peculiarly tender and intimate nature. It is well known that in several more primitive communities marriage is attended by demonstrations of a frank and rude sort, which, however, have a certain robust validity; but we could never understand why a marriage between well-conditioned and presumably at least half-educated Americans should be made an occasion for public horseplay."

THE COST TO UNCLE SAM.

WHOEVER starts an exposition, the most liberal patron is Uncle Sam. According to the present outlook, when the sundry civil bill, now pending in Congress, becomes a law, it will carry $730,000 for the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco. This will be in addition to the half million appropriated last year and probably an instalment of as much or more to come, before or after the event, because in all these enterprises the government has been the ultimate burden bearer and loser. One of the strong inducements urged by San Francisco in its competition with New Orleans for this privilege was that the promoters of the Exposition would not call upon the government for any contribution beyond that involved in a proper representation of its own dignity and resources. Whether these appropriations, present and prospective, are to be limited to that function, time alone will show. If they are, it will be the first time in over half a century when Uncle Sam has not been called upon for avuncular assistance. The St. Louis Exposition was the most exhaustive in its demands, taking from the national treasury over eleven million dollars. The Columbian show at Chicago cost the government nearly six millions, and altogether since 1860 these affairs have cost the United States over thirty millions. No doubt substantial returns have come from them, but repetition stales and whatever the local benefits may be we believe their national value to be about exhausted. There was a time when "Uncle Sam was rich enough to give us all a farm." His farms are getting scarce; but he appears to be rich enough to scatter expositions rather lavishly.

WE SHALL MISS THE COLONEL.

IN LETTERS published in The Outlook, Colonel Roosevelt resigns his position as one of the editors of that publication, and Dr. Lyman Abbott accepts the resignation. Colonel Roosevelt has had a good time being editor, but he feels constrained to go farther in his fight for what he believes to be good citizenship than it would be right to ask The Outlook to go with him. He must fight, as he believes, not only the Republican party, but also the present administration, which he regards as having betrayed our national honor. He sees ahead of him a fight more fierce than The Outlook, in its relations to its general policy and constituency, should be required to make on his behalf, and therefore he resigns to be more free to fight the battle to a finish. The Colonel in his letter of resignation expresses for Doctor Abbott and The Outlook his unwavering affection, and Doctor Abbott in accepting expresses undiminished affection for and confidence in Mr. Roosevelt. The letters as published are entirely creditable to both gentlemen and we doubt not both are entirely sincere.

Again Mr. Roosevelt's hat is in the ring. Whether he will seek office for himself he does not say, but it will become almost inevitable that he should be a candidate. He will not be able, even if he should desire, to withdraw his own personality from politics. And, with his convictions, there is no reason why he should do so.

Good copy will issue from Oyster Bay from this time forth. Mr. Roosevelt will have something to say on very nearly all national questions, and the political pot will boil merrily.

But we shall miss the Colonel from the editorial circle, and shall still think of him as one of us. When he comes this way we shall be dee-lighted to have him visit our sanctum, and we will do our strenuous best to give him what he calls a bully time.

TO LOVE, AT LAST, THE VICTORY.

By David Starr Jordan.

There was a man who saw God face to face.
  His countenance and vestments evermore
  Glowed with a light that never shone before,
Saving from him who saw God face to face.
And men, anear him for a little space,
    Were sorely vexed at the unwonted light.
Those whom the light did blind rose angrily;
    They bore his body to a mountain height
  And nailed it to a tree; then went their way;
  And he resisted not nor said them nay,
Because that he had seen God face to face.

There was a man who saw Life face to face,
  And ever as he walked from day to day,
  The deathless mystery of being lay
Plain as the path he trod in loneliness;
And each deep-hid inscription could he trace;
  How men have fought and loved and fought again;
  How in lone darkness souls cried out for pain;
How each green foot of sod from sea to sea
Was red with blood of men slain wantonly;
  How tears of pity warm as summer rain
Again and ever washed the stains away,
    Leaving to Love, at last, the victory.
  Above the strife and hate and fever pain,
The squalid talk and walk of sordid men,
  He saw the vision changeless as the stars
  That shone through temple gates or prison bars,
  Or to the body nailed upon the tree,
Through each mean action of the life that is,
    The marvel of the Life that yet shall be.

New York Laymen Plan Personal Work.

The Laymen's Efficiency League, representing a thousand men in the Episcopal church in Greater New York, reports the finding of sentiment among New York laymen of the church that they are more than willing to take hold and help with personal work if they can be shown that practical results will follow. The same men say they find in the recent methods of Sunday-school sessions and conduct of the average parish nothing that seems likely to get anywhere. The same men declare they are not irreligious and do not stay away from vital connection with organized church effort for any reason other than it seems to fail to arrive at a worth while goal. The league plans a church efficiency congress in New York in October and has been granted official buildings including Trinity Church at the head of Wall Street, for its meetings. The league declared against a programme of work for laymen that separates the religious from the secular and insists that all work, including politics, has in it the Christian spirit. In its announcements just issued the league affirms that the church, meaning it says the whole Christian propaganda, Catholic and Protestant, offers the greatest opportunity to men to reach and benefit mankind and that the same church is not prescribing methods that appeal to active progressive laymen. The purpose of the congress is to proclaim methods that will appeal to men. While in charge of laymen in the Episcopal Church special invitations have been ordered sent to leaders in all other bodies to join in formulating plans. One thousand laymen have pledged to attend the congress.

Chicago Y. M. C. A. Gets Bequest.

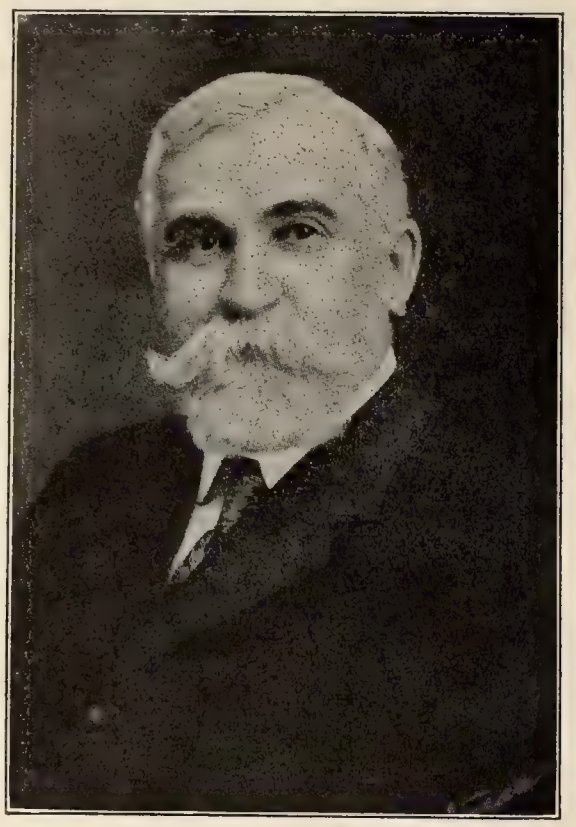
The sum of $812,787.57 was received by the Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago as its portion of the estate of the late Thomas Murdock. The executors have completed their work and have turned over to the association as its final share of the estate the sum of $85,418.31, according to the official bulletin of the association. This is the largest bequest ever received by any Y. M. C. A. With others that have been received and the jubilee fund of more than $1,000,000 raised several years ago, it constitutes the endowment fund of the Chicago association, which is said to be the richest in the world, having buildings and other property valued at betwen $3,000,000 and $4,000,000.

Salvation Army Holds World's Congress.

Delegates to the world's congress of the Salvation Army, held in London recently, filled to capacity a specially erected hall having accommodation for 4,000. Representatives of forty-five nations and colonies were present and twenty-three different languages were spoken by the delegates. It was the greatest "rally" ever achieved by the army. Among the delegates a conspicuous place was taken by the large contingent from the United States under the command of Miss Eva Booth. A message was read from Premier Asquith, who warmly congratulated the Salvation Army on behalf of the government for its success in bringing together the international congress. The premier wished continued success to the army's world-wide activities, "which have for so long excited the admiration of Christian men and women of all denominations."

Dr. Macdonald on World's Needs.

J. A. Macdonald, editor-statesman of Toronto, Canada, says that the world's nine greatest needs are: (1) A new and worthy idea of the supreme worth of human personality. (2) Indignant and determined fighting against everything in state and church that degrades or weakens individual responsibility. (3) A revision of the standards of society so that greatness will be allied, not with position and property, but with service. (4) The aceptance of love and not self-interest as the supreme social motive. (5) The insistence on the rights of the many as against the privileges of the few. (6) A strong sense of the interdependence of all classes in every community and of all nations throughout the world. (7) A redemption of politics from the scheming of the selfish—individuals as well as corporations. (8) The conviction that better laws, alike for the individuals and for the nations, must be backed up and made vital by the power of an ethical and self-denying love. (9) Insistence on the sinfulness of sin in all lives and the impartial application of one just, moral standard to men and women alike.



Mr. W. N. Hartshorn, retiring president of the International Sunday-school Association, who has just given over $100,000 to educational work.

Chicagoan Aids Colored Y. M. C. A.'s.

Mr. Julius Rosenwald, of Chicago, whose gifts to the Y. M. C. A. work among the colored people have attracted wide attention, has signalized his interest in the education of negroes by a proposition to the effect that he will duplicate all gifts for negro rural public schools in the South. The proposition of Mr. Rosenwald comes as a spur to the colored people themselves to improve their own rural schools. Every dollar they give out of their poverty for self-help he will match with a dollar to help them.

Churchman Gave Millions to Poor.

The character of Dr. W. B. Palmore, deceased editor and leader of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is shown by the statement of Dr. J. W. Lee, pastor of St. John's Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in St. Louis, which is as follows: "There is not a preacher in America or Europe who would have given up a claim to ten million dollars' worth of coal fields to let squatters and poor families live undisturbed on the estate, and that is what Doctor Palmore did. He was an inspired millionaire, a prophet who surrendered a fortune for an ideal. Starting from the city to Charleston, W. Va., he drove in a buggy into the region where his plantation was located. He traced the boundaries of his immense property and found that hundreds of families had settled on it and were living as if secure in the possession of their little patch of territory. He knew that beneath the surface of this land there was almost limitless wealth, but the multitudes who had built humble homes on this land did not know of it. He walked about at night and looked through the windows at the parents and the children living on his estate. After earnest prayer and sleepless hours in the midst of his vast acres he was seized with the conviction that each member of this multitude of families living on his estate needed it more than did the heir and he made up his mind that he would leave them in quiet possession rather than dispossess them, thus making them miserable and wretched." Dr. Palmore began his career by giving away ten millions of dollars to the poor, and closed it by leaving $140,000 that he had earned by economy and hard work, for the benefit of humanity as represented by his church.

Methodist Paper Notes Unity Move.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate notes, as "an important step toward church unity," that an Episcoplian Bishop has consented that a Presbyterian minister deliver a series of addresses in an Episcopalian pulpit. The Advocate remarks: "One of the embarrassing hindrances in the way of the fellowship between Episcopal ministers and the clergymen of other Protestant denominations has been the strict view of ordination held by that church. The Episcopalian clergy consider themselves the successors in a direct line of the apostles. They have felt accordingly that ministers whose ordination was not in the line of the historic episcopate were not qualified to exercise the ministerial office in the Episcopal Church. However, Bishop Rhinelander of the diocese of Pennsylvania has given permission for the rector of St. Stephen's Church, Philadelphia, to have a Presbyterian minister deliver a series of Lenten addresses in his pulpit next year. Bishop Rhinelander contends that it is proper to admit the ministers of other denominations to Episcopalian pulpits on special occasions as prophets, notwithstanding the light in which the church regards the lack of their qualifications as priests. This action of Bishop Rhinelander is hailed with enthusiasm by many Episcopalian clergymen as permitting a closer relationship than has hitherto existed with other communions of Christians."

Conference On World-wide Peace.

The first conference on world-wide peace under the Church Peace Union founded by Andrew Carnegie will be held in Zurich, Switzerland, August 2-7, to be participated in by ministers of Europe and America. The conference will be a delegated body, the appointments being made by the Peace Union. About forty delegates will attend from the United States. Dr. Walter Rauschenbusch is among the speakers scheduled for the conference.

Prof. Graham Taylor Lauds Church.

The following is an extract from the presidential address of Professor Graham Taylor, at the recent national Conference of Charities and Correction at Memphis. After some satirical comment upon the futility of much church work to meet the demands of the times, Proffesor Taylor said: "Nothing but a church will do. All the other schemes of democracy come to naught for want of that. The lecture platform is no substitute for Sinai. Democracy as a religion or nothing, with its doctrine, its form, its ritual, its ceremonies, its government as a church—above all, its organized sacrifice of the altar, the sacrifice of self. Democracy must get rid of the natural man, of each for himself, and have a new birth into the spiritual man, the essentially religious animal, to face the most tremendous of all problems—social justice."

World's Temperance Sunday.

The Anti-Saloon League of America is planning to make World's Temperance Sunday, November 8, a great nation-wide temperance educational day. To this end it is offering literature and all supplies for a temperance service on that day free to all Sunday-schools and churches in the United States. Every Sunday-school superintendent or pastor reading this announcement, who would like to use these free supplies on World's Temperance Sunday, should send at once a postal card request for full information, to the Anti-Saloon League of America, Lincoln-Lee Legion Department, Westerville, O.

Does the Country Face a Crisis?

Mr. George W. Coleman, leader at the Sagamore Sociological Conference held last month in the East, gave some facts to show that we are facing a social crisis. "The majority of the people of this country prefer to remain outside of all religious bodies. One-tenth of the people own nine-tenths of the wealth," he said. President Harry Pratt Judson said conditions in this country are more like those which preceded the fall of the Roman Empire and the French Revolution than any other in history.

President Wilson Favors "Citizenship.

President Woodrow Wilson is in favor of the observance of "Good Citizenship Day" in October, as planned by the United Christian Endeavor Society, under the leadership of Mr. Daniel A. Poling, the society's citizenship secretary. The following letter was written to Mr. Poling by the President: "My dear Sir: Your letter of February seventh, which would have been answered sooner had I not been confined to my room with a cold, interests me very much indeed. I want to say very cordially that the observation of a "Good Citizenship Day" seems to me full of possibilities for the right kind of stimulation and instruction in the duties and privileges of good citizenship, and I hope sincerely that the plans for the observance of such a day may be carried to a successful consummation. As for the date to be chosen, I should think that probably the date that you suggest in October would find more people at their homes and at their customary occupations than the date immediately preceding the Fourth of July. Otherwise, I see no ground for preferring the one date to the other. Cordially and sincerely yours, WOODROW WILSON."

Religious Campaign for Mexico.

A report from New York states that a great religious and educational campaign in Mexico, in which all Protestant denominations will unite, is planned, now that peace is in sight. Bishop A. F. Oldham, chairman of the general committee representing the various mission boards, made the announcement last week. A large coeducational university will be established and at least one high school for each of the sexes will be opened in every mission territory. Schools of higher grades will be consolidated and each organized congregation will have its elementary school where domestic and manual arts will be taught. Bishop A. F. Oldham is enthusiastic over the plan.

International Lord's Day Congress.

The Panama-Pacific Exposition, to be held at San Francisco, Cal., in 1915, will attract the attention not only of America, but of the whole world. A distinguished feature will be the number and variety of congresses and conventions which will assemble in San Francisco and vicinity betwen the opening and closing of the Exposition—February 20-December 14. One of the most important and outstanding of these assemblies will be the International Lord's Day Congress, to be held in July. In keeping with the custom of giving large place to such a congress at international expositions, representatives of various Lord's Day and Sabbath organizations, since first meeting together in New York on January 22 last and determining upon such a congress, have given much time and thought to the development of all necessary plans. The preliminary arrangements are already well advanced. A general Committee of Arrangements has been organized and an Executive Committee elected, to which has been committed the principal work of perfecting the plans of the congress. President Wilson will serve as honorary chairman.

SAGAMORE SAYINGS.

Each man should be proud of the race to which he belongs, but prouder still that he is a human being and belongs to humanity.—Professor Daniel Evans.

The educated Negro wants a man's chance—no more, no less. The Negro begs for the chance to develop and cultivate his God-given faculties.—Dr. William DeBerry.

The Negro has not suffered from lack of schools of higher learning, but he has from want of elementary schools. He asks not for a fish, but a hook.—Dr. Riley.

To the thoughtful man there is no East and no West. Now about to meet, enrich each other and blend into one, the race awaits its higher evolution.—Dr. William Elliott Griffis.

Jewish cosmopolitanism, humanitarianism and world-embracing idealism should not be forgotten.—Dr. Nathaniel Schmidt.

I have learned that when my Christian neighbor goes to his church and when I go to the synagogue, we both take the same road—the road of righteousness. Miss Rogolsky, Jewess.

Dr. F. B. Meyer at Northfield.

The Young Women's Conference at Northfield, Mass., closed on July 8, having had an attendance of over 800 delegates, or 200 more than were present in 1913. Twenty-seven schools and colleges were represented, and the biggest city delegations were from Boston, Rochester and New York. The closing meeting of his conference was addressed by Rev. F. B. Meyer of London, who will be present throughout the remaining conferences. Two days after the young women left, the Summer School for Women's Foreign Missionary Societies assembled with over 800 delegates, a record attendance for this gathering. Doctor Meyer is one of the speakers of the Foreign Missionary gathering, and others to be heard frequently are Mrs. Henry W. Peabody, Deaconess Henrietta Goodwin and Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery. The Home Mission Summer School and the Summer School for Sunday-schoool workers will open on July 18 for one week each, and then the General Conference of Christian Workers will open on August 1 and last until the 16th. This is the biggest of the gatherings, and judging by the interest in the earlier of this year's assemblages the General Conference of 1914 will be a memorable one. Doctor Meyer will again be one of the leading speakers, and with him will be several others from Great Britain, and American clergymen of note representing several fellowships.

Bibles for Steamship Crew.

The American Bible Society presented each officer and member of the crew including firemen, stokers, and other employees on board the great steamship "Aquitania" with a Bible or some portion of it bound separately, in New York harbor recently before the ship sailed from that port.

Railroads Ask Religious Services.

The president of one of the chief railway systems in the United States has recently made an offer of rooms in stations, offices, and elsewhere for classes in religious education for railway men and as places of worship provided the churches will furnish instructors and leaders. The railway also promises to offer free transportation to those engaged in this work.

Gifts for Foreign Missions.

Some of last year's gifts for foreign missions: The Methodist Episcopal Church gave $2,376,608; the Protestant Church gave $1,913,608; the Presbyterian Episcipal Church gave $1,913,608; the Presbyterian Church gave $1,861,910; the Baptists of the Northern Convention gave $1,195,523.

Sunday-school Leader Endows Seminary.

Mr. William N. Hartshorn, of Boston, late president of the International Sunday-school Association, subscribed $120,000 to the endowment fund of the Northfield Seminary for Girls, as the gift of himself and his wife, lately deceased, Ella Ford Hartshorn.

From Fred B. Smith:

"The whole commercial and civic world is shot through and through with the principles of Jesus. The head of a great firm sends out seven hundred traveling men with the admonition, 'Remember that business today has to be conducted according to the principles of Jesus or you are going to get into trouble.'"

Of Human Interest

The Real Huerta.

A stature above that of the average of Mexicans; a rather bulky frame; rugged features; a massive, firmly set jaw; a complexion not much darker than that of the native of Southern Europe; brown eyes which frequently twinkle with humor and vivacity; a straggling, grizzled mustache—such are the physical characteristics of Victoriano Huerta, as given by L. C. Simonds in The Atlantic.

Huerta is a man of much greater native ability than his enemies would admit, and he has grown during the year just passed. He is not as great a man as his friends paint him, but he is a very much greater man than he is painted by the forces opposed to him in Mexico.

Intellectually, Huerta has one inestimable quality—a very direct mind. He readily distinguishes essentials from nonessentials, and, brushing the latter aside, he can get to the point at once, if he so desires. On the other hand, he has the sagacity, or the astuteness, or the slyness of the Indian,—call it what you will, —and when it suits his purpose can maintain an impenetrable reserve.

In the details of business and in the conduct of the administration he is unmethodical, and in less important matters given to "laisser aller." Though he works hard when he takes up a task, he is irregular in the distribution of his time. There are occasions when those nearest to him do not know where he is or how to reach him. This is what has given rise, from time to time, to reports of his disappearance from the capital, reports telegraphed to the United States, but for which there has never been the slightest foundation.

The Queen and the Umbrella.

When Queen Victoria of England lived in the palace known as Windsor Castle, she took great pleasure in going through the streets of the village of Windsor, without letting the people know who she was.

One day, when the queen was passing through the village in this quiet way, a rain-storm came up, and she stepped into a cottage, and asked the woman who lived there for the loan of an umbrella.

The woman looked at the queen, who was very plainly dressed, and at last she said: "I have two umbrellas, one an old shabby one, and the other which is my Sunday umbrella. I shall give you the shabby one, for I never expect to see it again."

Queen Victoria quietly accepted the old umbrella, without telling the woman who she was, and went on her way. The next day, however, a messenger from the royal castle brought back the shabby umbrella and with it a handsome present of money.

The woman was greatly startled. "O Sir, who was it that borrowed my umbrella?" she asked the royal messenger.

"It was your queen," was the answer.

"Oh!" exclaimed the woman, "My queen, my queen! Would that I had known you, for I would so gladly have given you my best!"

But the woman's lament was in vain. She had missed her opportunity to show full respect to her queen, and never again could she do her the favor, which she would gladly have done, if she had only realized that Queen Victoria stood before her on that rainy day.

Two Prophets.

Apropos of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's light-hearted prophecy that the English would yet rise up and lynch their militant suffragists, Mrs. Inez Milholland Boissevain said in New York:

"Sir Arthur is one of the minor novelists, and still more, he is one of the minor prophets. Give woman the vote instead of lynching her—that is the better way to put an end to militancy.

"And Englishmen of Sir Arthur's chuckle-headed type say exasperating things like that about the militants one minute, and the next minute beseech them to bury the hatchet. Well, they'll bury it."

Mrs. Boissevain smiled gayly.

"They'll bury it, all right—in oil paintings—and statuary— and, maybe, a chucklehead or two."

A Monument to Jacob Riis.

The Boston Transcript says: "If anyone wishes to see a monument to Jacob A. Riis, who has just died at his summer home in Barre, let him visit the more submerged social centers of New York City and look around him. His record is there written in characters rarely inspiring to anyone who can interpret them. He was the gift of the old country to the new, and he brought with him, as an immigrant lad, tireless energy, acute perception of conditions, and keen sympathy. His early experience as a reporter brought him into contact with all sorts of people and conditions, but instead of familiarity breeding contempt and hardness, as is perhaps too often the case, they appealed to his pity and enlisted his helpfulness. When once he had entered upon this service he never drew back, but consecrated his life to the betterment of social conditions in the great city. In scores of ways he left a splendid record of achievement along these lines. Mulberry Bend Park alone would have made his life worth while; but there are thousands of tenement dwellers who are indebted to him for laws which mean greater comfort, better health, increased safety, and improved means of education for their children. Doubtless some day the city will honor him with a memorial, but it will be impossible to raise one that will speak so eloquently of his good deeds and fine achievements as those evidences that on so many sides are living forces in the social uplift of the city."

Helping the Boy.

When Rudyard Kipling, the famous writer, was a lad, he went on a sea-voyage with his father, Lockwood Kipling. Soon after the vessel got under way Mr. Kipling went below, leaving the boy on deck. Presently there was a great commotion ahead, and one of the officers ran down and banged at Mr. Kipling's door.

"Mr. Kipling," he cried, "your boy has crawled out on the yard-arm, and, if he lets go, he'll drown!" "Yes," said Mr. Kipling, glad to know that nothing serious was wrong, "but he won't let go."

Only One Viewpoint.

The late Jacob Riis said in one of his luminous lectures in Pittsburgh: "Away with the men who preach the 'All's well with the world' idea! Conservatives, reactionaries, whatever you choose to call them, they block progress.

"Why, I've even heard them standing up for poverty—poverty, with its overwork, its bad health and its ugliness."

Mr. Riis struck the table grimly.

"Now, there may be a lot of advantages," he said, "in poverty, but I tell you, friend, it takes a mighty rich man to see them."

Billboard Irony.

A saving quality through Thomas Wentworth Higginson's life, writes Mrs. Mary Thacher Higginson in her biography of Mr. Higginson, was his keen sense of the ludicrous. He once wrote to his Aunt Nancy:

"Worcester, June 29, 1858.

"I spoke in Springfield on Sunday, to the Spiritualists. My name was paraded in the streets in the largest capitals I ever had as the Rev. T. W. H., 'eminent clergyman, popular author (!!) and eloquent lecturer.' Directly over it were the remains of a theatrical handbill in large letters, 'The Fool of the Family.'"

Explaining the Situation.

During the early days of the Metropolitan Elevated Railroad in New York the trains did not run on Sunday. One Sunday morning, ignorant of this fact, a traveler rushed up to the stairway only to find the gates closed. Noticing the letters "M. E. R. R." over the entrance, he said, in disgusted tones, "I might know a Methodist Episcopal railroad wouldn't run on Sundays!"—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

ABOUT PREACHERS AND OTHERS.

Bishop Bowman's First Wedding Fee.

"Soon after arriving with my bride to begin my career as a Methodist preacher, I was waited upon by a committee with a subscription list.

"The town cemetery was greatly in need of a new fence and other repairs. The committee assured me that a generous subscription from the new minister would greatly assist and probably insure the success of the enterprise. I heartily approved the movement, and at once put my name at the head of the list, with the promise of ten dollars, to be paid on a certain day.

"After the departure of the grateful committee, in consultation with my wife in view of the small salary and limited resources of the family, some anxiety was expressed in regard to the prompt payment of the pledge.

"Days soon rolled by, and one evening I was reminded by my wife that on tomorrow the money should be paid, but alas, no money was available. I felt my reputation for promptness was at stake. In the emergency, we did what many a preacher and his wife have done in like circumstances. Falling upon our knees, the matter was referred to our Heavenly Father and assurance came to our troubled minds.

"That very evening a young couple came to the parsonage with a marriage license and asked for the assistance of the young pastor. The ceremony was soon performed, and the happy couple departed, leaving in my hand a small envelope.

"On opening the envelope neither of us were surprised but both rejoiced to find a crisp ten-dollar bill. Next morning on the exact date that it was due, I proudly paid my subscription, rather to the surprise, I think, of the committee in charge."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

Womanhood the World Over

SUFFRAGE NEAR IN WALES.

"Biddy" from Ireland wants to know what she's done wrong that she should be left in the cold, says the Woman's National Weekly. There has been a larger proportion of supporters of woman suffrage among the Irish Nationalists than among any of the other parties in the House of Commons. Mr. Redmond and Mrs. Asquith, however, are among the few members of their parties who will have nothing to do with woman suffrage. Thus "Biddy" is put out of the Home Rule Bill. They are not talking about having home rule all round in Great Britain, and bills have been introduced into the House of Commons to give home rule in Scotland, and another to give home rule to Wales. In both these bills it is proposed to enfranchise women.

FEMINISM IN INDIA.

The Literary Digest prints the following significant letter from Mr. Ramchaud Kashinath Dattarya to The Times of India (Bombay): "My purpose for writing on you this is to enform your many English Brothers not to give honor and devotion to your ladys becaus they will in the end becum proud and then they will want vote. 2 or 3 thing happen at Victory Garden tomorrow (yesterday) and then I all of a sudden made up my brain to write you immediate. There was many Englis womans and when mans are sitting on the bench, and womans come, man stand, and give their sit to woman. This happen 2 or 3 time tomorrow (yesterday) and I question you why? I again tell you why? Mans and womans are similar in this world and then why mens honors womans? If they honors old old woman, one thing, but they honors young lady. My purpos to write this to enform the English Sahib boks (Englishmen) that when they do this they spoil their feminine lady and then this lady get proud and walk like pecock and then ask vote, and then spoil Ken Garden and throw bomb on Loid Gorg, put bursting powder in envelope and post, and create other mischief. Therefore I say to my Englis, please don't spoil Englis womans in India because by honouring them you people put in their brains the sids (seeds) of Suffragtism and then they will get wild liks Misses Pancurs. Please please print this letter near the Ruter's Telegram with big big words."

JAPAN LEADS IN DIVORCE

There are in proportion to the inhabitants, more divorces in the little island of Japan than in almost all the rest of the world put together. And Uncle Sam comes second.

There are, proportionately, more divorces in the United States than in Austria, Great Britain, France, Italy, Sweden, Norway, Belgium and Hungary combined. It is not a savory record, but it is a true one.

For every 100,000 inhabitants of Japan, 215 are divorced. For every 100,000 inhabitants of the United States, seventy-three are divorced. Here are the figures for some other countries:

Austria, one in 100,000; Great Britain, six (of whom the Irish supply an annual average of less than one) to the 100,000; France, twenty-three; Italy, three; Sweden, eight; Norway, six; Belgium and Hungary, eleven each. Little Switzerland, for some reason, has thirty-two divorces to every 100,000 inhabitants.

The number of divorced persons in the United States by the last census was 156,176 men and 185,101 women. In other words, 3 per cent of the total male and 4 per cent of the total female population. Fourteen boys and thirty-three girls under the age of fifteen were included in the list.

New York state, according to the same census, contains 7,415 divorced men and 10,208 divorced women.

ABOUT JAPANESE WOMEN.

There is one point of good manners in which the Japanese, especially Japanese ladies, excel—they are admirable listeners, visibly giving perfect attention with eyes and ears, and in pose or attitude, to the person who is speaking to them, remarks the Christian Register. They differ from English and Americans engaged in social intercourse in one not unimportant respect—they smile less easily while talking, and laugh but little. They sometimes, therefore, seem grave and solemn to an unnecessary degree at moments when good cheer, or even merriment, would be appropriate. They bow to each other profoundly, putting the trunk almost at right angles with the legs; so that the nod, or slight inclination of the body, which the Occidental makes seems to them an inadequate salutation; but they condone this Occidental verticality, or perhaps accept the will for the deed. In entertaining Europeans or Americans, Japanese hosts and hostesses think it polite to dress in European style, and serve European food and drink; but they still exhibit in their houses the traditional Japanese style of dressing tables and using flowers and plants for interior decoration.

WHAT WOMEN ARE DOING.

The splendid $507,000 home of the American College for Girls on the European slope of the Bosphorus was dedicated on June 3, with fitting ceremonies. United States Ambassador Morgenthau presided and gave an eloquent address. Other speakers were George A. Plimpton and Walter B. Walker, trustee of the college, and Dr. Mary Mills Patrick, its president.

Women in France will probably have local suffrage before the year is out. So says Ferdinand Buisson, president of the commission of forty members of the French Parliament appointed to investigate the working of equal suffrage in other countries. The main reason given in the favorable report of this commission rested on the fact that after many years' trial in many parts of the world no right of suffrage given to women had ever been revised or restricted.

"There never would have been a juvenile court," said Judge Mack at a registration rally in Chicago, "if it had not been for the women of Chicago. By working for that institution alone, the women earned the right to the ballot."

The board of county commissioners has appointed Mrs. K. N. Britton as visiting and instructing nurse for Hamilton County, Ohio, excluding Cincinnati. She will be of service in dealing with cases of tuberculosis. Mrs. Britton has a most important work to do and a large field to cover. Her efforts, in order to be successful, must have general co-operation throughout the county, if successful, they should be extended and should result in saving many lives.

Miss Florence Catlin of Chicago has been appointed a member of the Republican auxiliary committee of 127 by former Governor Deneen. She is the youngest member of the committee, both in age and political experience. She is twenty-six years old. Miss Catlin graduated from the University of Chicago two years ago. Last year she attracted the attention of Alderman Willis O. Nance by a speech at a political meeting. He made her his campaign manager and secretary.

The Confederate Monument in Arlington cemetery was unveiled last week. President Wilson delivered an address at the unveiling. The monument is the work of the Daughters of the Confederacy.

This is positively the latest. From California comes the report that the women of Porterville are forming a baseball league, to include women's teams from that town, Tulare, Hanford and Fresno.

UNSEXED.

It doesn't unsex her to toil in a factory,
Minding the loom from the dawn till the night;
To deal with a schoolful of children refractory
Doesn't unsex her in anyone's sight;
Work in a store—where her back aches inhumanly—
Doesn't unsex her at all, you will note,
But think how exceedingly rough and unwomanly
Woman would be if she happened to vote!

To sweat in a laundry that's torrid and torrider
Doesn't subtract from her womanly charm;
And scrubbing the flags in an echoing corridor
Doesn't unsex her—so where is the harm?
It doesn't unsex her to nurse us with bravery,
Loosing death's hand from its grip on the throat;
But, ah! how the voices grow quivery, quavery,
Wailing: "Alas, 'twill unsex her to vote!"

She's feminine still when she juggles the crockery,
Bringing you blithely the order you give;
Toil in a sweatshop where life is a mockery
Just for the pittance on which she can live—
That doesn't seem to unsex her a particle.
"Labor is noble"—so somebody wrote—
But ballots are known as a dangerous article,
Woman's unsexed if you give her the vote.

Disciples Table Talk

Denver Churches to Unite in Meeting.

G. B. Van Arsdall, Disciple pastor of Denver, and P. V. Jenness, Chairman of the Executive Committee in charge of the "Billy" Sunday Campaign which will be launched in Denver September 6, join in asking for the prayers of readers of The Christian Century, in behalf of this work. Over 60 churches, representing 10 fellowships, are joined in the movement. Mr. Jenness states that Denver presents many difficult problems in the way of successful evangelism. The state is passing through an industrial crisis, and a bitter political campaign will be in progress. The churches are united, but Mr. Jenness says that the total working force will be much smaller in comparison with the forces that have supported Mr. Sunday in the cities of the east.

Mr. Welshimer on Canton-Chicago Contest.

The Christian Century is in receipt of an article from P. H. Welshimer, of Canton, O., relative to the recent contest between Canton and Greater Chicago, which by the reports ended in a victory for Canton. Mr. O. A. Rosboro, of Chicago, although acquiescing gracefully in face of the verdict, took some exception to Canton's including in the last day's count the crowds gathered into the parks of that town by means of brass bands. Mr. Welshimer says in defense of this method of compaigning: "The park meetings were held to accommodate the people who could not get into the church. We can accommodate only about 4,000 in all departments of the Sunday-school building, and there were 7,716 in the regular school and the overflows. Now really, was this so bad? I have read somewhere in a book, that the Greatest Teacher of them all taught by the seaside, in the open fields of Galilee and on the highway. Do we not have a fine precedent here? Is it necessary to have a roof over one's head to have a real Sunday-school? If it is proper to have an orchestra under roof in a Sunday-school, who can say it is improper to have a brass band under the blue sky?" Mr. Welshimer writes that superintendent J. K. Baxter, of the public schools, conducted the service and taught the lesson in one locality; M. L. Pierce, Chancellor of Phillips Bible Institute, took charge of the overflow in another park; W. T. Fisher, a teacher in the Bible Institute had charge in McKinley Park, and W. J. Wright, a student, with a mixed quartet, took charge of another. The Christian Century finds it interesting to note the good features that were evident in this contest but it wonders whether the unfavorable ones, for instance, the strife about the final results—do not far outweigh in effect the better features.

Where Shall the Next Congress Meet?

F. E. Lumley, of the College of Missions, at Indianapolis, writes that an invitation is extended to churches and colleges and whatnot, to invite the Disciples' Congress for next year. These requests must be in his hands before September 1, after which time the Executive Committee will take them up and decide as best they are able where to go. Invitations should be sent to Mr. Lumley, at the College of Missions. Mr. Lumley writes from St. Thomas, Ont., where he is "spending some holidays in the hayfields."

Danville, Ill., in Sunday-school Move.

Danville, Ill., is to have a city Sunday-school Association. Danville delegates to the National Sunday-school convention in this city last month studied the problem of city organization at city conferences in that convention and arrived at the conclusion that its proposed move will be a big step in the right direction. The city association will include every church and every school within the city limits. It is not the intention to exclude the other schools of Danville township outside the city limits but to solve the problems of Danville Sunday-schools. H. G. Rowe, pastor of First Church, one of the delegates to the Chicago convention, explains the nature of the new organization, as follows: "The plan is to divide the city into districts, making each district auxiliary to the main organization with its own officers. The departments of the city association will conform to the divisions and departments of the state association. Two of the notable features of the association will be the departments of missionary work among the neglected people of the city and the athletic department under competent leadership. This is the greatest single Sunday-school movement ever attempted in Vermilion county." The plans for entertaining the state convention at Danville will be one of the smaller tasks for the association to perform.

Montana Churches Get Together.

One of the most significant events in the agricultural development of Montana was the Ministers' Week at Bozeman. Ministers from all over the state have been in attendance. It is believed that this is the beginning of a great movement toward religious federation among all the churches in Montana. Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Disciples, Congregationalists, are all together in promoting this united effort. The close relationship between agricultural extension and the production of farm commodities, and education and religion was emphasized at the conference. The country pastor, it is held, is the natural community leader. If he is in sympathetic relationship with farm activities and properly identified with the sources of agricultural information and progress he becomes better qualified to exercise his function of leadership and the people prosper under his direction. Plans are being laid to secure the attendance of every country minister of all denominations in Montana at the ministers' week at Bozeman next summer.

Louisiana Disciples in Convention.

Pledging $1,000 to the fund the Louisiana Christian Missionary Society in its convention at Shreveport unanimously agreed to proceed immediately to the establishment of the Southern School of Methods on the grounds at Forbin, a few miles from Shreveport. The convention passed a resolution on the temperance question, calling upon the members to support no candidate, from governor down, who was not right on the question. Senator J. R. Thornton of Alexandria was elected president of the next convention. The new board includes: M. S. Dunning, Lake Charles, chairman; Col. G. W. Hardy, Shreveport, vice-president; Claude L. Jones, Shreveport, secretary and treasurer. The other members are: F. D. Macy, New Orleans; R. L. Porter, Cheneyville; W. C. Scott, Cheneyville, C. E. F. Smith, Alexandria.

S. G. Inman in South America.

S. G. Inman writes to The Christian Century from South America, under date July 2, as follows: "On board R. M. S. P. 'Andes:' I am on the last lap of a trip which has revealed many wonders to me. Rio is most beautiful of all cities I have seen. Impossible to tell of marvelous opportunities for educational missionary work in these materialistic countries. Returning via Portugal and England, to New York about August 1.—S. G. Inman."

Newcastle, Ind., to Lose Pastor.

W. R. Moiley has closed a 33 months' ministry with First Church, New Castle, Ind., He will not accept another settled pastorate before September. At that time he will be ready for work. He is living in New Castle at present and will supply for the church at Shirley, Ind., for the summer. During his ministry the Sunday-school at New Castle increased from 163 to an average of 300, and a maximum attendance of 503. The morning congregation, from 140 to an average of 275 and a maximum attendance of 500. The first year the foreign mission offering increased 100 per cent; 148 were added to the church, mostly at regular services.

Congo Mission Reports.

SUMMER SCHOOL OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

A summer school of Christian Endeavor methods and management will be held August 4 and 14 in connection with Bethany Assembly. A carefully constructed course of study has been prepared by Claude E. Hill, the National Superintendent, and capable instructors will be on hand to lead the young people who may attend. And it is our hope that hundreds of Christian Endeavorers among our people will take advantage of this exceptional opportunity and attend the school. Expenses at the park are so reasonable as to come within the ability of nearly all young people. The school affords a rare chance to combine vacation and profitable study. Bethany Assembly is growing greater each year, and is becoming more and more the national chautauqua of the Disciples of Christ. The Board of Christian Endeavor has recently secured by purchase the Christian Endeavor Cottage, and this building is now undergoing extensive repairs. The assembly room of the cottage is being put in first-class order and will be used for all Christian Endeavor meetings. Plans have been made to conduct a school each year, making it a part of the general assembly program. We have long needed a common meeting place for our young people interested in Christian Endeavor, and Bethany Park seems, from every standpoint, the most suitable place. And this cottage, which has been purchased and is now being practically rebuilt, provides for all our needs as to class and assembly rooms and a general headquarters building. The Board of Christian Endeavor made the purchase, believing, first, that the Endeavorers will attend in large numbers, making the summer school a success from the start; and second, that the societies in our churches will provide the board with any balance of money necessary to pay cost of purchase and reconstruction.

DISCIPLES MUST HAVE A CREED!

doubt. But in the good providence of God, we have been raised up and endowed with such wisdom and insight into religious matters as to make our statements final. Our children will then be taught only the truth; our young men in training for the ministry will go out to their great tasks having had their convictions all framed up for them. We need not fear that such a course would tend to put a "straight jacket" upon them for "these ideas" which we shall formulate " are elevating and expansive in their very nature and tend toward the largest possible growth."

If any one should presume to question the finality of our formulations the world is big and he could go elsewhere. There is, of course, the possibility that a few, perhaps quite a number might do so, but the risk is not great because of the absoluteness of our position. Sooner or later the whole Christian world will recognize this fact and then we shall have attained Christian union. By all means, I feel that we should proceed to make a creed.

It might be well for us to continue the use of Peter's confession in our churches for a time, but all the teachers in our educational institutions should be required at once to sign the more elaborate formula. Later we could use it in our churches and thus check any incipient heresies that might be sprouting there. The idea grips me. I feel happy in contemplating the results that will surely follow. I am tired of controversy, and of the talk of division among us. I see now how easy it would be to stop it. Besides it would please our multimillionaires, most of whom appear to be conservative, and they would give liberally to all our enterprises and we should soon become a great people. We might even grow to be a mightier factor in the religious and political life of America and the world than the Roman Catholics.

We have made a good beginning at fashioning charters or constitutions for our institutions of learning; but a danger lies here if we do not hasten. So many such documents may be fashioned that we might have difficulty in harmonizing them. We can not afford to accept the risk. The task is not a great one for us since we have such able men to perform it. We might borrow a few phrases from the great historic creeds and link them up with our own well recognized, time honored phrases, and the task would be completed. I am for it, heart and soul, and since so many have witnessed their approval of the constitution of the Phillips' Bible Institute I feel sure we should have no difficulty in adopting it. In true humility let us proceed, for evidently we have come to the kingdom for such a time as this.

Memorials of the Civil War in Atlanta.

Atlanta Fifty Years Ago

[NOTE.—The veterans of both armies who were in Atlanta fifty years ago know and have not forgotten the warm time they experienced while sojourning in the then small town of Atlanta (sometimes called by the older inhabitants by the old name of Marthaville, Ga). But Atlanta is ripe in Civil War history and her battlefields. To the North they point with pride to the fact that here General Sherman, Logan and the lamented MacPherson fought; to the South the finger of pride is pointed to General Hood, Johnston and Walker, who about the same hour General MacPherson was killed, lost his life, fighting for a cause he thought just. None is more competent to write on this than one of the Publicity Committee staff, Mr. W. T. Waters, of the Atlanta Journal. His paper follows. Follow it closely and you will be familiar with Atlanta's Civil War history when you come to the convention.

A. M. BEATTY,
Chairman, Publicity Committee.]

Fifty years ago Atlanta was playing a meeting three times as much for foreign work as the average yearly expenditure for this department during the past six years.

The campaign by Gen. W. T. Sherman, commanding the three armies of the Tennessee, the Cumberland and the Ohio, to overthrow Atlanta began just south of Chattanooga on May 5, 1864. The previous fall Chickamauga, had been fought and lost by the Confederacy, just after the Southern Government receded from the high tide of its success when it met its check at Gettysburg. The Atlanta campaign continued during the late spring and early summer.

General Jos. E. Johnston, commanding the army of Tennessee had fewer men than Sherman, and adopted therefore what is known as the Fabian policy of warfare. He never assumed the aggressive, being always fortified for attack and always equipped with new fortifications at the rear into which he could retreat when the larger army flanked him. Thus little by little the Confederates gave ground, exasperating the Union authorities in Washington, arousing the admiration of General Sherman, himself a consummate strategist, and invoking the displeasure of the office-chair campaigners at Richmond. When Johnston reached his last stand, at Atlanta, fortified months in advance and practically an impregnable fortress, where he planned resistence to the end, he was relieved of his command and general J. B. Hood, a much younger and not nearly so cautious commander, was placed at the head of the Confederates. Careful students of history ascribe to that change a great importance.

Its significance became evident immediately when the Union force effected their crossing of Peachtree Creek, which Johnston had planned they should not cross at any cost. Gen'l Hood was not prepared for this sudden move on the afternoon of July 20, 1864. Next morning Leggett's Hill, one of the outposts of the Confederate fortifications at the east of the city, was attacked by the Federals of MacPhearson's army and captured.

At noon on July 22, 1864, began the battle of Atlanta. Gen'l Hood had planned it. It was the first aggressive feature of the Confederates since the beginning of the year's campaign. Hardee's corps had been sent to the south on a wide detour, to move north and flank MacPhearson's army while Cheatham's corps moved east from the fortifications and attacked it in front. The object was to roll up the flank of the Union army at least as far north as the Georgia railroad.

Seven hours later, at dark, the flank of the Union forces had been turned slightly. At great loss of life, the Confederates had fought their way to a position which they could not hope to hold. That night they withdrew back into the fortifications. Nothing had been gained by the Confederates, and nothing lost by the Federals. The gray army had lost Maj. Gen'l. W. H. T. Walker, and the blue army had lost Maj. Gen'l. MacPhearson, both killed in action. The life toll was 8,521 on the Union, and about 10,000 among the Confederates. The battle had served but to demonstrate to the Confederacy its own helplessness. It could do nothing but remain on the defensive.

On July 28, in the western outskirts of Atlanta, the battle of Ezra Church was fought without result. Then began the siege of Atlanta, the famous artillery duel lasting forty-three days, the marks of which are to be seen yet on some of the remaining war-time buildings in the city.

On the night of August 31 and through September 1, Hardee's corps fought the battle of Jonesboro, having gone there to protect the railroad which connected Atlanta with the sources of her supply in "the Egypt of the Confederacy." To prevent his army being divided, Hood had to evacuate Atlanta on the night of September 1. Next day the cohorts of Gen'l. Sherman entered the city. A couple of weeks later all civilians were ordered to go either north or south. General Sherman wanted none left. He made the city into a giant fortress, devoted exclusively to the purpose of war. That period in Atlanta's history is unique among the records of modern American cities.

Then came General Sherman's bold plan to cut loose from all communications, burn his bridges behind him, and march to the coast, living off the country as he marched. He burned and blew up what was left of Atlanta, and on November 14, his famous "march to the sea" began. It was a terrible march beset with dangers none but the hardened soldier, and those living in a war ridden country could ever hope to stand.

A few days later the vanguard of Confederate forces again entered the city and stopped the reign of terror and lawlessness which had followed on the removal of all authority. The suffering was intense among those left—many a woman ate hoe cake made from grains of corn gathered from the corners of the troughs from which the horses of General Sherman's army had eaten. It sounds strange but it is true nevertheless. After the Confederates had returned Atlanta knew no more war. She had survived her first, last and only great catastrophe. The entire battle of Atlanta has been painted by famous artists and can be seen at the cyclorama in Grant's Park.

GOOD CHURCH EXTENSION NEWS.

Every disciple of Christ will be glad to hear that the annual offering for Church Extension is approaching. The First Sunday of September is the day but the whole month of August should be spent in prayer. Let us this year immerse the Church Extension offering in prayer.

Let us create an atmosphere of real stewardship in regard to this offering. Let the pulpit, the prayer meeting and the press be used through August. Let the Missionary Committee and the pastor go apart and pray and counsel together. Let the committee present to the church the average gift to Church Extension last year by the local church. Show the facts to the people. Give them unpleasant as well as pleasant facts to startle them. Set a goal. Let it be to reach or go beyond the apportionment.

Put up the splendid new wall chart sent out by the board the last of July. One has been sent to every pastor. Be true to the cause of Church Extension and call attention to the chart. The pastors should order their literature from the board and make wise distribution of it. Preach on Church Extension. Explain to the people that the Board cannot answer the appeals. That last year there were 254 appeals and only ninety-two could be answered for lack of funds. That 154 have been made this year and only sixty-four answered to July 1. The people will give if facts are presented. No disciple of our Lord wants a mission to die for lack of buildings. At the July Board meeting many applications were refused because of lack of funds.

Let us put the Church Extension appeal on a high plane. Dignify it. The appeal does not come as a beggar asking alms. It comes as a servant of the Lord's vineyard asking its rightful share of the fruit of that vineyard. Let the Missionary Committee see people personally. Let the whole church be stirred with the appeal.

Other good news is that the Board recently received an annuity of $4,000 from a Missouri friend; $500 from an Illinois friend; $1,000 from a friend in Florida and $700 from an Iowa friend. Why not others administer on your own estate and give annuities to Church Extension? Your money will be building houses of God while it earns you an income. Let us all remember Church Extension in our prayers.

ANTI-SALOON FORCES TO MEET.

Greatest Temperance Gathering in World's History, Arranged to be Held at Atlantic City, N. J., in Summer of 1915.

Unquestionably the greatest gathering of temperance forces in the world's history will be the biennial convention of the Anti-

Saloon League of America to be held on the Million Dollar Pier at Atlantic City, N. J., July 6-10, 1915.

On the pier there are four large auditoriums and a number of smaller halls. Reservation of these buildings has been made, and it will be possible for the holding of four large gatherings concurrently, so that every person who attends may have an opportunity of hearing every speaker. The joint seating capacity of the big auditoriums is 17,000. The smaller halls will be used for committee sessions and overflow sessions.

As was the case in the Columbus, Ohio, convention in 1913, representation at the Atlantic City meeting will be based on one delegate from each individual church congregation, each local young people's society, each Sunday-school and each subordinate unit of a temperance society or lodge. It is expected 30,000 delegates will attend.

In every particular this will be a greater meeting than the Columbus Convention, which has been rated as surpassing anything previously held. Already some of the states are arranging to send large delegations. One state reports a delegation of one thousand assured.

On the program as partially arranged there will be scores of the most prominent platform men in America, senators, congressmen, judges, governors of states, manufacturers, business men, attorneys, scientists, labor leaders, editors in United States and Canada, and leading reform figures in other lands, who will tell the great convention of temperance progress the world over. There will be representatives from every state in the union, to tell in detail of the development of Anti-Saloon League work.

It is confidently expected there will be at least fourteen states in the Prohibition column by that time. A history of the fight in each of these states will be inspiring.

One of the most notable features will be the exhibit, for which a portion of the pier will be reserved. This will show literature, charts, books, designs and other forms of illustration, with special efforts worked out along the line of the physiological effects of alcohol, this part of exhibit to be planned along the lines of anti-tuberculosis and other disease-fighting propaganda.

One portion of the exhibit will be that which drew so much attention at the recent international Sunday-school convention in Chicago, where were shown startling statistics, illustrated by tomb-stones as symbols, showing from actual facts and figures, the terrible ravages of alcohol.

No phase of the alcohol problem, and no feature of warfare against it will be neglected in the exhibit or in the carrying out of the program of the convention.

It is not too early for churches, Sunday-schools, young people's societies and temperance organizations to announce the coming of the convention and to prepare to be represented in it. The convention comes in midsummer, when the vacation season is on, and it is to be held at a popular summer resort; these two circumstances are expected to help swell the attendance.

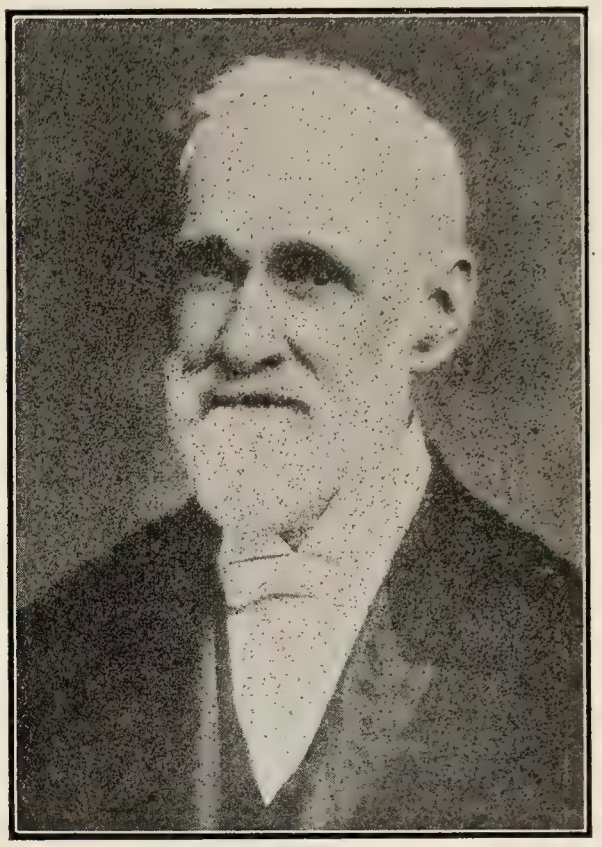
THE NORTH DAKOTA CONVENTION.

The third convention (including the first called, November, 1912) of the Christian Church of North Dakota, began on Thursday evening, June 25, 1914 with a reception.

The convention proper opened on Friday morning in the Assembly Room of the Public Library, with Prof. A. F. Hunsaker as chairman in the absence of Pres. E. A. Long. Professor Hunsaker led the devotional service and Rev. F. B. Sapp of Fargo offered the opening prayer.

The guests were welcomed to Minot by Mrs. L. D. McGahan. Sec. D W. Hollenga, of the Association of Commerce, left nothing unsaid to prove to them that their welcome to Minot was genuine. Following these Mrs. F. B. Sapp responded in such a way that when she had finished Minot and the convention were one. President Hunsaker delivered the President's address.

Much routine work and business was sandwiched throughout the three days' program. A letter of condolence was sent to Gerald Miles of Williston, No. Dak., who had been bereaved by the death of his father and could not attend. Pledge cards for North Dakota work were distributed and a number of substantial pledges were made.



The late Rev. L. L. Carpenter, whose influence will still be felt at Bethany Assembly this year.

F B. Sapp, corresponding secretary, used a large map and gave a general survey of the field, which was instructive and inspirational and caused us all to feel more deeply the call to service.

We feel especially grateful to Mrs. I. E. Sutherland of Carrington for her support of both state and local work. A vote of thanks was extended to Mr. and Mrs. Sapp for their faithful service in North Dakota. A Bible-school was organized through the active energies of Robt. M. Hopkins, National Bible-school superintendent of Cincinnati.

While some of the important speakers were unable to be present it was the opinion of the whole convention that had no other able man been present than Dr. Wallace C. Payne, Field Representative of the National C. W. B. M. of Indianapolis, the program would have been filled to over-flowing. His crowning address was "The Place of the Bible in the life of the Individual." We have promises from Mr. Payne, also Mr. Hopkins, to return to us again.

The lectures and earnest talks from time to time by Lisle Wolfe, Missionary from Manila, P. Is., were greatly enjoyed and greetings were sent to the Philippines from the convention.

Robert M. Hopkins' address on "The Place of the Bible-school in the life of the Community" was splendid, as was also an address by Frank D. Hall of the Children's Home in Fargo.

The music for the convention was a large factor in the interest of the sessions and was contributed by the best talent of Minot, and despite the rain which poured in torrents at times the Assembly Room was well filled at each meeting.

The new state board elected was as follows:

President, R. B. Town, Flaxon; vice-president, Gerald Miles, Williston; recording-secretary, Roy Swiggert, Minot; treasurer, I. E. Sutherland, Carrington; corresponding-secretary, F. B. Sapp, Fargo; members, at-large, R. H. Hays, Minot; J. C. Caldwell, Underwood; W. L. Stockham, Fargo.

Again as in all preceding conventions, we thank Secretary F. B. Sapp for his untiring work and interest. In point of earnest, Christian spirit and energy, the third annual convention passed into history as the banner number for North Dakota. God's blessings were interwoven in every word and act.

JENNIE H. MCGAHAN,
Sec. Convention.

MISSOURI MISSIONS.

The State Convention for 1914 is now a matter of history. It will take rank as one of the greatest ever held by Missouri Disciples. Hopefully and prayerfully we turn our faces to the future. The program for the new fiscal year as recently outlined by the State Board is worthy of our great Missouri brotherhood. The sympathy and cordial support of our preachers and churches guarantee that this program will be carried out. The year has been a little bit trying on account of crop shortages and a general depression in business conditions. The financial report of our treasurer read at Moberly is, therefore, the more remarkable. With the greatest wheat crop in the history of the middle west already harvested, and a magnificent prospect for a bumper corn crop, there ought to be little difficulty in meeting the increased budget as adopted by the State Board. Missouri disciples understand that as our state work increases in efficiency, the demands upon our treasury also increase. Many of the churches, especially those in the country, look after the raising of their missionary budget during the summer months. The secretary wishes to remind these churches of the importance of attending to this matter on scheduled time and seeing to it that the offerings are promptly forwarded either to this office or to Grant K. Lewis, Carew Building, Cincinnati, Ohio. If you have adopted the budget plan, see to it that the budget is raised in whatever way the judgment of your leaders indicates. The budget plan is fraught with danger because many good people seem to think the work is accomplished when the plan is adopted. I am hoping many of our Missouri churches will make an "every-member canvass" for missions and thus greatly increase their missionary budgets. At present, our treasury is empty and offerings will be the more appreciated on that account.

THE WICKED HUSBANDMEN.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR AUGUST 16, 1914.

Read Luke 20: 1-19. Memory Verses, 42-44

Golden Text.—The stone which the builders rejected, the same was made the head of the corner. —Matt. 21:42.

American Standard Bible.

Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons. (Used by permission.)

(33) Here another parable: There was a man that was a householder, who planted a vineyard, and set a hedge about it, and digged a winepress in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into another country . (34) And when the season of the fruits drew near, he sent his servants to the husbandmen, to receive his fruits. (35) And the husbandmen took his servants, and beat one, and killed another, and stoned another. (36) Again, he sent other servants more than the first: and they did unto them in like manner. (37) But afterward he sent unto them his son, saying, They will reverence my son. (38) But the husbandmen, when they saw the son, said among themselves, This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and take his inheritance. (39) And they took him, and cast him forth out of the vineyard, and killed him. (40) When therefore the lord of the vineyard shall come, what will he do unto those husbandmen? (41) They say unto him, He will miserably destroy those miserable men, and will let out the vineyard unto other husbandmen, who shall render him the fruits in their seasons. (42) Jesus saith unto them, Did ye never read in the scriptures,

The stone which the builders rejected,
The same was made the head of the corner;
This was from the Lord,
And it is marvelous in our eyes.

(43) Therefore say I unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken away from you, and shall be given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. (44) And he that falleth on this stone shall be broken to pieces: but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will scatter him as dust. (45) And when the chief priests and the Pharisees heard his parables, they perceived that he spake of them. (46) And when they sought to lay hold on him, they feared the multitudes, because they took him for a prophet.

Verse by Verse.

BY CLARK BUCKNER.

v. 33. Planted a vineyard: The vineyard represents Israel. See Isa. 5: 1-7. Husbandmen: In this place the husbandmen are the rulers.

v. 34. When the season of fruits drew near: Young vineyards were rested for a period of six years before the fruit was permitted to ripen. Sent his servants: The servants represented the prophets.

v. 35. And the husbandmen took his servants, etc.: This verse well sets forth the treatment which many of the prophets received at the hands of the kings. Look up the lives of Elijah, Zechariah, Isaiah and Jeremiah.

v. 36. Again, he sent other servants more than the first: The highest mark of patience is to be found in God. This is one of the Godly characteristics which is too little recognized. We often speak of the patience of Job but are not accustomed to emphasis of this trait in our Father.

v. 37. But afterward he sent unto them his own son: This is a representation of patience in its infinitude. They will reverence my son: If they would not respect the son, then they were beyond all hope.

v. 38. Said among themselves: No one man would have dared taken this attitude alone, but when they were assembled it was easy for them to become bold. Knavery, like misery, likes company. This is the heir: Jesus, the Son of God, was heir to all the things of the Father.

v. 39. And killed him: Notice Jesus' awareness of the end awaiting him, even at this time. How calm and poised he is as he thinks and speaks of the end!

v. 40. What will he do unto those husbandmen? Jesus makes them indict themselves.

v. 41. He will miserably destroy those miserable men: We must see that these ecclesiastical dignitaries are not entirely devoid of a sense of right. And will let out the vineyard to other husbandmen: And the vineyard was let out to other husbandmen. The Romans entered into political inheritance of Israel; the Gentiles became children of Abraham and heirs of the promise.

v. 42. Did ye never read in the scriptures: Psalm 118:22, 23; Acts 4:11; I Peter 2:7. The stone which the builders rejected: The ecclesiastics and the people were the "builders:" Jesus was the "stone." Read Romans 9:33. The head of the corner: Whatever may have been the place of this stone in the building, it was the most highly exalted of all the stones in the building. The prophecy clearly indicates that this chief stone will be rejected. Jesus must fulfill all prophecy. This was from the Lord: This stone was not a native stone. It came from the quarry in the very heart of God.

v. 43. Shall be taken away from you: "National responsibilities are not to be slipped out of by being shifted on the broader shoulders of governments or influ ential men. Who lets them be governments and influential? 'Gov'ment aint to answer for it, God will send the bill to you.'" (Maclaren).

v. 44. Some authorities omit this verse. He that falleth on this stone shall be broken to pieces. Christ must be the foundation of our lives or we will be broken to pieces. Don't stumble on his claim to be the stone. On whomsoever it shall fall, it will scatter him as dust: This great stone, with its condemnatory weight, will fall on those who reject.

v. 45. They perceived that he spake of them: How slow they were to catch the meaning of his words! Not until Jesus has made them indict themselves and interpreted the parable explicitly do they realize his meaning. Their moral sensitiveness was calloused.

v. 46. They feared the multitudes: The multitudes were very loyal to Jesus till they came to see that he was not seeking to establish an earthly kingdom.

At the Heart of the Lesson.

BY REV. A. Z. CONRAD, PH.D.

THE VINEYARD.

A householder plants a vineyard. He furnishes adequate protection from encroachment and makes full provision for the preserving of the vintage in the wine-press. But more than this he builds a tower, furnishing proper defense against enemies and completes every arrangement for the success of the enterprise. The householder is none other than God himself. The vineyard is the kingdom, the care of which had been entrusted to the Jewish nation. They were selected because of their peculiar fitness for the work. The husbandmen referred to represents the Jewish nation, more particularly the appointed leaders upon whom devolved the responsibility of caring for the kingdom and especially of being ready to recognize the householder and conserve his interests.

PERVERSIONS OF PRIVILEGE.

v. 34-35. The householder sent his servants to receive the fruits. These servants were beaten, stoned or killed. It is a very striking picture of the abuses of power. Reference was made to the abuse of the prophets of God. Again and again the messengers were rejected and the messengers maltreated. The vicissitudes through which the Hebrew people had passed were due to this perversion of power. They had lapsed repeatedly into idolatry and had received with contempt the warnings, the expostulations and the rebukes sent through the messengers of God. Usurpation is the outgrowth of avarice and ungodly ambition. Only a few can be entrusted with responsibilities which are capable of abuse in the interests of selfishness. This lesson is a lasting one and has application to the manifold activities of today. In social, political and religious connection how many there are who have to be watched. The absence of the householder was made a reason for self-assertion and false independency. The rights of others are too often ignored when compulsion is withdrawn. The strong arm of the law is made necessary in order to prevent perpetual encroachments upon the rights of others.

THE PERSISTENCE OF EVIL.

v. 36. "Again he sent other servants more than the first and they did unto them in like manner." The householder's patience is noteworthy. He did not immediately visit condign punishment upon the husbandmen who were in charge of his vineyard. They must have a still further opportunity since it might have been through some misunderstanding that the treatment of the first servants was so cruel. He would increase the number of witnesses so that there could be no mistake whatever. He would determine thus the attitude of the husbandmen. Nothing more emphasizes the Divine Fatherhood than patience. The long suffering of God is the marvel of the ages. In the face of the cruelties and the abuses which we witness the impulse is to cry, "O that thou wouldst rend the heavens and come down." We are not so much amazed at the flood or at the fires of Sodom and Gomorrah as we are at the continued shining of the sun and the falling showers when iniquity so much abounds. One of the hardest things to reconcile with the reality of divine government is the permission of iniquity without its destruction. Every Christian feels a righteous indignation at the injustices which are practiced with impunity and the long continued suffering of those who are victimized by perverted power. The husbandmen had full opportunity to repent. Knowing their own iniquity, had they repented of it and treated the servants of the householder with consideration and sought pardon they would have been forgiven. But even now the patience of the householder does not seem to have been exhausted. He fully recognized the weakness of men and the unwillingness of one man to be ruled over by another. He appreciated how misunderstandings must arise and he would give still another opportunity.

THE STONE AND THE BUILDERS.

Taking advantage of their reply Jesus immediately recalls to their mind the prophecies with which they were perfectly familiar. He makes application of it to the present parable and they readily discover how they have incriminated themselves. Jesus said unto them, "Did ye never read in the Scripture, 'The stone which the builders rejected was made the head of the corner.'" "This was from the Lord and it is marvelous in our eyes." How wonderfully this prophecy has been vindicated in the history of the world. No building endures which has not as its corner stone Jesus Christ the Son of God. The Lord proceeded with His word of condemnation passing sentence upon the whole Jewish nation and upon all who should reject him afterward. "The Kingdom of God shall be taken away from you and shall be given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." This was in accord with the sentence they had already passed upon the wicked husbandmen. In taking the Gospel to the Gentiles this prophecy was fulfilled. The Hebrew nation had its opportunity, refused to embrace it, and more, it rejected every offer of God represented in Jesus Christ his only Son. The forbearance of God is marvelous but it has its limit. A continued and persistent rejection of God's love results finally in the withdrawal of the Holy Spirit from the heart, and the gifts which might have enriched the soul are offered to others.

THE FATALITY OF OPPOSITION TO GOD.

"And he that falleth on this stone shall be broken to pieces, but on whomsoever it shall fall it will scatter him as dust." This is one of the most serious and severe sentences in all of God's word. It is not only literally true, it is inevitable. It is necessary in the very nature of human life. He who undertakes to measure arms with the Eternal discovers speedily the folly and failure of his course. As easily might a child reach forth its hand and stop all the planets in their courses as for a man sucessfully to antagonize the will of God. Those who attacked and opposed Jesus Christ have literally been broken to pieces. Their influence does not endure. Their lives have been a wretched failure.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR AUGUST 12.

The Message of the Heavens. Ps. 19:1; 8:3, 4.

While we are complaining that our lives are circumscribed within exceedingly narrow limits, we have every day the privilege of seeing the sun rise and set and every night we may watch the stars come out and "light the universe with their admonishing smile." The fault is in ourselves that we do not see wonders. We have commonplace minds. Either our teachers have not pointed out what we ought to see or we have been dull students. The glory of the heavens is for all who have eyes to see. Emerson said: "If the stars should appear one night in a thousand years, how would men believe and adore, and preserve for many generations the remembrance of the city of God which had been shown."

SUBLIMITY.

"Perhaps the most sublime spectacle in nature is the starry heavens, for in those starry expanses all the physical sources of sublimity are present, vastness, power, silence, obscurity." We become cheap if we think only of the trivial. The sense of the sublime is an essential part of religion. What sort of God has the man who never looks up, who is so absorbed in earthly ambitions that he has no time to lose himself in the contemplation of the heavens above? God is greater than anything we see. It behooves us, then, to see the greatest things our eyes can behold in the physical realm.

ETERNITY.

Vast extent of time also awakens the sense of the sublime. Thomas Carlyle has left on record the impression of limitless time the stars made upon him: "When I gaze into the stars, they look down upon me with a pity from their serene and silent spaces, like eyes glistening with tears over the little lot of man. Thousands of generations, all as noisy as our own, have been swallowed up by time, and there remains no record of them any more. Yet Arcturus and Orion, Sirius and Pleiades, are still shining in their courses, clear and young, as when the shepherd first noted them in the plain of Shinar!" The little systems of man have their brief day and cease to be. But the believer takes delight in the thought of eternity. Why should he be disturbed if a toy is kept out of his reach? His God is the same yesterday, today, and forever. He can wait. The eternal years of God are his. He tries to do the work of each day in its day, but he does not expect to do all there is to be done in one day, in one generation, or in the lifetime of one nation. God's work is immeasureably great, and he has plenty of time for it.

WHAT IS MAN?

As the psalmist thought of the moon and the stars which God had made, he was moved to ask what significance man had in the presence of the splendor of the heavens. He was awed by the greatness of the universe. Then he was reminded that man had been made in the image of God and crowned with glory and honor. Man who knows the universe is greater than that which he knows. The starry heavens above and the moral law within alike filled the soul of the philosopher Kant with ever increasing awe. When he looked upon the heaven, he thought of the littleness of man. When he looked within and heard the command of duty, he thought of man's greatness. Sad indeed is the life of man if the heavens have for him no message of hope and freedom, if the "stars blindly run," and a "web is woven across the sky." Faith will not have it so. It hears the sentinel move above from place to place,

"And whisper to the worlds of space,
In the deep night, that all is well."

Gen. 1:1; Ps. 50:6; 97:6; 103:11; 113:4; 115:16; Jer. 31:37; Ps. 33:6; 148:4-6; Is. 40:22; 51: 6; Matt. 24:35.

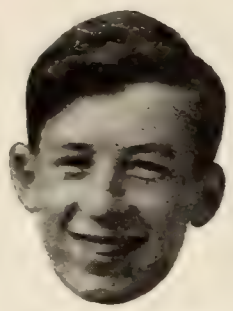
Helping Men to Help Boys

How the Young Men's Christian Association is solving the Problem.

By J. M. Artman, Dean School of Boys' Work, Y. M. C. A. College, Chicago.



The Young Men's Christian Association would be the last to say that it has solved the problem of "Helping men to help boys." We do believe, however, that we have gone a long ways towards the solution of the problem. In answer to how this is being done several things should be said.

THE IMPORTANCE OF WORK WITH BOYS.

In the first place the Young Men's Christian Association has become profoundly convinced of "The Strategical Importance of Work With Boys." "Where there is a will, there is a way." It is second nature for us not to will to do a thing until its importance is thrust upon us. Whatever other agencies may feel, the Young Men's Christian Association is thoroughly convinced that work with boys lies at the basis of all advance physically, mentally, morally, or religiously.

"Any idea or ideal which you wish to have dominate a nation of people, must first lay hold of the thoughtful boys, the ambitious boys, the boys of vision, in our rural districts and in our large cities. These are the most potential elements in the life of the nations. There is no way so direct to accomplish the solution of the most difficult problems which press upon the nation, as to dominate the boys rising up in these different nations, the hope of these different races, with these right ideals and with these right visions. The boys have the power 'to let.' Abounding in physical vitality, having the many unspent years, they constitute incomparably our most valuable asset in every nation. Moreover they are so susceptible to impressions. The greatest visions I have ever known came to me as a boy. In all my world-wide travels since, I have had no visions like them. By bringing before these boys wide outlooks, far views, we really save the nations as well as the boys."

The above words from John R. Mott, the great Young Men's Christian Association leader, and perhaps the foremost Christian statesman living, amply describes the basic conviction of the Young Men's Christian Association in regard to the future of our country. That future is in the hands of the boys of today. The Young Men's Christian Association used to spend most of its energy for men. But now that she has come to recognize the strategic importance of work with boys, her vast energy is being increasingly turned towards the boys.

EXPERT LEADERSHIP.

The definite attempt on the part of the Association to meet the needs of the boys of our country soon revealed the necessity for expert leadership. It was found that the problem of helping boys to find themselves in the way to Christian manhood, was not simple and easy but vast and complex. Our very best intentions often hinder rather than help boys because of the lack of insight into their real needs as well as a failure to apprehend the principles underlying growth. So the Young Men's Christian Association has put its hand to the wheel to develop an army of experts in boy life and leadership. More than four hundred Young Men's Christian Association secretaries are now giving their entire time to work with boys and are keen and persistent students of boys and boy life. These men really constitute a brotherhood which trades experiences and discoveries so that each one has the help of all the others. Three hundred and twenty-five of these men are organized into the Association of Boy Secretaries of America. The central purpose of this organization is the development of

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Character Talks

By Orvis F. Jordan, Pastor of the Christian Church at Evanston, Ill.

Rev. O. F. Jordan.

KNOWING THE TRUTH

"Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." It is this hunger and thirst for the truth that has been the glory of our Christian civilization. But for this, the development of our modern sciences would be inconceivable. In the realm of religion more than anywhere else we should desire the truth, for here truth is so eternally important and error so infinitely mischievous. We should know the truth about our Bibles. New light continually breaks forth from this wonderful Book. We should know the truth about the Church. It is an organization which in the course of history has achieved victories and made mistakes. We should know the truth about Christian experience. Neither the prayer, nor the conversion, nor the sanctification of another person is enough for me. These things I must know for myself. Once I start on the pursuit of truth for myself, I emancipate myself from every false authority. The prejudice of some current type of biblical interpretation, the narrowness of some denominational shibboleth, the cast-iron standard of some conventionalized type of religious experience are no longer bonds to restrain my free soul from living its own life.

"The Conquest is just what you say it is—'a journal of character-building,'" writes one of our superintendents. "The Conquest" takes itself seriously. That's why its readers take it seriously. Is the paper your school is taking one that emphasizes the things that should be emphasized in a Sunday school—serious Bible study, religious ideals and Christian service? "The Conquest" has as its aim not simply to give schools what they have been used to—small talk of school work; but to publish such material as will actually GROW CHARACTER.

These "Character Talks" form a regular feature of "THE CONQUEST," our weekly for Adult and Young People's Classes. Send for sample copy TODAY.

WHY USE THE GRADED LESSONS?

Because they present Scriptural and moral truths in such form that they can be understood by those who are to receive them. Children are in their very nature GRADED; therefore the instruction given them must be graded according to their varying powers to receive. A teacher would not last long in the public schools who would ask first graders to master the works of Plato. Neither should a system of Bible lesson study continue that offers to Primary pupils such difficult problems as are presented in the books of Leviticus, Isaiah and Romans. It is a principle as old as modern education that knowledge should be ADAPTED TO THE PUPIL. Shall Religious Education alone be exempted from observing this fundamental principle?

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The Main Point

We are much indebted to the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews for pointing out to us what he regarded as the most important thing he had to say. We could not have missed it, for he made it very emphatic, but we might not have understood the full significance of it if he had not called our special attention to it. "Of the things we are saying, this is the chief point." The authorized version reads "this is the sum." But that is really more than the author himself claimed for it. He did not pretend to be able to put his whole argument into a nutshell, but he did know what he considered the most important thing, and he did not want anyone to mistake it. The one great truth which above all others he wanted to make plain was that God had sent the Lord Jesus to save the world, and that He had done a permanent and a glorious work among men, and had carried up to God the offering of a great high priest, forever relating the heart of man to the redemptive love of God.

It is important that we do not miss the main point. There may be partial success or even failure in that which is incidental, provided only the main point succeeds.

Columbus was wrong in much of his reasoning. He never found the passage to India. The world has waited four hundred years, and still waits the sundering of the isthmus that is to make it possible to sail westward from Barcelona to Bombay. But Columbus was right in the main point. Amid many disappointments and not a few failures, he succeeded in the main thing.

There are certain aspects in which the ministry of Jesus may not be counted a success. He did not succeed in convincing the strong men of His nation that He was the Christ. He did not redeem his land from the oppression of the tax-gatherer. He did not save Judea and Galilee from Rome. He left his country afflicted with blindness, leprosy, poverty and dirt. It has been so ever since and is so today. If the work of Jesus were to be judged as some men now judge of success in the work of the Gospel, then the work of Jesus cannot be counted a success.

But He succeeded in His main point. He did the work He came to do. He accomplished the great central and sacrificial act by which God's love was revealed to man, and man was son to God. He left the world a new world. He did the main thing, and the main thing was what He came to do.

A religion does not fail that succeeds in the main thing. There was much in the ministry of Jesus, and it was all good, but much of it was incidental. The constant effort of the Lord was to accentuate the main thing in his ministry, and this was a most difficult matter, for there were so many who insisted that his mission must be some of the incidental things which were indeed the glory, but not the chief glory, of His ministry.

What is the main thing to be gotten out of one's religion? Not prosperity, though God delights to see His children prosper. Not comfort, though comfort is a blessing of God. Not health, though righteousness tends to health, and health is a blessing for which we are far from being as thankful as we ought to be. We must learn anew in every generation that the greatest blessings of religion are spiritual. They cannot be measured in terms of earthly things. Love and joy and peace and forgiveness have not a common denominator with things that are material, however closely they may be associated.

What is the end for which the church was established? Was it that there might be built up a great system of church machinery, with men assigned to the work of keeping the wheels going? Was it that millions of men and women might be registered as members of an immense organization? Was it that great sums of money might be collected and expended for certain causes? Were these the chief reasons for the church's organization? Assuredly not. The church exists primarily to feed the soul of man, to minister to his spiritual nature, to keep him in the atmosphere of the eternal.

Life has many interests and it ought to have. But not all even of good things are equally important. A farmer may be also an amateur photographer and a good croquet player, and these things are well enough in their way. But his real business is to make his farm productive, and then to make it produce. That is the main thing. A merchant may have a taste for fancy poultry or for golf, but his business is to make his store succeed.

It is just so with one's Christian life. It may give us culture and good society and pleasant associations, but there is a main thing. Let us not miss that. It is more than merely keeping weeds out of the field; it is raising a crop. It is more than merely being good; it is being good for something. That is the main thing. Let us never forget it.

The Delusion of Militarism

An Analysis of "the Most Virulent and Devastating Disease Now Raging on the Earth."

BY CHARLES E. JEFFERSON.

This masterly article by Dr. Jefferson was not written in the excitement of war bulletins and the clamorous preparations for actual battle, but in the quiet days of peace, prior both to the present European crisis and the recent Mexican difficulty faced by the United States. This is a reason why his words have extraordinary weight in the present hour.—EDITOR.

THE future historian of the first decade of the twentieth century will be puzzled. He will find that the world at the opening of the century was in an extraordinarily belligerent mood, and that the mood was well-nigh universal, dominating the New World as well as the Old, the Orient no less than the Occident. He will find that preparations for war, especially among nations which confessed allegiance to the Prince of Peace, were carried forward with tremendous energy and enthusiasm, and that the air was filled with prophetic voices, picturing national calamities and predicting bloody and world-embracing conflicts.

Alongside of this fact he will find another fact no less conspicuous and universal, that everybody of importance in the early years of the twentieth century was an ardent champion of peace. He will find incontestable evidence that the King of England was one of the truest friends of peace who ever sat on the English throne, that the German Emperor proclaimed repeatedly that the cause of peace was ever dear to his heart, that the President of the United States was so effective as a peacemaker that he won a prize for ending a mighty war, that the Czar of Russia was so zealous in his devotion to peace that he called the nations to meet in solemn council to consider measures for ushering in an era of universal amity and good will, and that the President of France, the King of Italy, and the Mikado of Japan were not a whit behind their royal brethren in offering sacrifices on the altar of the Goddess of Peace. A crowd of royal peacemakers in a world surcharged with thoughts and threats of war, a band of lovers strolling down an avenue which they themselves had lined with lyddite shells and twelve-inch guns, this will cause our historian to rub his eyes.

CLIMAX OF BEWILDERMENT.

His bewilderment, however, will reach its climax when he discovers that it was after the establishment of an international court that all the nations voted to increase their armaments. Everybody conceded that it was better to settle international disputes by reason rather than by force, but as soon as the legal machinery was created, by means of which the swords could be dispensed with, there was a fresh fury to perfect at once all the instruments of destruction. After each new peace conference there was a fresh cry for more guns. Our historian will read with gladness the records of the Hague Conference, and of the laying of the foundation of a periodic Congress of Nations, and of a permanent High Court. He will note the neutralization of Switzerland, Belgium and Norway; the compact entered into by the countries bordering on the North Sea, to respect one another's territorial rights forever; the agreement of the same sort solemnly ratified by all the countries bordering on the Baltic; the signing of more than sixty arbitration treaties, twelve of these by the Senate of the United States; the creation of an International Bureau of American Republics, embracing twenty-one nations; the establishment of a Central American High Court; the elaboration and perfection of legal instruments looking toward the parliament of man, the federation of the world.

THRILLED BY DISMAL FOREBODINGS.

He will note also that while these splendid achievements of the peace spirit were finding a habitation and a name, the nations were thrilled as never before by dismal forebodings and the world was darkened by whispers of death and destruction. While the Palace of Peace at the Hague was building, nations hailed the advent of the airship as a glorious invention, because of the service it could render to the cause of war. This unprecedented growth of peace sentiment, accompanied by a constant increase of jealousy and suspicion, of fear and panic, among the nations of the earth, will set our historian to work to ascertain the meaning of this strange phenomenon, the most singular perhaps to be met with in the entire history of the world.

It will not take him long to discover that the fountains from which there flowed these dark and swollen streams of war rumor were all located within the military and naval encampments. It was the experts of the army and navy who were always shivering at some new peril, and painting somber pictures of what would happen in case new regiments were not added to the army and additional battleships were not voted for the fleet. It was Lord Roberts, for instance, who discovered how easily England could be overrun by a German army; and it was General Kuropatkin who had discernment to see that the Russo-Japanese war was certain to break out again. The historian will note that the magazine essays on "Perils" were written for the most part by military experts, and that the newspaper scare-articles were the productions of young men who believed what the military experts had told them. Many naval officers, active and retired, could not make an after-dinner speech without casting over their hearers the shadow of some impending conflict.

OLD ADAGE REVIVED.

It was in this way that legislative bodies came to think that possibly the country was really in danger; and looking round for a ground on which to justify new expenditures for war material, they seized upon an ancient pagan maxim,—furnished by the military experts,—"If you wish peace, prepare for war." The old adage, once enthroned, worked with the energy of a god. The love of war had largely passed away. The illusion which for ages it had created in the minds of millions had lost its spell. Men had come to see that war is butchery, savagery, murder, hell. They believed in reason. Peace was seen to be the one supreme blessing for the world, but to preserve the peace it was necessary to prepare for war. This lay at the centre of the policy of the twentieth century. No guns were asked for to kill men with—guns were mounted as safeguards of the peace. No battleships were launched to fight with—they were preservers of the peace. Colossal armies and gigantic navies were exhibited as a nation's ornaments—beautiful tokens of its love of peace. And following thus the Angel of Peace, the nations increased their armaments until they spent upon them over two billions of dollars every year, and had amassed national debts aggregating thirty-five billions. The expenditure crushed the poorest of the nations and crippled the richest of them, but the burden was gladly borne because it was a sacrifice for the cause of peace. It was a pathetic and thrilling testimony of the human heart's hatred of war and longing for peace, when the nations became willing to bankrupt themselves in the effort to keep from fighting.

IS THE OLD ADAGE A DELUSION?

But at this point our historian will begin to ask whether there might have been any relation between the multiplication of the instruments of slaughter and the constant rise of the tide of war talk and war feeling. He will probably suspect that the mere presence of the shining apparatus of death may have kindled in men's hearts feelings of jealousy and distrust, and created panics which even Hague Conferences and peaceful-minded rulers and counselors could not possibly allay. When he finds that it was only men who lived all their life with guns who were haunted by horrible visions and kept dreaming hideous dreams, and that the larger the armament the more was a nation harrassed by fears of invasion and possible annihilation, he will propound to himself these questions: Was it all a delusion, the notion that vast military and naval establishments are a safeguard of the peace? Was it a form of national lunacy, this frenzied outpouring of national treasure for the engines of destruction? Was it an hallucination, this feverish conviction that only by guns can a nation's dignity be symbolized, and her place in the world's life and action be honorably maintained?

QUESTIONS OUR DESCENDANTS WILL ASK.

These are questions which our descendants are certain to ponder, and why should not we face them now? If this preparing for war in order to keep peace is indeed a delusion, the sooner we find it out the better, for it is the costliest of all obsessions by which humanity has ever been swayed and mastered. There are multiplying developments which are leading thoughtful observers to suspect that this pre-Christian maxim is a piece of antiquated wisdom, and that the desire to establish peace in our modern world by multiplying and brandishing the instruments of war is a product of mental aberration. Certainly there are indications pointing in this direction. The world's brain may possibly have become unbalanced by a bacillus, carried in the folds of a heathen adage. The most virulent and devastating disease now raging on the earth is militarism.

THE MILITARISTS OBSESSION.

The militarist of our day betrays certain symptoms with which the student of pathology is not altogether unfamiliar. There are obsessions which obtain so firm a grip upon the mind that it is difficult to banish them. For example, a man who has the impression that he is being tracked by a vindictive and relentless foe is not going to sit down and quietly listen to an argument, the aim of which is to prove that no such enemy exists, and that the sounds which have caused the panic are the footfalls of an approaching friend. The militarist will listen to no man who attempts to prove that his "perils" are creations of the brain. Indeed, he is exceedingly impatient under contradiction; and, here again, he is like all victims of hallucinations. To deny his assumptions or to question his conclusions, is to him both blasphemy and treason, a sort of profanity and imbecility worthy of contempt and scorn. He alone stands on foundations which cannot be shaken, and other men who do not possess his inside information, or technical training for dealing with such questions, are living in a fool's paradise. The ferocity with which he attacks all who dare oppose him is the fury of a man whose brain is abnormally excited.

Like many another fever, militarism grows by what it feeds on, and unless checked by heroic measures is certain to burn the patient up. Men in a delirium seldom have a sense of humor. The world is fearfully grim to them, and life a solemn and tragic thing. They express absurdities with a sober face, and make ridiculous assertions without a smile. It may be that the militarists are in a sort of delirium. At any rate, they publish articles entitled, "Armies the Real Promoters of Peace," without laughing aloud at the grotesqueness of what they are doing.

COMIC SERIOUSNESS.

The militarist is comic in his seriousness. He says that if you want to keep the peace you must prepare for war, and yet he knows that where men prepare for war by carrying bowie knives, peace is a thing unheard of, and that where every man is armed with a revolver, the list of homicides is longest. He declares his belief in kindly feelings and gentle manners, and proceeds at once to prove that a nation ought to make itself look as ferocious as possible. In order to induce nations to be gentlemen, he would have them all imitate the habits of rowdies. To many persons this seems ludicrous, to a militarist it is no joke. He is a champion of peace, but he wants to carry a gun. The man who paces up and down my front pavement with a gun on his shoulder may have peaceful sentiments, but he does not infuse peace into me. It does not help matters for him to shout out every few minutes, "I will not hurt you if you behave yourself," for I do not know his standard of good behavior, and the very sight of the gun keeps me in a state of chronic alarm. But the militarist says that, for promoting harmonious sentiments and peaceful emotions, there is nothing equal to an abundance of well-constructed guns.

A droll man indeed is the militarist. What matters it what honeyed words the King of England and the German Kaiser interchange, so long as each nation hears constantly the launching by the other of a larger battleship? And even though Prince Bulow may say to Mr. Asquith a hundred times a week, "We mean no harm," and Mr. Asquith may shout back, "We are your friends," so long as London and Berlin are never beyond earshot of soldiers, who are practicing how to shoot to kill, just so long will England and Germany be flooded with the gossip of hatred, and thrown into hysteria by rumors of invasion and carnage.

TERRIBLE EXTRAVAGANCE OF MILTARISM.

Certain facts will surely, some day, burn themselves into the consciousness of all thinking men. The expensiveness of the armed peace is just beginning to catch the eye of legislators. The extravagance of the militarists will bring about their ruin. They cry for battleships at ten millon dollars each, and Parliament or Congress votes them. But later on it is explained that battleships are worthless without cruisers, cruisers are worthless without torpedo boats, torpedo boats are worthless without torpedo-boat destroyers, all these are worthless without colliers, ammunition boats, hospital boats, repair boats; and these altogether are worthless without deeper harbors, longer docks, more spacious navy yards. And what are all these worth without officers and men, upon whose education millions of dollars have been lavished. When at last the navy has been fairly launched, the officials of the army come forward and demonstrate that a navy, after all, is worthless unless it is supported by a colossal land force. Thus are the governments led on, step by step, into a treacherous morass, in which they are at first entangled, and finally overwhelmed.

GREAT NATIONS FACE DEFICITS.

All the great nations are today facing deficits, caused in every case by the military and naval experts. Into what a tangle the finances of Russia and Japan have been brought by militarists is known to everybody. Germany has, in a single generation, increased her national debt from eighteen million dollars to more than one billion dollars. The German Minister of Finance looks wildly round in search of new sources of national income. Financial experts confess that France is approaching the limit of her sources of revenue. Her deficit is created by her army and navy. The British government is always seeking for new devices by means of which to fill a depleted treasury. Her Dreadnoughts keep her poor. Italy has for years staggered on the verge of bankruptcy because she carries an overgrown army on her back. Even our own rich republic faces this year a deficit of over a hundred million dollars, largely due to the one hundred and thirty millions we are spending on our navy. Mr. Cortelyou has called our attention to the fact that while in thirty years we have increased our population by 85 per cent, and our wealth by 185 per cent, we have increased our national expenses by 400 per cent.

It is within those thirty years that we have spent one billion dollars on our navy. And the end is not yet. The Secretary of the Navy in 1909 asked for twenty-seven additional vessels for that year, four of which were to be battleships at ten million dollars each, and he was frank to say that these twenty-seven were only a fraction of the vessels to be asked for later on. We have already, built or building, thirty-one first-class battleships, our navy ranking next to Great Britain, Germany standing third, France fourth, and Japan fifth; but never has the naval lobby at Washington been so voracious and so frantic for additional safeguards of the peace as today.

PEACE AT ANY PRICE.

The militarists are peace-at-any-price men. They are determined to have peace even at the risk of national bankruptcy. Everything good in Germany, Italy, Austria, England and Russia is held back by the confiscation of the proceeds of industry carried on for the support of the army and navy. In the United States the development of our resources is checked by this same fatal policy. We have millions of acres of desert land to be irrigated, millions of acres of swamp land to be drained, thousands of miles of inland waterways to be improved, harbors to be deepened, canals to be dug, and forests to be safeguarded, and yet for all these works of cardinal importance we can afford only a pittance. We have not sufficient money to pay decent salaries to our United States judges, or to the men who represent us abroad. We have pests, implacable and terrible, like the gypsy moth, and plagues like tuberculosis, for whose extermination millions of money are needed at once.

On every hand we are hampered and handicapped because we are spending two-thirds of our enormous revenues on pensions for past wars, and on equipment for wars yet to come. The militarists begrudge every dollar that does not go into army or navy. They believe that all works of internal improvement ought to be paid for by the selling of bonds, even the purchase of sites for new post-offices being made possible by mortgaging the future. They never weary of talking of our enormous national wealth, and laugh at the niggardly mortals who do not believe in investing it in guns. Why should we not spend as great a proportion of our wealth on military equipment as the other nations of the world? This is their question, and the merchants and farmers will answer it some day.

THE YELLOW PERIL.

The yellow peril is indeed portentous if we propose to meet China on the battlefield. Why not make such a meeting an impossibility? Why not do for the Pacific what our fathers did for the Canadian border? They prepared for peace and got it. Why not spend millions of dollars in cementing the friendship of Orient and Occident, and work without ceasing to keep the temper of the two worlds fraternal and sweet? Instead of sending on battleships, at an enormous cost, a few thousand young men who represent neither the brain nor the culture of our country, why not send to China and Japan at governmental expense delegations of teachers and publicists, editors and bankers, farmers and lawyers, physicians and labor leaders, men who can give the Orient an idea of what sort of people we are? We can send a thousand such representatives across the Pacific every year for the next hundred years for less money than we are spending this year on our navy. No such blundering and extravagant method of exchanging international courtesies has ever been devised as that of sending to foreign capitals naval officers and sailors on battleships and cruisers.

Countries never fight whose influential citizens know one another. Why not get acquainted with our Eastern neighbors? In the arts of peace we are their superior. In the art of war China can become our equal in a single generation, just as Japan in one generation has risen to the military level of Russia. Military virtues are simple, and can be rapidly developed. They run through the stages of their evolution swiftly and come to perfection early. The virtues of a Christ-like spirit are the beautiful growths of a thousand years, and we are insane if we are willing to jeopardize what we have gained by infinite sacrifice and effort, by entering a field upon which victory depends upon neither beauty of spirit nor nobility of heart, but upon the shrewd manipulation of physical forces. The thing we ought to say to the Orient again and again, both by word and by deed is, "We believe in peace! We abhor war! It is contrary to our nature, opposed by our religion, hostile to our ideals and traditions. We do not believe in settling disputes by force. We believe in reason. See our hands, we carry no bludgeons. Search us, we own no concealed weapons. Trust us, for we are going to trust you. Let us work together for our mutual advantage, and the progress of humanity!"

CAN AMERICA STAND ALONE?

But, delusion or not, can one nation hold aloof from this dance of death so long as other nations keep on dancing? Of course, America will limit her armament provided other nations do the same. But —we are asked—is it wise or safe for our republic, isolated and alone, to say boldly, "We will go no further in this business. Let other nations do what they will, America at any rate is going to pour her gold hereafter into the channels of education and economic development." Why not say this? To be sure, it would be a risk, but why not run the risk? We are incurring far greater risks by our present policy. We are running the risk of changing the temper of our people, introducing structural changes in our form of government, and embroiling ourselves with nations which are now friendly. Preparing for war is hazardous business. It is not time, we all admit, for disarmament. America must do her part in the policing of the seas. It is not the hour to discuss even a reduction in armaments. Our battleships are not going to be sold at auction. We all agree that America must have a navy adequate to her needs. But has not the time arrived to call a halt in this indefinite expansion of an ever bigger navy? The militarists are just now asking Congress for 26,000-ton battleships carrying 14-inch guns, and a high naval authority says that the advisability of building even 40,000 or 50,000 or 60,000-ton battleships is "the mature opinion of many of the ablest and most conservative officers of our navy today." What the radicals want is not yet disclosed.

THE HORRORS OF ARMED PEACE.

Much has been written about the horrors of war: the time has come to write of the horrors of an armed peace. In many ways it is more terrible than war. War is soon over, and the wounds heal. An armed peace goes on indefinitely, and its wounds gape and fester and poison all the air. War furnishes opportunity for men to be brave; an armed peace gives rise to interminable gossip about imaginary goblins and dangers. In war, nations think of principles, but in an armed peace the mind is preoccupied exclusively with devising ways of increasing the efficiency of the implements of slaughter. War develops men, but an armed peace rots moral fibre.

PLAYING WITH BATTLESHIPS.

It is possible to buy peace at too high a price. Better fight and get done with it than keep nations incessantly thinking evil thoughts about their neighbors. Playing with battleships is a sorry business. The magnetic needle, disturbed by metal, loses its fidelity to the north, and the ship may go to pieces on the rocks. The heart of a nation, pressed close to steel armor, becomes abnormal in its action. Battleships blind the eyes to ideals which are highest. They draw the heart away from belief in the potency of spiritual forces. They quench faith in the power of justice, mercy, love. They minister to the atheism of force. They blur the fact that America became a world-power without a navy. They educate men to put reliance on reeds, which will break when the crisis comes. They fan the flames of vanity and self-seeking. They are deceivers. They seem to be the dominating forces of history, when in fact they are bubbles blown on a current which they did nothing to create. They delude men by inducing them to accept them as solutions of problems, whereas they create problems more serious than any already on hand. They strain international relations and fill the papers with gossip, debilitating to adults and demoralizing to the young. They feed the maw of panic-mongers, and darken the heavens with swarms of falsehoods and rumors.

Militarism has foisted upon the world a policy which handicaps the work of the church, cripples the hand of philanthropy, blocks the wheels of constructive legislation, cuts the nerve of reform, blinds statesmen to dangers which are imminent and portentous, such as poverty and all the horde of evils which come from insufficient nutrition, and fixes the eyes upon perils which are fanciful and far away. It multiplies the seeds of discord, debilitates the mind by filling it with vain imaginations, corrodes the heart by feelings of suspicion and ill-will. It is starving and stunting the lives of millions, and subjecting the very frame of society to a strain which it cannot indefinitely endure. A nation which buys guns at seventy thousand dollars each, when the slums of great cities are rotting, and millions of human beings struggle for bread, will, unless it repents, be overtaken soon or late by the same divine wrath which shattered Babylon to pieces, and hurled Rome from a throne which was supposed to be eternal.

WHO WILL BREAK THE SPELL?

The world is bewildered and plagued, harassed and tormented, by an awful delusion. Who will break the spell? America can do it. Will she? To ape the customs of European monarchies is weakness. Why not do a fine and original thing? Our fathers had an intuition that the Now World should be different from the Old, that it had a unique destiny, and that it must pursue an original course. That is the spiritual meaning of the Monroe doctrine—that no foreign influence shall be permitted to thwart the development of America along original lines. Alas, the Old World has broken into our Paradise, and we are dethroning ideals for which our fathers were willing to die.

"Peace hath her victories
No less renowned than war," said Milton to Cromwell long ago, and humanity is waiting for a nation which will win the victories that Milton saw. Will America devote herself to the work of winning these victories of peace? Will she spend half as much the next ten years in preparing for peace as she has spent the last ten years in preparing for war? Experience has demonstrated that swollen navies multiply the points of friction, foster distrust, foment suspicion, fan the fires of hatred, become a defiance and a menace, and lie like a towering obstacle across the path of nations toilsomely struggling along the upward way. The old policy is wrong. The old leaders are discredited. The old programme is obsolete. Those who wish for peace must prepare for it. Our supreme business is not the scaring of rivals, but the making of friends.

Will America become a leader? At present we are an imitator. How humiliating to tag at the heels of Great Britain in the naval procession, haunted always by the fear that we may fall behind Germany! Why not choose a road on which it will be possible to be first? Why not head the procession of nations whose faces are toward the light? This is America's opportunity. Will she, by setting a daring example, arrest the growth of armaments throughout the world? The nation which does this is certain of an imperishable renown.

JAMES BRYCE ON PEACE.

James Bryce spoke recently on the celebration of the 100 years of peace maintained between Great Britain and the United States. "No doubt," he said, "there have been many cases in which great powers have kept the peace for 100 years. But what makes this celebration unique of its kind, what gives it special value as showing how war can be avoided if people desire to avoid it, is the peculiar circumstances of the frontier which separates Canada from the United States. It is a frontier of more than 3,000 miles, a frontier which might easily furnish grounds of controversy. In large part it is an artificial frontier, following a parallel of latitude and running through towns and villages. Even houses are intersected by the boundary line. I remember being shown a house which an enterprising man had used for the purpose of evading the laws which in both countries regulate the sale of excisable liquors. When anything inconsistent with the law either of Canada or the United States was being perpetrated in a room on the one side, the scene of the offence was rapidly removed to the other. It can be readily understood that where rivers meander from one country to the other, where the boundary line runs through lakes, there are endless questions in regard to fishing, navigation, irrigation, and the use of water power out of which a war might be created if the greatest care and good feeling were not exercised on both sides.

"We hear many discussions, and they are not likely to be soon over, about the maintenance of armaments and the evils which they inflict upon the great countries of the world. In that respect we and the United States have set an example which it is worth while to bear in mind. The value of the example which the two countries have set in being able to live without armaments directed against one another will arouse the sympathy of other countries, and it will be an example all over the world to those who in every nation seek peace and ensue it."

The Things that Abide

A Frank and Reassuring Word.

BY PROF. RUDOLPH EUCKEN.

WE are evidently in the midst of a difficult and serious crisis in religion. Various causes have contributed in bringing about the state of things which surrounds us today. Many changes have taken place with regard to our views of history, man, and God.

Taking all the changes together, a further question arises whether we are able to hold fast even to Christianity itself. We maintain with confidence that the nucleus of Christianity is not touched by the changes we have enumerated, but that, in fact, on account of the necessity and the justification of the changes of time, Christianity is able to develop itself in a freer, deeper, and higher manner. We must bear in mind that the essential elements of religion subsist not by means of theories of the universe or of life, but by means of a specific life which religion engenders in the heart of man. Life, therefore, does not signify the mere subjective reflection of the individual, but an extension of the boundary of human existence in the direction of the construction of a specific reality in the infinite and eternal. Now, if the reality that Christianity has already constructed corresponds to the deepest and inmost demands of our social, moral, and spiritual existence, we can then affirm unconditionally an eternal truth in Christianity.

SPIRITUAL LIFE.

The spiritual life presented in Christianity possesses a substance which is above time, and none of the displacements of social life or culture can injure such a spiritual nucleus. But such an eternal life, in its effects upon man, has to be brought on its existential or intellectual side into agreement with the universal situation of mankind; and if, within such a universal situation, essential changes result, the Christian world is obliged to acknowledge such changes and bring itself into agreement with them. We must not think that the eternal is merely what remains unaltered in the midst of all the transformations of the ages. The eternal is far rather what enters into all the manifold changes, preserves itself in the midst of them all, and, at the same time, is able to decide between what is essential and what is accidental in the development of the new spiritual life of man.

A STRONG LONGING FOR RELIGION.

Serious confusions arise if the eternal is mixed up with what is of a temporal and transient nature; and such a mixture is especially to be regretted in such an age as ours, when once more there is unmistakably a strong longing for religion. Now, the fact is, that out of the movements of civilization and culture painful entanglements have come into existence. In civilization and culture we have discovered much, but we have not discovered what we sought for and hoped for. Indeed, much unsuspected darkness and evil have emerged to the surface; more and more has the danger of positing life upon merely external conditions, and of losing our spiritual anchorage in our hurry and worry upon the current of the moment, made itself felt. Consequently there has arisen once more within the soul a "homesickness," an aspiration after greater inwardness of life, after closer inner unity amongst men, after more eternal content for our life, and, above all, after a greater moral strengthening. This aspiration necessarily forces its way into the pathway of religion, but it will not succeed in doing this so long as it encounters pieces of religious tradition which are contradicted by the truth gained in modern times. Such an effort will succeed only if the spiritual content of Christianity be brought into harmony with the most important situations of the present. Therefore, we must aspire after a Christianity more universal and more active—a Christianity which is grounded in the inmost nature of man.

NEARER THE SOLUTION.

Without a doubt the friends of religion find themselves today in a situation full of difficulty and dangers, and it is not easy to discover the line of demarcation between a yea and a nay. But, in spite of such difficulties and dangers, we can be of good courage and cheer, because what has brought us into such a difficult position is in no manner the doubt or caprice of individuals; we have been led into the present position by the total historical movement of the world. Therefore, we may hope that the same power that governs the historical movements of the world and that has placed a burden upon our shoulders will grant us power to solve this problem, or at least bring it "miles and miles" nearer solution. It is necessary to seek a pathway between the transient which still preserves much that ought really before now to have passed away, and that, on the other hand, which preserves nothing of the past, but empties everything into the stream of the passing moment, and consequently destroys all truth. We can discover such a path only in so far as we are able to differentiate between the eternal and the temporal—between what has duration and what passes away.

God's Whip

Christian! Who calls us Christian? We,
Who trumpet our creed from sea to sea,
Who bridge the ocean with eager hands
To rescue the pagan of other lands,
Yet breed our criminals in the womb—
Product of factory and loom
Where mothers, toiling from early morn,
Barter the strength of the child unborn.

Oh, did we live the Christian creed,
Did we feel the blade of human need,
Would millions of men be underfed
And others surfeited with bread?
Could we take these counterfeit shapes of men,
Drive them, cheat them, starve them—then,
When the God-spark burst in rebellious flame,
Curse them with prison and with shame,
Shut them from starlight and the sun,
Punished for crimes that we have done?
Criminals we call them—we!
For our eyes are holden; we cannot see
Fruit of exhausted motherhood
Slaving to earn the daily food.

Christian! Who calls us Christian? We,
Who chant our hymns of a life to be
And close our eyes to the living sore
Eating its way to the nation's core;
Who flaunt our virtues throughout the earth,
Singing the great Redeemer's birth,
While evils naked within the land
Cry for the swift destroyer's hand.

Oh, could we hurl the Christian speech
Wherever the whip of God could reach,
Would little children, against his will,
Labor in factory and mill,
Thwarting the Maker's perfect plan,
When out of his love he created man?
Oh, could we rage as the Saviour raged,
Would innocence be trapped and caged,
The virtue of woman bought and sold
For the sin of man that is ages old?
We would scourge them all from the holy place,
Thieves that plunder the human race.
Christian! Who calls us Christian? We,
Who poison the veins of the race to be!

Not till we give God's man a chance,
Shall we see humanity's whole advance,
Man shall not realize his dream,
Till motherhood is the gift supreme.
Not till the meanest has his place
In the forward march of the human race,
Not till the poorest has the right
To love and honor and food and light,
Not till the weakest knows his might,
Till we free the captive and sheathe the sword,
Not till we stand before the Lord—
A nation splendid and unafraid;
Made in the image that God made,
No man a tyrant and none a slave,
Shall the world be saved, as he meant to save!

The Empress Dowager and Her Funeral

Description of the Customs and Circumstances Attending Burial of Japan's Most Remarkable Woman.

BY GRETCHEN GARST.

THE late Empress Dowager was a most unusual woman from the Japanese point of view, and one of the great women of the world from any one's point of view. She was greater in capability than her husband, though he got more honor. Her work for the soldiers at the time of the Russian war and her interest in the people of her land is well known, and the people loved her and mourn her loss.

She was at one of the country palaces when her illness came. As soon as her condition was reported critical, the Emperor and Empress went to see her, but were too late. The specials that came out, however, stated that they were to bring her back to Tokyo, as all hope was gone. Her corpse was brought back as if she were living, the soldiers saluting as it was put in the royal carriage, and all that. The next day, she was reported to have died, and was officially dead. It makes you shudder at first thought, but from the Japanese point of view there are several reasons that make it more reasonable. Had she been reported as dead at the other palace, there would have had to be much more ceremony in connection with bringing her to the capital. That would have added greatly to the expense and trouble. As it was, she died, officially, in the capital, just as she should have done, and all the ceremonies were left until the time of her funeral, about a month after her death.

THE DAY OF CEREMONIES.

The day of the ceremonies here was Sunday, May 24, and the hour of the procession was eight at night. The route of the procession was crowded from early morning, and by one o'clock the side walks were filled to their utmost. The space alloted to foreigners was about a block long, and was filled to the limit. Traffic was stopped at four, so all were in their places by that time. We took camp chairs, and reading matter, and a lunch! Those who had not taken chairs, bought orange boxes, and sat on them. There was enough going on so that the hours went by rapidly. At six o'clock, coolies had sand well spread over the route, and soldiers were taking their places on either side. All down the center were marines five abreast. By eight it was very dark, but the street was well lighted with arc lights. At the boom of a cannon, the procession started, the marines falling into step with the funeral march played by one of the Imperial bands. The sand deadened the foot falls, the band music was most impressive, and the repeated boom of the cannon added to the weirdness of it all.

FUNERAL MUSIC.

There were priests in grey and white, different orders being indicated by different sorts of head dress. Some carried queer drums, others mirrors, others gifts for the dead, torches, banners of beautiful brocade, and so on. There were bugle corps here and there in the procession. and several bands. Just in front of the huge funeral car was a group of priests playing the old fashioned musical instruments. They looked like bellows with sharp points, the points being held toward the sky and the mouth piece very near the bottom. The music consisted of strange, squeaking, screeching sounds. At the time of the former Empress Dowager's funeral that was the only music.

The funeral car was a massive affair, drawn by three black oxen heavily harnessed with white silk, and led by priests. The car was inlaid with silver and gold and very handsome. The wheels groaned painfully, and in the comparative silence the groans seemed terrible. It seems that there are supposed to be seven different tones, each representing a step to purgatory—so I heard. The car had to be partially rebuilt because they found that they had failed to get the proper number of sounds.

After a great number of priests, there came soldiers of high rank, nobles, and so on, men in black heavily brocaded, or rather braided, with gold. Parliament members marched in the procession, and at the last there were hundreds and hundreds of infantry. Not a foreigner walked. The representatives of the Emperor and Empress, of all foreign countries, and others went by a different route, to the place where the ceremonies were held.

VAST EXPENDITURE OF MONEY.

The procession must have taken about an hour and a half to pass from the palace where preliminary ceremonies were held to the shrine built especially for the funeral. The shrine was near that of the Meiji Emperor, but could not be the same. It is a blessing that England has her Westminster, and it is to be hoped that the time will come when Japan will start a different way of showing respect to those in high places. The Meiji Emperor's funeral cost several million yen, and this funeral cost nearly as much. For the already heavily taxed people it seems terrible.

The body of the Empress Dowager was taken to Kyoto on Monday, and as I understand it the ceremonies down there took more than one day. The railroad along which the special train passed was well peopled with those who wished to see. There were three days when no music was allowed, when schools and public offices and stores were closed. There will be a year of mourning, but not to the extent that there was for the Emperor. Mourning in the court circles is a big blessing. Geisha dancing and drinking are strictly prohibited. All that part of the Tai Sho Exhibition that is on here in Tokyo, has been stopped. That far, the mourning is a great blessing.

USE THE SCHOOL-HOUSES!

By Margaret Woodrow Wilson, in La-Follette's Weekly.

If we, the people of the United States, are really to have a part in our government, we must organize. If we do not want the office holders whom we elect to be under obligations to political machines not of our making, we must make our own machine, "the machine of democracy," and demand their allegiance to it. We elect our representatives and then let them go their way unheeded by us except for irresponsible criticism by individuals here and there. No wonder that they do not always know what the people want. Let us get together so that we may tell them.

All of our representatives are organized into deliberative bodies. We, whom they represent, ought also to be organized for deliberation. When this happens, and then only, shall we vote intelligently; and then also shall we be helpers and advisers to our representatives. We are always saying, "Something ought to be done." Let us get together and do it, or back our representatives in their doing of it.

In short, the great work that we American people have before us—as I see it—is the conservation and organization of the forces of democracy. At present these forces are being dissipated in every direction. We must concentrate them that they may have motive power.

The school buildings, since they belong to us all and are natural centers, are obviously the places in which we can best concentrate these forces. Let us all unite in erecting the standards of democracy in the school buildings and then stand to them.

Not only should the schoolhouses be provided for this use without charge, but paid secretarial service should be furnished—just as this service is furnished for the meetings of alderman, legislators and other subcommittees of the citizens.

Let us see that the young people of every neighborhood obtain these opportunities in a clean place, with the companionship of those who love them—the Schoolhouse Social Center.

The latest news is that Peru has thrown itself open to the gospel. Hitherto Protestantism has been practically ruled out of the country.

The Reunion of Christendom

BY WILLIAM E. BARTON.

EVERY now and then some religious body convened in its national organization cries out against the great scandal of a divided Christendom. Reports from mission fields give emphasis to the arguments, while overchurched communities where sectarian rivalry flourishes on home missionary appropriations add their double element of perplexity to the problem and urgency for its solution. Every now and again some body of this character announces to the world its serious intention to meet all Christian bodies half way, or a little more, and to terminate so far as in it lies the evils of a church professing one common Lord but divided into a multitude of conflicting and inharmonious sects.

These proclamations and overtures have never been taken very seriously by the world at large, or by other branches of the Christian Church. Each one has been duly advertised and declared the beginning of a new era, but the evil of sectarianism goes straight ahead. It is not as bad as it once was. The amenities between denominations grow; old sectarian hostility diminishes, and the rancor of the old-time argument has almost completely disappeared. A very considerable degree of Christian toleration has grown out of this and kindred movements, yet it must be confessed that the declarations of the several denominations that they individually intend hereafter to move straight forward to Christian union have never been taken very seriously. They have been treated quite as seriously as in general they have deserved.

Speaking broadly, it may safely be asserted that those denominations which have talked most in favor of Christian union have done most to render it impossible. They have cried out in horror against the harm from sectarian divisions, but in general have felt so virtuous over the mere fact of that discovery that they have done but little more.

We might fairly characterize a number of these movements somewhat after the following fashion:

The representatives of a certain denomination, let us say the Christotheists, if we may invent a name, assemble and pass resolutions something like the following:

"Resolved, That all Christians should be one.

"Resolved, That there ought to be no division in the body of Christ.

"Resolved, That we ourselves, as representatives of the whole body of that part of the church known as the Christotheists, will from this day forward do all that in us lies to remove this sin and reproach from the whole church of Christ.

"Resolved, That we propose to all branches of the Christian church an organic union on the basis of the four simple doctrines hereafter named.

"(1) One and one are two.

"(2) The shortest possible distance between two points is a straight line.

"(3) Everybody ought to be good.

"(4) All Christian bodies must recognize in their divine appointment the central principle of the Christotheists."

This quadrilateral is adopted, the doxology is sung, prayer is offered to God for His blessing upon the movement, and the convention adjourns, after appointing a body authorized to treat with all other denominations for the reunion of Christendom on this basis.

One by one the other bodies meet. They receive with dignified courtesy the official overture from the Christotheists. It is referred to a Committee or Commission, which, after due deliberation, reports as follows:

"Resolved, That we have received with great gratitude to God and sincere appreciation of the brotherly spirit shown by the Christotheists, the foregoing resolutions and believe that they present a nearer approach to possible Christian union than anything we have previously considered.

"Resolved, That we heartily accept propositions 1, 2 and 3, but believe that some slight modification of No. 4 would be necessary before this denomination, as a whole, could accept it.

"Resolved, That we sincerely hope these negotiations may not terminate, and we appoint a commission authorized to confer further with the Christotheists and other Christian bodies in the sincere hope that these negotiations may not end until all the churches of our country and of the world become united in essential unity."

Whereupon they sing the doxology and adjourn, and something like unto this happens in each of the other denominations, as they consider it one by one.

A year or two or three or four years later the Christotheists hold their next convention. Among a multitude of other reports on every conceivable matter of church business and politics is wedged in the report from the commission on Christian unity, which sets forth the fact that these other denominations have acted as they have and deplores the fact that any of them should have quibbled at Article 4. The commission, with tears in its eyes, sets forth the fact that great concessions had been made by this denomination in granting articles Nos. 1, 2 and 3, and that it could not possibly concede any more without completely surrendering everything which has been held vital in its own history and throughout its centuries of religious teaching. It, therefore, mourns over the obduracy and hardness of heart of these other communions, but thanks God that so far as it is concerned, responsibility for the divisions of Christendom has ceased. It sends for water and washes its hands and proclaims publicly that it has done all that could have been asked of it, and more, and that henceforth the guilt of a divided Christendom must rest on the hearts of those who have insisted upon perpetuating it.

Having done this, it proceeds to issue sectarian literature of the most uncompromising sort, virtually denying the right of any other to consider itself an integral part of the church of Christ and carries on a vigorous campaign of proselyting, all the while proclaiming that it stands foremost among the denominations as an exponent of Christian union.

No doubt good has come even out of this absurd advance towards Christian union, but we venture to suggest that no overture looking toward the reunion of Christendom need be taken seriously so long as the denomination making it insists upon including in its prerequisites for union a recognition of that which constitutes in whole or in part the essential element in its present division from the rest of the Church of Christ.

There once was an Irishman, who went into a restaurant on a Friday in Lent and seating himself at a table said to the waiter, "Bring me a whale!"

The waiter told him that they were just out of whales.

"Thin bring me a shark!"

The waiter replied that they were not serving sharks today.

"Thin bring me a jelly-fish!"

The waiter responded that jelly-fish was not on the bill of fare.

"Thin bring me a good, big beefsteak; for the saints in hiven know I've tried hard enough to get fish!"

The perfectly clear conscience with which this son of the old sod addressed himself to his beefsteak on a Lenten Friday is paralleled by the assurance with which those denominations set forth to do the most sectarian acts, comforted by the knowledge that the saints in heaven know they have tried hard enough to obtain union upon a basis that would disfellowship a vast majority of Protestant Christians.

If it were to be asked, what then shall be our future basis of union, a tentative answer might be made of this sort:

Hitherto each denomination has proposed union on the basis of that which has separated it from other Christian bodies. It might be worth while to propose a union on the basis of that which each denomination has in common with all other Christian bodies. When the reunion of Christendom comes it will not be brought about by each denomination shouting its own tenets and then making grudging and parsimonious concessions by way of compromising, each one going reluctantly a mile, while the others insist that it shall go twain. Our fathers were very sure that they were right in the things concerning which they differed from each other. Possibly some day we shall discover an equal confidence that we are right in the things wherein we mutually agree.

ON WAR'S BRINK.

CAN they who sit on thrones of power
Forget the voices of the years?
Shall earth be cast, in one fell hour,
Into an ocean-flood of tears!

From countless fields of bloody death,
From war-scarred hill and skull-sown plain,
A clear voice comes that loudly saith
"Come, Peace, to earth; rule, Love, with men."

O God of Peace, descend, we pray;
Attend the counsels of the wise;
To those who rage speak forth Thy "Nay!"
Forbid this costly sacrifice.

T. C. C.

LEST WE FORGET!

IN these days of war and threat of war the people of America may well turn their hearts toward Almighty God in devout gratitude that our own land was preserved—and yet how narrowly!—from itself being plunged into bloody conflict with Mexico. With all Europe at this writing on the point of engaging in what without doubt would prove to be the bloodiest war in modern history, the patient policy of President Wilson in waiting for and helping the Mexican tangle to unravel itself stands in sharp and grateful contrast.

IT COULD BE TAKEN HUMOROUSLY.

HUMOR is not altogether absent from the Northern California action in excluding the Berkeley Church from its convention. A clause of the resolution passed by the convention is worthy of a place in a museum. Under the last "whereas" it is declared that the Berkeley Church—listen!—

"by this act has ceased to be a Christian Church within the meaning of the by-laws of the corporation known as the Christian Church of California."

"The Christian Church of California"—what an outrage upon our catholicity! No, not an outrage, it is a burlesque. Berkeley Church "has ceased to be a Christian church." Why? Because it has resolved to receive CHRISTIANS into its fellowship!

If it were not one's own dear brethren who were guilty of perpetrating this thing it would be the height of fun, and we should congratulate Mr. Loken and his people on having stellar parts in so quaint and entertaining a play.

CHICAGO NEEDS HIM.

THE election of Rev. Orvis F. Jordan to the presidency of Christian University at Canton, Mo., raises an issue a little bit more serious in character than any issue Chicago churches of Disciples have had to face in many a day. The main problem in building up our work in this great city has been to keep strong leaders permanently here. Chicago pulpits have furnished the Disciples' brotherhood with some of its finest pulpit and college leaders. There are Ewers of Pittsburgh, Campbell of Hannibal, Taylor of Columbia, Rothenburger of Cleveland, Fortune of Transylvania, Hoover of Indiana, Ward of Newark, Buckner of Connellsville, to mention no others.

These men left Chicago at great cost to the consistent and healthy development of our church life here. In the hope that Mr. Jordan still holds in abeyance his decision on the Canton call we cannot refrain, on behalf of the vital interests in this city with which he is intimately connected, from uttering a protest against his departure from Chicago. Mr. Jordan is a unique figure in the common life of our churches in Chicago. He is both a pastor and secretary of the city missionary society.

As pastor he has rare gifts and the finest training, and has met with a high degree of success in seven years of labor in a field where but few men could succeed at all. As secretary of the city mission society he has introduced new standards higher and wiser than obtain in the administration of mission work in many cities. He has made the Disciples a factor of significance far beyond their proportionate numerical strength in the interdenominational counsels of Chicago. He knows how to do "team work" with his own immediate brethren and with other Christian people also.

He knows Chicago as no other Disciple minister who ever lived here knows it. Its nooks and crannies he has explored with the eye of a sociologist and with the purpose of a Christian leader. Facts as to the racial distribution of population, as to social and moral conditions of people of all sorts and sets drip from his finger-tips. He knows the sordid and slum level of Chicago's people and he knows sympathetically, and works with, the mighty social forces that are operating to reform and cleanse and Christianize the town. His presence in the city mission work has been an inspiration. He thinks independently. He has broadened the vision of every minister by his own enthusiastic idealism.

Mr. Jordan is the kind of a man you lean on. His church people lean on him. His mission society co-workers lean on him. His brother ministers lean on him. The national societies at Cincinnati and Indianapolis and Kansas City which spend money in Chicago lean on him. They know that his administration of their interests will be business-like and fruitful. One cannot think of Chicago Discipledom with O. F. Jordan left out.

The Christian Century does not set itself up as a conscience for him in this hour, but we do venture to go so far as to state our honest belief that he ought not to leave the great work in which he is now engaged. He is a city man, ordained to a city task, and with all the hardship of it, as compared to a college position in comfortable old Missouri, we have faith that in the long run he will not fail of his reward.

A FALSE PICTURE.

AN article in The Christian Evangelist of last week written by Rev. A. C. Smither, reports the action of the Northern California Convention in excluding the Berkeley Church, and undertakes to recite the causes leading up to this drastic and un-Christian action. In certain of its explicit statements the article is plainly intended to mislead, and its omission to state certain facts leaves with the uninformed reader a thoroughly false picture of the situation. It is our purpose to present a full reply to Mr. Smither's article and we hope to do so in our next issue.

WHO OWNS THE LANDSCAPE?

A GREETING from a friend comes in the form of a group of pictures from his beautiful home, with views through the oaks, and underneath the printed legend, "All who see own the landscape." And how rich that makes us! For the world is beautiful and a king can see no more loveliness than a shepherd just because he happens to be a king. He who sees alone owns the landscape, and forest vistas and golden sunsets are our common wealth.

But how very few see! This is one of the tragedies of life. The beauty of God lies deep over the face of the earth and thousands miss it because they do not see it at all. Jesus understood how it was: "Having eyes, they see not." So men may be paupers in spite of royal robes and the mastery of the learning of all the schools. Look out through the oaks, and you own them. So God makes us rich.

IN PRAISE OF GOSSIP.

IT IS common to deride gossip as chief among sins, and certainly it occupies no high seat among the virtues. The scandal monger is a carrion bird. But carrion birds have their uses, and so has the gossip. "What will people say?" is a question more significant to many minds than "What is right?'' Public opinion is one of the mightiest deterrents of evil doing, and one of the strongest forces for righteousness. The fear of what people will say is present with all men, chiefly among those who affect to despise it.

Unpleasant as they are, the gossips do the community great good as well as harm. They protect the hive of society with their venomous poison stings. We are all of us, probably, less shamefully bad than we would be if it were not for the fear of gossip.

But not all gossip is evil in its nature. Much gossip is mere friendly interest in human life and its happenings. Community happenings interest those who dwell in the community and afford a natural and proper theme of conversation.

Newspapers are gossips on a large scale. It is because the newspapers bring us so much of gossip that we can afford to take high ground in despising lesser gossips.

Nevertheless, we would not speak in unqualified praise of gossip. We merely wish to say a needed word in praise of a despised and often unlovely but still useful social agent. The gossip has his uses, and so has the buzzard. But who wants to be a buzzard?

OPPOSING ''BILLY'' AGAIN.

IT takes even the wisest people a long time to formulate just what it is that keeps their favorable judgment under inhibition when everybody else is going to great lengths of enthusiasm about ''Billy'' Sunday. An editorial in the Louisville Courier-Journal will strike center in many minds. This is what Col. Henry Watterson's paper has to say in giving its reason against having Mr. Sunday come to Louisville:

> The tendency of Mr. Sunday's preaching is to create a taste, if not a craving, for the unusual, so that when he goes away, and the stimulating tango of his presence is withdrawn, ordinary preaching—simple, believing, unamusing preaching—becomes to his temporary audiences duller than ever.

Still, we hardly need expect the churches to get over the illusion of Mr. Sunday's revivalism until they get over some other illusions, one of the chief of which is that Mr. Sunday's methods are so startlingly different from the methods they are already in the habit of using.

TWO POINTS OF VIEW.

AT the Santa Cruz convention of Northern California churches, two of the speeches made in the discussion of the resolution to unseat the delegates of First Church, Berkeley, represented typically the two points of view now struggling for the mastery among the Disciples of Christ. One speech was that of Rev. A. C. Smither, manager of the Christian Evangelist, of St. Louis, whose thesis was that the purpose of the Berkeley Church and all such churches to really practice Christian union was bound to ''disintegrate our denomination'' unless an effective check is put upon it. Mr. Smither made a melodramatic appeal to the Berkeley delegates to withdraw of their own accord, but if they would not withdraw he demanded the rejection of their credentials.

Mr. Smither's point of view is institutional. The important thing, from this point of view, is the Disciples' organization, their separate and sectarian existence. It is not unnatural that the manager of a denominational publishing house should hold that point of view.

Rev. J. H. MacCartney, of Modesto, spoke a different sentiment. He seemed not to care so much about the Disciples' organization, but to care a great deal about the Disciples' principles. He was not concerned about the ''disintegration of the denomination'' but deeply moved by a proposed act which meant the disintegration of the historic ideals on behalf of which the Disciples had come into being. A picture of Livingstone, it seems, adorned the wall of the church in which the convention was sitting. The great missionary probably had not been immersed in water at the time of his baptism.

''Take that picture from the wall of this church,'' said Mr. MacCartney, ''and carry it out of the building, for it will have no place here if this convention votes to disfellowship a church whose only fault consists in practicing fellowship with such Christians as David Livingstone.''

Is there a single reader of The Christian Century who does not regard Mr. MacCartney as holding an incomparably higher point of view than the manager of the Christian Evangelist?

THE CHAOS IN THE MAGAZINE WORLD.

THE reading public is an old woman in a shoe. It has so many magazines it doesn't know what to do. What is perhaps more serious, the magazines do not know what to do. They have cut their subscription rates to a price that does not begin to cover mechanical cost, depending on an enormous amount of advertising to make up the deficit. Sometimes the advertising does this and sometimes it does not. Meantime the magazines are at their wits' end for sensations that will enable them to sell large editions, otherwise they cannot secure the advertising.

The number of sufficiently startling sensations is limited. The public cannot live on muck-raking alone. So the hair of the editor turns gray in the effort to keep up with the expectations of the advertising agent, and the circulation manager would go to a sanitarium if he had time.

The magazines took up the sword and are perishing with the sword. They have made it very hard for papers whose circulation is some few thousands or tens of thousands; and they are finding it very hard themselves. They have sown the wind and are in no small danger of reaping the whirlwind. Unhappy is the man who owns a magazine, for his is the penalty of his own performance.

Some time, our periodicals will get back to sanity. The magazines will cease to be newspapers and the newspapers will cease to be magazines, and the craze for enormous editions will cease. Those editions as now put forth depend upon an abnormal amount of advertising, procured by inflated and unstable circulation, which in turn depends on the ability to produce a series of explosions each louder than the one preceding.

SHALL WE SELL OUR OLD WARSHIPS?

WE HAVE great respect for President Woodrow Wilson. We believe him to be a great and good and wise man. But we seriously question his wisdom and that of the administration in selling two warships to Greece. Moreover, his declaration that these are sold not for war but to preserve the peace, while doubtless uttered in good faith appears to us to contradict the evident condition of affairs in Europe. Greece and Turkey are at swords' points. The sale of these ships to Greece is a manifest warning to Turkey. Turkey needs to be warned, and the interests of the United States in Turkey are such as to justify a warning from her. But we question the wisdom of a warning through Greece, especially in the face of the recent report in the Balkan war, in which Greece does not appear to good advantage. It is a new thing for this country to be doing, and it is a close approach to interfering with the business of other nations. We have good authority for the statement that he who passeth by and meddleth with strife not his own is like him who taketh a dog by the ears. We do not covet the task of holding either Greece or Turkey by the ears.

Moreover, we doubt the wisdom of obtaining money in this fashion. Eleven million dollars, secured in exchange for two six-year-old ships is a fine temptation to spend the eleven millions and then some more, for a fine brand new dreadnought, which in turn will be on the market or on the way to the scrap heap in another six years.

If we must go into the foolish race for warships, let us pocket our loss when the short-lived toys wear out.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

P. C. Macfarlane Discusses Church.

Peter Clark Macfarlane, former Disciple preacher and Secretary of the Brotherhood of his church, is still a preacher, and even a greater one than ever before. He had the privilege of speaking before the recent convention of advertising men, held at Toronto. What Mr. Macfarlane had to say regarding the church is good doctrine not only for advertising experts but for all preachers and church leaders. "The church today is ambitious to be popular," declared Mr. Macfarlane. "It wants the crowd. It has built great churches to contain the crowd. Within twenty years we have doubled the seating capacity of the churches of the continent; we want these large auditoriums to be filled. The question I raise is whether the church can fill them and remain true to her mission. The people want to be amused. You can replace your choir by an opera and perhaps fill the church. You can replace your preacher by Mr. Edison's talking 'movies' and perhaps draw a larger congregation. You may swing the doors open on week nights for all sorts of social and cultural things; and it is surely far better for these groined arches to echo with the happy laughter of youth than with the rustling wings of bats. But all that will not prove that yours is a popular church. It may prove that it is a popular place of amusement, of entertainment, of resort. But that which would be a success for a theater may be a failure for a church. The church cannot permanently compete with a theater as a means of entertainment; it cannot compete with the university as a means of education; it cannot compete with the newspapers as a source of news; it cannot compete with the clubs in the dissemination of artistic cultural knowledge. There is one field alone in which the church is supreme, and that is in its legitimate field—in its message to the soul of a man; in its revelation of the character of God; in its capacity to pull aside the curtains of material life and sit down with a man in the chambers of his inmost being and reason with him of righteousness and repentance, and the judgment to come."

Religious Awakening in France.

"Nowhere, perhaps, in all the world is the religious problem more critically discussed and some solution of it more earnestly sought than in the republic of France." This is the opinion of Dr. Ernest W. Bysshe, superintendent of the France Methodist Mission, who has recently arrived in this country. "Our work in the Savoy," continued Doctor Bysshe, "has been going forward the past year by leaps and bounds. Owing to the limits of our resources, both in men and means, it is impossible to meet the situation in any adequate way. Undoubtedly a real religious awakening prevails in France today, and in no single section is it more apparent than in the Savoy. At the beginning of the year we opened a new appointment in this center, where at least fifty families, totaling more than two hundred persons, have been won to our church. In the surrounding villages the Protestant movement has spread so extensively, that often our workers are stopped in their travels by persons who urge that the gospel message be soon brought to them and their neighbors."

Catholics for Prohibition?

It is reported that arrangements have been completed for a "conference of Catholics in the United States and Canada, who are favorable to the Prohibition of the liquor traffic." The conference will be held in the assembly hall of the Cataract House, Niagara Falls, N. Y., early in August. This meeting will be held for the purpose of shaping a movement that will enlist the active service of Catholic men and women in the work of passing laws to eliminate the liquor

Mr. P. C. Macfarlane, who says the church's business is to reason with men of righteousness and repentance, and the judgment to come.

traffic in the nation and in the various states. This is said to be the first organized move on the part of Catholics who definitely recognize the prohibition of the liquor traffic as the means best suited to the removal of the evil effects of liquor drinking. Heretofore the moral suasion idea predominated. But the extension of the Prohibition movement in the United States and the active co-operation of so many Catholic citizens in the work makes it advisable to give the project the benefit of organized effort. A permanent organization or an agreement to hold other conferences may follow the meeting at Niagara Falls. The acting secretary is Mr. James F. Judge, Dime Bank Building, Scranton, Pa.

International Sunday-school Officers.

The following officers were elected at the recent Chicago Sunday-school meeting to serve the International Association until the next convention: President, Dr. H. M. Hamill, of Nashville, Tenn.; vice-presidents, E. K. Warren, Three Oaks, Mich., Rev. George W. Truett, D. D., of Dallas, Texas; John R. Pepper, Memphis, Tenn.; Dr. H. H. Bell, San Francisco; Frank Yeigh, Toronto, Ont.; E. O. Excell and William G. Sherer of Chicago; treasurer, E. H. Nichols; assistant treasurer, W. A. Goodman; general secretary, Marion Lawrance; chairman executive board, F. A. Wells; chairman trustees' board, E. K. Warren; chm'n. business committee, E. O. Excell.

At the Northfield Conferences.

The latest conference bulletin, just issued, announces as a feature of the Northfield summer a series of addresses by Rev. John A. Hutton of Glasgow, on "The Deepening Recognition of Christ," during the General Conference. Announcement is also made of a series of addresses and Bible Studies from August 10 to 30 by Rev. John Thomas of Liverpool, on subjects to be announced later. A series of Bible lessons for conference delegates and visitors is being held throughout the summer. Dr. Meyer conducted these classes from July 11 to 31 inclusive, and his general subjects were: "The Place of the Holy Spirit in Christian Work," "The Prayer Factor in Christian Life and Service" and "Lessons for Christian Service from the Book of Judges." Those intending to be present at the General Conference, who have not already arranged for their accommodations, are earnestly advised to do so at once. A circular has just been issued announcing railroad rates and arrangements, which will be sent upon application, together with the latest bulletin regarding accommodations in the Seminary buildings, in tents on the campus, at Camp Northfield for young men and at Louise Andrews Camp for young women.

Bishop Fallows Discusses Faith.

Faith is an essential in the life of every American. So declared Bishop Samuel T. Fallows in a recent sermon at St. Paul's Reformed Episcopal Church, this city. Above all things, he said, is needed a sublime faith in God. Bishop Fallows said: "As Americans we must have faith in ourselves, faith in each other, however diverse our nationality or our creed. But above all things a living, fruitful faith in the God and Father of us all. He who removes from my gaze the crown of immortal life, which God holds before me, prevents the highest possibilities of the heroisms of life. He who shakes man's trust in God makes freedom and virtue and progress as insecure as snow upon volcanoes' lips. We want an American patriotism which is not a mere instinct, but an experience; not a mere sentiment but a conviction; not a mere impulse but a determination; not a mere passion but a principle—and yet an experience with the imperious urgency of instinct, a conviction with the ruddy glow of sentiment, a determination with the ardent spontaneity of impulse, and a principle with the white heat of passion. We want a patriotism rooted in right and grounded in justice, obedient to law and consecrated to political equality, both men and women; loyal to liberty and devoted to the whole country, hallowed by religion and blessed of God. Then shall we make this land of our birth and adoption and love 'to human nature dear,' aye doubly dear the whole world 'round."

Dr. Shailer Mathews to Tour Japan.

Dr. Shailer Mathews, dean of the University of Chicago divinity school, has been selected as a missionary delegate to tour Japan for Protestant churches of America. Prof. Mathews, who is the president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, was elected by the officials of the association, which represents thirty different denominations and 17,000,000 church members. Dean Mathews will spend the whole of next winter in the orient as a lecturer in Japanese colleges and universities and a leader in missionary conferences. He will visit all American charges in Japan and preside at sessions of Christian organizations. The university board of trustees recently voted leave of absence to Dr. Mathews for his oriental trip.

Dr. Mott on Types of Christianity.

Dr. John R. Mott declares in the Missionary Review of the World that the Asiatic nations are producing distinctive types of Christianity. The organizing genius of the Chinese Christian, the subtle and meditative qualities of the Indian, the power of initiative of the Japanese, are being used to advance the Kingdom of God in these lands. These qualities need to be developed and given scope, but each must in its turn also be supplemented by the others. Thus the Chinese Christian needs to develop meditation, while the Indian is most in need of initiative and constructive power.

Presbyterian Brotherhood Changes Policy.

The report that the Brotherhood of the Presbyterian Church had determined to abandon the secretarial policy caused much comment in the religious press. It is declared, however, by the Brotherhood committee that the dismissal of Secretaries Henderson and Fox does not mean abandoning the Brotherhood activities. Nor does it signify, it is stated, any dissatisfaction with the work of these leaders. It is further declared that the change is not due to financial conditions, although it is conceded that this late step was hastened by the fact that the recent Assembly failed to make adequate financial provision for the Brotherhood work. The Continent gives the following explanation of the radical change in policy: "The reasons governing the Presbyterian Brotherhood situation are operating in much the same way in other churches—Methodist, Baptist, Disciple, Congregationalist—and are beginning to be felt in the Episcopal and interchurch men's organizations. There is a growing sentiment that the real dynamic for men's work must be Bible study, its center must be the local church, and social service features must be the natural expression of a spirit roused and sustained by Bible truth. Permanent work must start at that point, the Bible class, though it must come to fullest results in all the social service of which the group may be capable. In particular churches purely social groups may be possible, but they are increasingly difficult to maintain, whereas a well organized, well directed Bible class is easiest of all organizations to maintain, and most fruitful of brotherly spirit and service. A very informal conference between denominational brotherhood leaders and leaders of the adult Bible class department of the Sunday-school Association disclosed a striking agreement on such general propositions as these, and it is proposed that they be worked out into a definite program at a later and equally informal conference. Many of the leaders on both sides believe that aggressive measures to promote men's Bible classes will result in larger enlistment of men and a wider spirit of fellowship. The Presbyterian Brotherhood means to do not less but more, simply transferring its emphasis to a new point."

Y. M. C. A. in Constantinople Thrives.

The Young Men's Christian Association in Constantinople announces 481 members at the end of its first three months of existence. Sixteen nationalities are represented. Two hundred eighty-five are enrolled in the night school and young men are glad for a place to stand in the classes after all seats are occupied. Some of the business firms gladly pay the fees of their employees who attend. Both Greek and Roman Catholic are co-operating in sustaining the work.

John R. Mott on "Way to Unity."

In a recent address Dr. John R. Mott told of an interview with a prominent Roman Catholic archbishop in southern India, which drifted into a discussion of the drawing together of all the followers of Christ. He found the archbishop much interested in this, and before he left he suggested the three steps which he felt we must take. "First," he said, "we must pray for it; secondly, we must be gentle and courteous; and, in the third place, we must see more of one another, that is, we who call ourselves Christians."

Rev. John Timothy Stone, Presbyterian leader, of Chicago, who has received a call from a Denver Church.

Korea Welcomes Christian Associations.

The form of Christianity represented by the Young Men's Christian Association evidently appeals to the Oriental mind. Six Associations have been established in Korea by Japanese who have emigrated to that province. The association at Seoul has about four hundred members, while 3,000 members are enrolled in the railroad department. Many conversions to Christianity are being reported. Intelligent Japanese from the imperial government down are feeling keenly that technical and secular education has been allowed to proceed too far without proper attention to the spiritual side of life.

Winston Churchill Sees New Age.

"We are on the threshold now of an age in which the message of Jesus Christ is at last to take its place in government," writes Winston Churchill, author, in the Living Church. "Our Lord preached no form of government, but he brought into the world the germ which was to change all governments. The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto leaven. And yet there are those who call themselves Christians, and who refuse to see that this leaven is working, that the world is continually getting to be a better and brighter place in which to live." [This statement was made before late war developments in Europe. Editor.]

A Memory of Silvester Horne.

The Congregationalist prints a message from a friend of the late J. Silvester Horne. This friend was close to Mr. Horne while he was at Yale University for his recent Lyman Beecher lectures. Of the departure of this great man from Boston for Toronto, just before his death, his friend writes as follows: "A few hours later as night drew on I bade him and Mrs. Horne bood-by at the South Station, where they booked for Toronto. While we waited for the train he talked in his usual animated fashion, and told me among other things how much he enjoyed preaching at Yale University the Sunday before. He had brought with him a sermon on peace, but he did not want just at this crisis in our national history to preach that particular sermon, so he threw it aside and preached from the text, 'Be Sober and Hope to the End.' He said he tried to show how the largest hopes which a man can cherish touching himself and the world and his fellowmen are justified both by science and by Christianity. He instanced Lord Rosebery's speech on the occasion of a dinner to his son, when the great leader spoke of the way in which life disillusions one as he grows older; and it was against this conception that this sermon protested. Those were almost his last words to me as his train pulled out into the darkness, carrying my friend forever from my sight, but leaving as a last bequest his own glowing confidence in God and in the better future of the race which even death itself cannot take away."

New Bible for Zulus.

The Zulus are to have a revised Bible in their own language. It is now being printed by the American Bible Society. The Bible they now have is the work of missionaries sent out to Natal by the American Board, who during thirty years slowly translated the Word of God, aided by generous grants from the American Bible Society. In 1882 the first complete Zulu Bible was issued. Since that time tons of Bibles have been sent to the Zulus.

Illinois Presbyterians are Missionary.

"Every church sending its own missionary, and every member supporting him" is the goal toward which the Presbyterian Synod of Illinois has been moving since 1908. Within three years contributions for foreign missions have increased fifty-six per cent—from $96,029 to $149,493. The total membership is 99,944.

Presbyterians Receive Gift for Missions.

By the will of the late William H. Dunwoody of Minneapolis, the Northern Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions receives $100,000 and the Board of Home Missions $100,000.

Congregationalists Grow 12,308 Schools.

Since its organization, thirty-two years ago, the Congregational Sunday-school and Publishing Society has organized 12,308 Sunday-schools, from which 1,559 Congregational churches have grown.

Of Human Interest

Tolstoy's Lack of Tenderness.

There was one distinguishing and, at first sight, peculiar trait in my father's character, writes Count Ilya in the August Century, due perhaps to the fact that he grew up without a mother, and that was that all exhibitions of tenderness were entirely foreign to him.

I say "tenderness" in contradistinction to heartiness. Heartiness he had and in a very high degree.

His description of the death of my Uncle Nikolai is characteristic in this connection. In a letter to his other brother, Sergei Nikolayevitch, in which he described the last day of his brother's life, my father tells how he helped him to undress.

"He submitted, and became a different man. * * * He had a word of praise for everybody, and said to me, 'Thanks, my friend.' You understand the significance of the words as between us two."

It is evident that in the language of the Tolstoy brothers the phrase "my friends" was an expression of tenderness beyond which imagination could not go. The words astonished my father even on the lips of his dying brother.

During all his lifetime I never received any mark of tenderness from him, whatever.

He was not fond of kissing children, and when he did so in saying good morning or good night, he did it merely as a duty.

It is therefore easy to understand that he did not provoke any display of tenderness toward himself, and that nearness and dearness with him were never accompanied by any outward manifestations.

It would never have come into my head, for instance, to walk up to my father and kiss him or to stroke his hand. I was partly prevented also from that by the fact that I always looked up to him with awe, and his spiritual power, his greatness, prevented me from seeing in him the mere man—the man who was so plaintive and weary at times, the feeble old man who so much needed warmth and rest.

"The Shining Face."

More than seventy years ago, when the great missionary, Adoniram Judson, was home on furlough, he passed through Stonington, Connecticut, records the Youth's Companion. In those days the Stonington Line was the principal route between New England and New York, and the boys of the town often played about the wharves in the evening in the hope of catching a glimpse of some famous man. Two trains connected with the boat—an accommodation and an express.

One evening, when the accommodation came in, one of the boys noticed a man whose appearance excited his curiosity and wonder. Never before had he seen such a light on any human face. Presently it dawned on him that the man was the famous missionary whose picture he had once seen. He ran up the street to the Baptist minister's, to ask if it could really be he. The minister hurried back with him. Yes, the boy was right. But the minister, absorbed in conversation with the missionary, forgot all about the boy who had brought him the news. The boy, silent, eager, unable to tear himself away, stood by and watched that wonderful face.

Many years afterward, that boy, Henry Clay Trumbull, became a famous minister himself, and wrote a book of memories in which was a chapter entitled, "What a boy saw in the face of Adoniram Judson." Now Doctor Trumbull, too, has passed into the presence of the Master whom he served, but the light in the missionary's face still shines down the years.

Famous Explorer's "Idealism."

People have very often asked me, writes Sir Ernest Shackleton, explorer, in the Youth's Companion, "What is the good of it all? Why do you go to risk your life in those far places, where there is nothing of economic value to be found, and where man can never hope to live?" My answer is that, if we did only things that bring immediate or material benefit, we should never take a step forward for the ultimate good of mankind. The explorer must have a vision of the future ever before him—a vision that is not dimmed by toil and struggle and disappointment. He must realize that when his feet were guided over the dangerous crevasses, through the blinding blizzards, to the safety of his depots; when they were led safely through reeking jungles or over sun-scorched, arid deserts, they were guided by a Providence greater far than his own ingenuity. And if he looks up to Providence, and keeps young by believing in ideals, he will go farther than if he believes solely in himself.

Dr. Clark Visits Count Okuma.

"I was surprised to find that the Count remembered my previous visit ten years before, and in his address of welcome to the visitors he kindly alluded to it, and said some very cordial things about the Christian Endeavor movement, whose growth he said he had watched with interest and approval." So writes Dr. F. E. Clark in the Christian Endeavor World.

"As on a number of other occasions on this journey, it fell to my lot to voice the gratitude of the visitors, and I had no qualms of conscience in speaking the heartiest words of thanks at my command for the unstinted generosity of our distinguished host, and especially for the warm and cordial note of appreciation of America and Americans which he had sounded.

"After the brief addresses a moving-picture man set his machine to buzzing, and some hundreds of Americans and their Japanese hosts were immortalized on a 'movie' film.

"Before we left the Count gave Mrs. Clark a picture of himself and the Countess, and invited us to visit the great girls' college of Waseda, an institution which he founded and has largely supported. This we did, and a brighter or more interesting set of college girls I never saw in any continent."

Two Bright Conversers.

Tom Reed's conversation was a constant delight, due in part to his caustic wit, says Brander Matthews in Scribner's. John Hay had the same wide knowledge of men and affairs; and his talk was also tinctured with a subacid wit. When he was Secretary of State he clashed repeatedly with the Senate, which led him to express his opinion with the utmost freedom. When he was asked which Senator he detested most, he answered promptly: "The one I have seen last. I hold the Senate to be my tribal enemy!"

An Edison Observation.

The watchful eye of Thomas Edison was attracted to the movements of a bumble bee flitting among the trees, and the immense rapidity with which the wings were beating the air suggested to him the thought that if wings capable of equally rapid vibration could be attached to an aeroplane the problem of aviation would be solved. "That bee weighed 7,000 times more than his wings," said Edison. "If we can only get to that—the greatest thing for the smallest wing—that is the thing."

"Change" for Secretary Garrison.

Secretary Garrison of the War Department boarded a horse car in New York. He had no change and gave the conductor a five-dollar bill. The conductor took the bill, walked to the front end of the car and stood there.

"My change?" suggested Garrison.

"I can't change no five-dollar bill," the conductor replied.

"Then give me back my bill," demanded Garrison.

"Can't do that either, boss," the conductor replied; "but if you stay on the car until we get to the barn you can have the horses!"

Bartholdt, of St. Louis, on War.

"The United States will never have another war. Mark my prediction. I make it in all seriousness. Firmly believing this, I shall introduce a bill changing the title of the War Department to the 'Department of the Army.' This title will be much more accurate and quite as effective as the 'Department of War,' which is a misnomer." This declaration was made by Congressman Bartholdt, of St. Louis, last month.

What They Are Thinking About During the Sermon.—"Life."

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

"Blessed Are the Poor."

One of the outstanding facts of our Lord's life was his poverty, and doubtless it has its message and its meaning for us. "Though he was rich, yet he became poor, that we, through his poverty, might become rich," was said of Him, after his brief earthly life was over. From his birth to his death, his lot was among the poor. How we would exclaim today, if a child were born in our community under such circumstances as the Babe of Bethlehem! No shelter but a stable; no physician or nurse to minister to the young mother in her hour of extremity; no hand but her's to wrap the little one in the swaddling clothes of the poor, the manger cradle, the watching cattle! How few of us have ever known of birth in conditions of such pathos and penury!

The question of the multitude, "Is not this Jesus, the Carpenter?" reveals the long, unchronicled years of patient work at his humble trade, and makes him forever kin to the world's great army of toilers, who feel,

"The heavy burden, the bewildering care
Of those who toil and earn their daily bread."

And those brief years of public service, what more pathetic touch of homelessness was ever given than in his words!—"Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head."

WHAT IS POVERTY?

We sometimes try to explain away his saying, "Blessed are ye poor," recorded by Luke, by making it an incomplete rendering of the beatitude, told by Matthew, "Blessed are the poor in spirit"—but I have faith to believe that both are of divine purpose and meaning. And yet, how confessedly difficult is the task of defining poverty!—how often we use the term in a relative, rather than an absolute sense! In warm countries, like Palestine, where no fuel, little food, and scanty shelter is required, the sting of real want is hardly felt until poverty becomes starvation. We cannot feel that our Lord meant to put a premium on hunger, when we remember those two times when he showed such solicitude for the multitudes who had hung on his words all day, and how he furnished a munificent banquet for them. He who taught us to pray, "Give us this day our daily bread," did not teach that it was good for the bodies he had given us to be deprived of this necessary nourishment. Might not his beatitude on poverty mean that it was a fortunate thing to belong to that class who composed the majority of the people of his day, as they do of all days—the common people, who earn their daily bread by their daily toil?—in other words, those who lived "the simple life," as the phrase of our day goes.

KNOWLEDGE AND SYMPATHY GO TOGETHER.

It was a saying of my wise and good father, "That one half the world does not know how the other half lives," and how few are the people who can sympathize with conditions that they have never experienced! It is Maurice Hewlett who says,

"Only the poor love the poor,
And only those who have little to eat,
Give to them who have less."

A great preacher told of going to comfort a mother who had lost her only son. She asked him, "Have you ever lost a child?"—and when he confessed he had not, she said, "Then you know nothing about it;" and he left, abashed and dumb, before a grief past his knowledge. Every successful teacher and worker must approach those with whom he deals on their own plane. How can he do so, if he knows nothing of their needs and aspirations! Have we not here one of the great secrets of the success of Settlement Work, and of the Salvation Army Movement?—both identify themselves with the people with whom they labor. Humanly speaking, was not the fact that Jesus was a working man, one of the reasons that the common people heard him gladly?

OUR COMPLEX AND DIFFICULT TIMES.

How hard to interpret the teachings and practice of Jesus about poverty to the crowded and changing times in which we live! When the inequalities of life are so great, and the struggle for existence so severe, it is difficult to say anything good of poverty. Bernard Shaw, in his introduction to his drama of "Major Barbara" says:

"The greatest of evils and the worst of crimes is poverty—our first duty is not to be poor. . . . Money is the most important thing in the world. It represents health, strength, honor, generosity and beauty; as conspicuously as the want of it represents illness, weakness, disgrace, meanness and ugliness."

It is a common saying today, that poverty is a disease and a crime, and must be wiped out. As I wrote above, poverty in our times, and poverty in simpler days and warmer countries is not the same thing; for not only is the struggle for existence sharper and harder under our new industrialism, but often more cruel wrongs are perpetrated on the poor, than need of food and raiment and shelter. The hearings before certain vice commissions in our large city slums seem to prove that an inadequate wage is a contributing factor to the delinquency of young girls.

On the other hand, it is interesting to note that in the general chorus of condemnation of poverty in the literature of today, one whimsical voice is lifted in its praise. Maurice Hewlett's favorite hero, John Maxwell Senhouse, who left his rich father's house to lead the simple life, and support himself entirely by his own work, and incidentally to make the world more beautiful by planting flowers in waste places, took as his motto, "Poverty, Temperance, Simplicity, these three; and the greatest of these is poverty." "Have nothing," he says, "and you're thrown back on what is inside you; that's your own, and all that's worth having."

Emerson says somewhere, that the crowning fortune of a man is to have some pursuit, which finds him in employment and happiness. It is one of the wrongs of a large majority of the rich, that when this wealth takes away from them the spur of necessity, it robs them of the usual motive for exertion, and many of them are thus denied the expression of their individuality in some congenial occupation.

MAN'S LIFE CONSISTETH NOT IN THE ABUNDANCE OF THE THINGS THAT HE HATH.

Is there not a feeling abroad today, in spite of a certain get-rich-quick mania, of the unsatisfactoriness, and the burden of responsibility that great wealth carries? The daily papers told a few weeks ago, of the Duke of Bedford selling nineteen acres of land in the heart of London for twenty-two millions of dollars—the largest single real estate deal on record, and this is but a part of his magnificent estate. The dispatch went on to say, that the Duke lead a secluded life at one of his country seats, and the Duchess, who is a beautiful young woman, spent much of her time tramping through the woods studying plant and bird life. How impossible for one to use but the merest fraction of such a tremendous fortune—and take it all in all, what a burden it must be!

We all know Mr. Carnegie's remark about its benig a shame to die rich, and his gallant and seemingly effectual efforts to dispose of his millions during his lifetime. This surely marks a growing sense of the responsibilities of the possession of great wealth.

Is it too much to prophesy that the time will come when conscientious men will be ashamed not only to die rich, but to own excessive fortunes?—When they will feel the sense of brotherhood so strongly, that they will refuse to possess great surplus wealth, of no good to them, or anyone else, while men and women and little children are in want, and ignorance, and sin?

WIDENING GULF BETWEEN THE RICH AND THE POOR.

When we note the fabulous fortunes of some individuals of our day, and that there are in our country, in fairly prosperous years (if we accept Robert Hunter's figures) ten millions of people underfed, under-clothed, poorly housed, it is surely a condition to give us pause.

And we cannot ignore the growing resentment of those who have too little against those who have too much, as shown in the alienation of capital and labor, finding expression in strikes all over the country, often accompanied by violence, in last winter's parades of the unemployed, in the increasing popularity of that vague thing we call Socialism, evidenced by the last presidential vote—these, and many other things, are signs of the times that we dare not ignore.

And the resentment of the poor against the rich is seemingly greater in our country toward the class who have acquired great wealth in a generation, than in older countries, where it is the accumulation of centuries: the Duke of Bedford, for instance, is in no way responsible for the inordinate estate to which he is heir; but often in our land, great fortunes are built by the strong, taking advantage of conditions that work injustice and hardships to the weak—and the estrangement of the classes is correspondingly greater.

Do we not all need, in the days of transition and adjustment, to go back to the feet of Him, who spake as never man spoke, and study anew his teachings about poverty and riches?

I. W. H.

To be misunderstood even by those whom one loves is the cross and bitterness of life. It is the secret of that sad and melancholy smile on the lips of great men which so few understand. * * * It is what must have oftenest wrung the heart of the Son of Man.—Amiel.

THE WEDDING FEAST.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR AUGUST 23, 1914.

Matt. 22: 1-14 Memory Verses, 8, 9.

Golden Text.—O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, that killeth the prophets, and stoneth them that are sent unto her! how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her own brood under her wings, and ye would not!—Luke 13:34.

(1) And Jesus answered and spake again in parables unto them, saying, (2) The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a certain king, who made a marriage feast for his son, (3) and sent forth his servants to call them that were bidden to the marriage feast: and they would not come. (4) Again he sent forth other servants, saying, Tell them that are bidden, Behold, I have made ready my dinner: my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come to the marriage feast. (5) But they made light of it, and went their ways, one to his own farm, another to his merchandise: (6) and the rest laid hold on his servants, and treated them shamefully, and killed them. (7) But the king was wroth: and he sent his armies, and destroyed those murderers, and burned their city. (8) Then saith he to his servants, The wedding is ready, but they that were bidden were not worthy. (9) Go ye therefore unto the partings of the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage feast. (10) And those servants went out into the highways, and gathered together all as many as they found, both bad and good; and the wedding was filled with guests. (11) But when the king came in to behold the guests, he saw there a man who had not on a wedding garment; (12) and he saith unto him, Friend, how camest thou in hither not having a wedding garment? And he was speechless. (13) Then the king said to the servants, Bind him hand and foot, and cast him out into the outer darkness; there shall be the weeping and the gnashing of teeth. (14) For many are called, but few chosen.

At the Heart of the Lesson.

BY REV. A. Z. CONRAD, PH.D.

FESTAL FEATURES OF THE KINGDOM

No metaphor too strongly emphasize the attractiveness of 'The Kingdom.' In the thought of Jesus it was everything delectable. Under the symbol of the vineyard we have observed its nature and its vitalizing vintage.

Now we are invited to a King's banquet to get the true view point of the kingdom. Why do we approach religious subjects so often with a melancholy air and a plaintive tone? I can quite sympathize with the man who was approached by a friend who timidly asked him if he might speak to him about his soul. Yes, said his friend, you may if you won't whine. Here is the most attractive of themes. It is associated with everything virile and ennobling. Its heroic aspects outclass all the heroism of fiction. Its beauty exceeds that of field or garden or art. It is overflowing with the brightest and the best in life. Yet we make it unattractive by our sepulchral tones and gloomy countenances. Let us have done with all that method of dealing with religious truth. Speak of it in the major and not in the minor key. Let the countenance be sunlit and not shadowed as we tell men and women the "Good News." The Christian life is the glad life. The Kingdom of Christ is the most inspiring of themes and the superlatively beautiful picture of a redeemed world. When our Lord had employed symbol after symbol to emphasize the attractiveness of the kingdom he at last turns to the Marriage Feast as representing the most gladdening of all human experiences. Beauty and refreshment and unalloyed joy and undimmed hope together with complete satisfaction of mind and soul are typified by the Royal feast. It is a two-world feast. It begins here but is continued in eternity. As a royal marriage it typifies the very highest degree of beatific joy. "The Kingdom of Heaven is likened unto a certain King which made a marriage feast for his son." The King is the Eternal Father. The nuptials represent the uniting in indissoluble union, believers with God. The feast represents everything in the nature of Divine Beatitude. Especially does it represent 'those spiritual privileges which come through revelation and providence and through the sacrifice of Jesus Christ.

A DANGEROUS DECLINATION.

What is a feast without guests? The whole purpose of the feast was to create gladness. It was to be a joy giving occasion. The king had in mind the happiness of his subjects. His own joy was made full by seeing his subjects joyous. The first thought of the king is the invitation. Here is the trouble with our social affairs. Inclusions and exclusions give us much trouble. The Great King is not so burdened. He has enough for all. There will be invitations in the order of a providential condition. Naturally those who have been for generations the recipients of spiritual instruction will be first to receive the invitation. They would be supposed to appreciate it. "And sent forth his servants to call them that were bidden to the marriage feast, and they would not come." Through the Prophets of Israel the invitation had already been extended. Now the appointed hour has come and servants are sent forth "to call the called." The servants had been busy for generations in announcing an approaching "Feast." The coming of the Messiah had been foretold in remarkable detail. His coming was to be a time of rejoicing. Now he has come and announcement of the fact is to be made through appointed servants. "They would not come." No reason is given save that of self will. They simply declined. Nothing is more discourteous than a declination without explanation. But they had no reason and could give no explanation. No more can those who reject the King's invitation today. The obstinacy and perverseness of the human will is the sole reason for declining the proffered joys of the kingdom. It was disastrous declination. It severed all relations with the Host. It cut the subjects off from all further communion with the King.

MALIGNANT OPPOSITION.

Unbelief does not remain merely negative The three stages are indicated in the parable. First there was simple rejection. Then there was ridicule and now there is open opposition and destructive attack. "And the rest laid hold on his servants and entreated them shamefully and killed them." Here is the legitimate fruits of irreligion. Unbelief is not that harmless innocent thing it is supposed to be. In it lurks a deadly virus. Moreover we have here the progressive stages of unbelief in the same individual. The heart grows calloused and the very invitations of the Gospel irritate and anger. A great revival of religion is always the occasion of outspoken hatred of Christianity. Christ and his cross come under ridicule the moment you see men and women on their knees pleading for pardon.

Nothing so stirs the Powers of Darkness as the unusual manifestations of the Holy Spirit. Murder lurks in the heart of all rejection of God's Mercy. While this parable has a particular historic application to the history of Judaism and the treatment of the Prophets and Teachers and of Jesus Christ, it has permanent application to unbelief and unbelievers of all ages. Here we have a hint of the reasonableness of Divine Judgment, which is eternal in its expression. The fact is, the attitude of rejection does not become less antagonistic but more so and there is no reason to think it will ever change. At last it becomes a fixed hatred of God.

WHEN MERCY FAILS.

The last word of mercy sometimes fails. When love is too long trampled upon it becomes judgment. Judgment and punishment are nothing other than love working its natural results where it has been refused and despised. The sun hastens decay when death has begun its work.

"But the king was wroth; and he sent his armies, and destroyed those murderers and burned up their city." His invitation accepted, meant a feast with perfect felicity. His invitation rejected carried its own condemnation and punishment. What is the wrath of God? It is the inevitable indignation of outraged holiness. The more refined and beautiful a soul the more its burning indignation when justice is defeated and the innocent suffer. A cold brutish nature is not disturbed by tyranny and injustice. The nearer man gets to God the greater his indignation toward all wickedness. The whole nature of a good man rises in holy wrath against the maltreatment of those who spend their lives in ministering to the needs of suffering humanity. The victims of selfishness and intolerance, childhood crushed by cruel burdens, the weak driven to the wall; these things call for resentment and that sort of wrath is not the emotional anger which is to be rebuked. It is the best in us calling for justice.

THE WORLD WIDE INVITATION.

The servants are now to go "to the partings of the highways," and call all to the feast. This invitation would have been extended anyhow after the first invited guests had accepted. It was ever the intent of God to call the whole world to himself. Even in the generations before Christ the Gentile world was never rejected. They simply had not responded and entered into the covenant. We do great injustice to the Divine purpose and Government when we assume that because the Jews were a chosen people the rest of the world was neglected or rejected. The unworthiness of the Jews to be any longer the especial conservators of Divine truth consisted in their deliberate rejection of the invitation as expressed in Jesus Christ, after all their years of peculiar privilege and special teaching.

WHOSOEVER WILL MAY COME.

v. 10. The servants went forth with proclamation and results were immediate. It was now to become a world-wide propaganda. The "highways" did not come to the servants but the servants went to the "highways". It is the true evangelism. The King had opened the doors wide. No conditions were imposed other than a willingness to come on the King's own terms. The unlettered and the immoral had the same opportunity as the educated and the ethically cultivated. Not that there was no difference between them. There was. The good man morally, is to be esteemed above the delinquent and the criminal. But this is the point, when it comes to the marriage feast, the worst are not so bad that they cannot be made presentable and the best are not good enough to be present in their own right.

"The wedding was filled with guests." Yes, the plans of God involve the success of the Kingdom. When the "servants" go in the fervor of the Gospel and proclaim the 'Good News" with whole-souled enthusiasm there will be response. The day of personal appeal will never pass. It is as true today as when Jesus spake these words that the only way to furnish the feast with guests is to go after the guests in the hedges and the highways and with the compulsions of holy love draw them to Christ. All who have accepted Jesus Christ are under the most urgent obligations to become evangelists. Every disciple must accept the responsibility of furnishing the feast of God with guests. Our church membership represents the guests for the feast. Any church can double its membership in a single year by going earnestly enough into the highways and pleading the cause.

THE PARALYSING INTERROGATION.

The very climax of the parable is reached as we read the king's question and see the confusion of the ungarmented guest. Friend, how camest thou in here not having a wedding garment?" "And he was speechless." Where now the boast of self sufficiency? His recognition of the indefensibleness of his position is apparent. He could give no excuse. No more can any who decline the offers of mercy in Christ. Then follows the sentence of condemnation. He had rejected the invitation. Now in turn he was rejected by the king. This severe sentence was executed upon the Jews when Titus destroyed Jerusalem and put an end to the Jewish nation. The Hebrew race continues but the nation is no more.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR AUGUST 19, 1914.

On What Are You Building? Luke 6:46-49.

Politicians of a certain kind win a great deal of applause by passionately advocating the cause of justice without specifying what particular thing is just. Preachers have been known to settle difficult questions by solemnly proclaiming that Christ is the solution of all personal and social difficulties. The disciple believes this. What puzzles him is, how is Christ coming into his life or the life of his community. It is one thing to know the multiplication table; it is another to use it in trade to promote fairness. To give mental assent to the statement that love is the law of life is one thing; to express love in word and deed is quite another matter. Jesus knew the habit men have of trying to save the world by general principles without taking the trouble to make specific applications of them.

WORDS AND ACTIONS.

The world has always honored the man who knows how to talk. Words are not to be contrasted to actions unless they are accepted in lieu of other kinds of action. He who speaks well acts when he speaks. He sees conditions as they are and tells what ought to be done. He speaks the word of encouragement to those who need it. Does anybody ever think of the words of Jesus as disconnected with life, as not being an important part of his life of loving service? Words are empty when the speaker is blind to the issues, when he lacks courage to state the truth, when he trifles with human hopes and fears, when he speaks in order to avoid doing something unpleasant.

HEARING AND DOING.

The Lord exhorts us to hear well. Listless, indifferent people never learn anything. The wise man listens to the voice of experience. The fool thinks he can understand life without the aid of teachers. This nation, intent upon developing its great industrial and transportation enterprises, must learn to listen to those who have taken an inventory of our resources and are uttering warnings against future disaster. The church that is busy with its routine of duties, that is using the theology of past generations, will lose its influence if it closes its ears to those who are watching carefully the signs of the times. The thinker must observe. His conclusions will be absurd if he undertakes to say how things ought to be before he has observed how they are. The right kind of hearing is doing. One who hears merely to be pleased, who listens with delight to the glib ignoramus who says the devil has been put in chains and will never again do any mischief, or who soothes his wounded pride by attending to coarse harangues against all that men hold dear, is abusing the privilege of hearing and comes under the condemnation of Jesus. He taught us that hearing is an integral part of life. We hear that we may understand past experiences and that we may make the future better.

PROFESSION AND OBEDIENCE.

Jesus calls men to him. He asks them to become known as his disciples. He condemns those who profess to be what they are not. Christ did not give to the world a cloak to cover up its wickedness. The man who displays the flag of his country on all occasions and then sells his vote or evades his taxes is dishonoring the flag. In like manner he who says he is a Christian and has not the purity of life charactertistic of the Christian and refuses to support in all ways open to him the institutions of Christianity does what he can to bring Christianity into disrepute. There is nothing wrong with a profession of faith when faith is present. It is part of the life of faith. Hos. 6:4; Ezek. 33:30-32; Matt. 13: 14-15; Rom. 4:13; Jas. 1:19-25; Matt. 12:50; Luke 11:282; Cor. 8:11.

Disciples Table Talk

Dr. Cory in Russia.

Widespread concern will be felt throughout the Disciples' brotherhood for Dr. Abram E. Cory who is presumably in Russia at this time. A letter to the editor of The Christian Century writter from Berlin on July 12 says, "I will enter Russia tomorrow. I will be in that land for nearly a month. I will be there when this letter reaches you. May I not feel that your prayers are with me constantly in these difficult hours?" The occasion for our prayers has been intensified far beyond what Dr. Cory had anticipated when he wrote. Dr. Cory is accompanied by Mrs. Cory and Mrs. Ella G. Morrison of Denver. They will be greatly inconvenienced, but will no doubt be safely conducted from the danger area.

F. L. Bowen in Record Work.

Frank L. Bowen, city missionary of the Disciple churches of Greater Kansas City, entered on the eighteenth year of his work last month. The newest church he has been instrumental in establishing is the Swope Park church, which recently built a $25,000 edifice. The Oak Park church has just purchased a lot and a new building will be erected by fall or spring. The churches Mr. Bowen has established that are now self-supporting are: Jackson Avenue; Ivanhoe Park; Budd Park; Roanoke; Quindaro Boulevard; Grandview; Rosedale; South Park, and the negro church. A new mission has been started at Forty-first street and Agnes avenue under his direction. This is a record of which both Mr. Bowen and Kansas City Disciples should be proud.

R. H. Miller Called to Larger Work.

R. H. Miller of Richmond Ave. church, Buffalo, has resigned to accept a call to assist in the Men and Millions Movement. He will be associated with Abraham E. Cory in the leadership of the movement. Mr. Miller has been remarkably efficient in the pastorate. He has done a great work in the Richmond Avenue church; he has made a place for himself among the strong men in Buffalo. It was his success that led to his call to the larger task. Those who know him believe that he will measure up to the responsibilities of the Men and Millions Movement. The church offered him every personal advantage if he would remain; the new call appeared to him to be a call from God, and he accepted it.

Winnipeg Disciples Score Victory.

J. R. Blunt, pastor at Winnipeg, writes that the long prayed for day has come to the faithful band of Disciples there. On July 26 a recommendation was made to the congregation by the board, to the effect that steps be immediately taken to erect a new and modern building. The Sunday-school plant will be cared for first. This can be erected for about $16,000. The vote was in favor of the forward step to a member. Mr. Blunt writes: "We have less than 100 active members, but I will put them up against any like number of people I have ever seen labor together as a church, for united action, and consecrated giving of strength and means."

Bethany (W. Va.) Church Lays Corner Stone.

President T. E. Cramblet, president of Bethany College, is given much of the credit for the success of the effort to build a church at Bethany. "Church of Christ, 1914," is the simple inscription on the cornerstone which was laid July 19 with elaborate ceremonies in the new church. The edifice, which will cost about $25,000, is being erected as a memorial to the brotherhood of Disciples. The white marble block was swung into place by President Cramblet, assisted by J. J. Morgan, pastor of the Bethany church, after which prayer was offered by Prof. W. B. Taylor. Prof. Pelly, of the finance committee of the church, stated that $17,000 in cash had been subscribed for the church, $10,000 of which had been paid. The new church will be built of pressed brick and architecturally will be similar to the old college building. Its dimensions will be 72 by 98 feet.

Death of L. C. Goodrich.

L. C. Goodrich, whose death is reported in Phillipsburg, Kan., was the first Disciple minister in the western part of that state. He was born in the slums of New York City about 60 years ago (he had no accurate record of his age) and was a waif in the great city until he was 15 years old. Later he educated himself, fitting himself for the law, and practicing for some years after which he entered the ministry giving thirty-five years of his life to this work which he held to be above every other work. He began his ministerial work in Kansas. He was married at Phillipsburg, Kansas, in 1884, and he and his wife devoted twenty years to church work in Indiana. He stood high as a pastor wherever he was located.

Information Regarding L. R. Patmont.

Reports of the definite finding of L. R. Patmont seem to have been spurious. However, it is likely that Mr. Patmont is in hiding somewhere in Wisconsin. The following letter was received by S. S. Lappin, of the Christian Standard, signed by "Those Who Are Caring for L. R. Patmont." "July 22, 1914. Dear Bro. Lappin: I am a member of the Christian Church, and am writing to convince you that Bro. Patmont is safe in our care. He is perfectly sane, and only begs to be let alone by both friend and enemy until his nerves are stronger. He is in the country where he has a free outdoor life, and sleeps like a child. We would not hesitate to give you his address, if we were sure you could withstand the temptation to tell his friends. We have notified his wife that he is safe, and will have the best care we can give him, and will arrange to have her with him as soon as possible. He intends to go to work where he can be out of doors, and give his overwrought nerves and brain a complete rest, of which he is so sadly in need. There are several men in the family, and you may rest assured that, after following his case with deep sympathy, we would not keep him from the public if we did not feel that it is the only hope for him. He says his friends love him too well, and are killing him with their kindness. Please publish in the Standard that he is safe, and only ask that friends be patient for a few weeks, when they will hear from him. We would not protect him in this way if we could not see improvement in him day by day, and feel that he is in the very best environment he could have. He is going fishing with the boys today. Yours in Christ's name."

A Novel Movement in Iowa.

On June 17 the churches of Harrison County, Iowa, met together in Logan in their first meeting known as "The School of Instruction of the Bishops and Deacons of Harrison County." This is a movement in the county to make for a more efficient church with an aim, not only to teach church officers their duties but to teach churches how to train up people for these offices and also to train the churches how to select the men who are qualified for these offices. "The all-day meeting was a success," writes M. O. Sudbury, pastor at Logan, "and it is the plan to have such a program once a quarter in the various churches of the country. The next meeting will be held Sept. 30 at Missouri Valley."

Edgar D. Jones Joins Author's League.

Edgar D. Jones has delighted Christian Century readers from time to time with his literary reviews and other articles. It is a pleasure to be informed that Fleming H. Revell Company is to put out a book for Mr. Jones, its title "The Inner Circle—and Other Studies in Social and Spiritual Values." The book will consist of twenty-one chapters, extending over a variety of topics, yet all more or less held together by the title theme. It used to be said that the Disciples have no real literature. With such authors taking the field as Nicholas Vachel Lindsay, Peter Clark Macfarlane, Frank Waller Allen, Harold Bell Wright, J. Breckenridge Ellis, Edgar DeWitt Jones, etc., etc., the Disciples may well take some pride, and it might be suggested also that an investment of a few dollars by many Disciples in the books of these men would reveal an admirable spirit of loyalty. Mr. Jones, with his family, is summering at the old homestead of Mrs. Jones, in Boone County, Ky. He states that he is "renewing my acquaintance with the birds, especially my friend, the cardinal."

Federate School of Missions Meets.

The Federate School of Missions convened at Mount Hermon, in the Santa Cruz mountains, July 20-25. The text-book classes on "The Child in the Midst," "In Red Man's Land," and M. Katherine Bennett's "Missionary Women and the Social Question," were taught by Mrs. D. B. Wells, who also gave a daily Bible talk, the general topic being, "The Investment of Personality." Among the other speakers who added variety and information to the program was Mrs. J. McDaniel Stearns, National speaker for the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. On Monday, July 20, Mrs. J. McDaniel Stearns conducted the hour on "Methods" and on the evening of July 23, Mrs. Stearns spoke on "America's Part in the Program of God." Mrs. N. E. Gallaway, state corresponding secretary C. W. B. M., presided the evening on which Mrs. Stearns spoke. Among others of the Disciples who were at Mount Hermon during missons week were Miss Affie B. Hester, supt. of literature for California North, who had a good exhibit of literature in the Missions Building; Mrs. Mary Endersby, of Ukiah, Mrs. J. A. Robinson, delegate from the missionary society of First Christian Church, Oakland, Mrs. B. F. Brunk, of Berkeley, and Mrs. N. M. Randall, of Turlock. The Disciples united with the Baptists in their "rally." on the Baptist lot on Thursday, July 23, the day chosen for the rallies of the different brotherhoods. Mrs. N. E. Galloway was one of the speakers at the rally.

Asked to become College President.

Orvis F. Jordan, pastor of Evanston church, Chicago, has been elected by the board of trustees of Christian University, Canton, Mo., to the presidency of that institution. Carl Johann, president emeritus of the Canton school was one of Mr. Jordan's teachers in Eureka College and is now a member of the board of trustees. In recent months the prospects of the university have been greatly brightened through certain substantial gifts which it has received. Under Mr. Jordan's administration it would, no doubt, take high rank among the colleges of Missouri and the Disciples of Christ. At this writing Mr. Jordan's decision has not been announced.

Later: As we go to press word comes that Mr. Jordan has declined the call.

Rev. R. H. Miller, of Buffalo, who has resigned his pastorate there to serve the Men and Millions Movement.

E. T. Edmonds, pastor of First Church, Jackson, Miss., talked to an unusually large congregation two weeks ago, it being known that he was going to have something to say about the refusal of the mayor of the city to permit sacred concerts in Jackson on Sunday afternoon—his refusal being at the instance of six or seven other ministers of the city. Mr. Edmonds has joined issue with the other ministers, insisting that the sacred concerts would be welcomed by a large class of people who are now loafing around the street corners all Sunday afternoon, or who are shut up in some back room doing nothing.

H. O. Pritchard of Eureka College, who has filled the pulpit at the First church, Springfield, Ill., for a number of Sundays, gave his last sermon two weeks ago and prepared the congregation for the reception of their new pastor, Frank W. Allen of Paris, Mo., who is to arrive the first Sunday in September. Mr. Pritchard read part of a lengthy tribute and farewell published in the Paris, Mo., Mercury, giving great credit to Mr. Allen, both as pastor and author.

A church that will be open seven days in the week, that provides for the physical as well as the spiritual needs of the community, a church that will serve as a social center for south Peoria—such is the kind of a building to be erected by the Howett street congregation in the Illinois city. The building will be begun May 1, and will cost $20,000. S. R. Reynolds is pastor at Howett Street.

E M. Richmond, of Moberly. Mo., has received an offer from the American Lyceum and Chautauqua Bureau, as platform manager. After a recent morning service the members and friends of First Church, Phoenix, Ariz., presented their new pastor, Claude C. Jones, with a new Ford runabout for his use in pastoral work.

Word comes of the death of B. E. Utz, of Spokane, Wash. The funeral was held at Huntingburg, Ind. Mr. Utz was a cousin of B. F. Cato, pastor at New Albany, Ind.

Edward S. Ames, with his family, is spending the summer at Pentwater. A good number of Disciples are reported there this year.

Charles Darsie, of Cleveland, O.. will direct the state Sunday-school work in Ohio until a successor to Myron C. Settle is chosen.

W. H. Bagby has resigned at Taylor, Tex., to the regret of the people of that city. He is returning to Los Angeles, Cal.

REGARDING ATTENDANCE AT ATLANTA.

The power of the Atlanta Convention will be measured, not by the bigness of the crowd, but by the representative character of its attendance; for its business is not to legislate, but to inspire. The work presented, the visions induced, the plans laid, the inspiration for accomplishment aroused—these mark the power of gatherings like ours.

Clearly, then, the good of the gathering will be multiplied as we can multiply the number of local centers to which this inspiration is carried. It will be a long step in advance when we can get approximately all our congregations representated in the conventions.

It is in order to cover this specific need that the Attendance Committee for the Atlanta Convention is sending out the call for an "Every-Church Convention."

There will be a crowd all right. The Atlanta committee, the church papers, the railroads are advertising well. But we are not concerned so much to have a big crowd, to make it enthusiastic, as we are to have a representative attendance to take back the enthusiasm to every crossroads and community in the brotherhood. An "Every-Church Convention" would be worth more than a "hundred thousand" convention.

We always have crowds, but they are made up of multitudes from nearby churches, and only a few from distant places. The number of congregations touched by the convention is entirely too small. The ratio is about the same as the number of members in the congregation who contribute to missions. As an "Every Member Canvass" is timely, so the call for an "Every-Church Convention" strikes at a vital need.

If a convention is worth anything to the cause, is it is not worth your effort to help it succeed? But more than that, if it is worth anything to the churches is it not worth the effort of your congregation to see that it is brought back to you? Every argument that makes a convention worth while for any church makes it valuable for your church.

Hundreds of churches never dream of sending some one to bring back the convention to them. Hundreds of others think of it only when the big convention comes nearby, and then it is left to haphazard. We plead with every congregation in the brotherhood to take the matter up definitely, begin action now.

For the sake of getting the power to the local churches, to all the churches, let us have an "Every-Church Convention."

Chairman Attendance Com.

WEST WASHINGTON DISCIPLES MEET.

The convention of the Western Washington Christian Missionary Society, which was held early in July, in First Church, Seattle, elected the following officers for the ensuing year; President, Clifford Wiley, Seattle; district No. 2, Virgil Peringer, Bellingham; district No 2, Dr. E. M. Carey, Seattle; district No. 3, R. C. Sargent, Tacoma; district No. 4, W. S. Lemmon, Centralia; district No. 5, John Young, Ellensburg; recording secretary, W. E. Morris, Seattle; corresponding secretary, J. W. Baker, Seattle; treasurer, W. E. Morris, Seattle; counsellor-at-law, Judge U. E. Harmon, Tacoma; state secretary of Bible-school work, W. F. Turner, North Yakima; state secretary of Christian Endeavor, Mrs. Clare Moffit, Tacoma.

State Secretary J. W. Baker reported the society out of debt for the first time and indicated remarkable growth in the last six years. During this time the congregations have grown from 35 to 61; the membership from 4,600 to 11,000. Sixteen new buildings have been erected and eight more have the first unit built. Two are in process of building, two more are planned on which work is to begin at once and 13 have been improved or enlarged.

The churches in Tacoma have increased from two to six in that time. The placing of a specialist in business efficiency in the field was recommended.

NOTES FROM ILLINOIS.

Guy B. Williamson, of Arrowsmith, has accepted a unanimous call to the work at Paxton.

E. T. Cornelius has resigned the missions church at Freeport to accept a call to Princeton, Mo.

E. B. Youtz is loyal on the question of state missions. He preaches full time at La Harpe, and this church is also one of our strong supporters of State Missions.

A new church has been organized at Joliet, the Central Church. They start with about 44 members and good prospects.

We will send out the state convention programs about the time these lines are read. It is a good one and no mistake. The date is September 7-10, and the place is the First Church, Decatur.

The treasurer's books will close August 15. Rush the offerings to us so they will be counted on this missionary year.

Please put up the convention poster soon as you get it, and call frequent attention to it, urging a large attendance.

Select your regular delegates to the convention; and please send me the "convention dollar" soon as possible—just one dollar from each church in the state for convention expenses. W. D. DEWEESE, Bloomington, Ill.

NEW YORK CITY MISSON NOTES.

The Russian church, with a membership of 33, continues its encouraging work. Open air meetings are being held in two sections of the lower East Side. Twelve students received their diplomas for advanced English.

Flatbush, under the ministry of Mr. Gordon, has an enrollment in its Sunday-school of 378 and an average attendance of 279 for the month of June.

BETHANY ASSEMBLY UNDER WAY.

Bethany Assembly, at Bethany Park, near Indianapolis, is under way with a large attendance and a stimulating program. For the first week, President E. Y. Mullins, of Louisville, was the chief lecturer, and President King, of Oberlin, the second week. Both men are reported as greatly pleasing their audiences. C. C. Morrison preached Sunday morning, July 26, and J. V. Coombs last Sunday. The remaining two weeks of the Assembly are occupied by the School of Methods with Garry L. Cook, of Indianapolis, as Dean. The grounds look more inviting than ever before. Several new cottages have been built, and a singers' pavilion was dedicated on July 26.

OFF FOR THE PHILIPPINES.

The Commission of the Foreign Society to the Philippine Islands, China and Japan, sailed out from Vancouver on time, July 23rd. In a brief note from Stephen J. Corey, after going aboard the S. S. "Empress of Japan," he says:

"I will mail this as the boat touches at Victoria (about eighty-five miles from Vancouver) before we strike the high sea. After this I can mail nothing until we reach Yokohama, Japan, August 6th.

"I am sorry I did not have more time on the Coast to visit churches while going through.

"The brethren at Vancouver were very kind and gave us a fine reception.

"I do hope the receipts climb up. May God bless you all in the office. I regret leaving, yet I deem this one of the greatest privileges of my life. R. A. Doan and W. C. Bower are great. They will be a tower of strength.

"S. J. COREY."

D. O. Cunningham and family, returning to India, were in the company. George R. Whipple, minister of the Central Church, Vancouver, referring to the visit, writes: "Well, we have been having one grand feast of good things here for the past two days." The Vancouver brethren were much pleased with the visit of this missionary company. Mr. Whipple says: "Everyone was made better by hearing them." A number of the brethren were at the dock to see the missionary party off. They all seemed to be perfectly well and happy. He says: "During their short stay with us we have learned to love every one of them. It has been a pleasure and an education to be in their company."

The Commission will reach Manila about August 18th. All the missionaries are looking forward with great delight to their coming.

F. M. RAINS, Sec'y.

IOWA SENDS GREETINGS TO COMMISSION.

The Iowa Convention sent the following greetings to the Commission of the Foreign Society, sailing from Vancouver, July 23rd:

"It has been brought to our attention that certain of our brethren are about to set forth on a tour of visitation of our brethren in Christ in distant lands. We, do in full appreciation of the obligations of the last great command of our divine Lord Jesus resting upon us, rejoice in the fellowship with you who are honored of our God in being called to serve the kingdom in the land of supreme need. To you, our brethren, we send greetings of Christian love, and pray for you every one, wherever your field of labor may be, that in all things you may be blessed of our common Father. The grace of the Lord Jesus be with you.

"S. J. COFFIN,
"B. F. HALL, Convention Secretaries."

MISSOURI PREACHERS ENJOY "RETREAT."

The Moberly convention created an Education Commission with G. A. Campbell as chairman, and he in turn appointed a committee consisting of the heads of colleges in Missouri, to arrange for the coming of the Men and Millions Team about the first of the year. This committee met in Canton July 13. There were present: Dean Lhamon of Drury; Dean Edwards of Columbia Bible College; President Moss of Christian College; President Garvin of William Woods College; President Yoakley of Missouri Christian College, (Camden Point), and Dean Robinson of Canton.

Missouri has buried six schools of the Christian church, and may have to bury one or two more; but the happy time has come, when there is no bickering between the schools, and this particular meeting revealed a fine spirit of co-operation and mutual helpfulness. This spirit will presently manifest itself in the publication of a booklet devoted to the joint interests of all the Disciple schools in the state.

The day following the meeting of the college folk, the ministers and their wives and children began coming in for the annual Retreat of the Northeast District.

Edgar DeWitt Jones was the guest of the Retreat. It is the custom to have a guest in to do what work seems necessary while the men of the Retreat proper take it easy. Mr. Jones was very gracious in carrying our burdens for us, and when not toiling, entered into the games, and story telling, and the group conferences under the trees.

Mr. Jones' message had to do with the social gospel; and from literature, where he seems amazingly at home, and from his own rich experience, he was able to make the Lord walk anew among us, the Friend of Man.

Geo. A. Campbell had been appointed to share with Mr. Jones the burdens of the Retreat. He gave us a most striking and stimulating review of Carnegie Simpson's "The Facts of Life," and no one who heard it will be other than deeply grateful to the reviewer for it.

The informal conference of the morning hours was related to the work of the District at large, and revealed a very healthful condition of affairs.

But all the above was purely incidental to the real purpose of the Retreat. The "rest awhile" doctrine drew us to Canton. B. L. Smith perhaps showed the keenest appreciation of the occasion. An auto whirled him to the top of the hill on the 14th, and there he stayed until the 17th, refusing to be drawn more than a hundred yards from the swimming pool for any purpose whatsoever. Mr. Smith has been the president of the Retreat for the past two years, but gives place this year to Madison Hart of Columbia.

There was just one thing to trouble us: some of the men who most wanted to come, were prevented by the old-time preacher foe, hard times. In some instances, the eight dollars needed to cover expense could be met by the congregation the preacher is serving. How can churches be persuaded to this gracious service? How richly they would be repaid, as the refreshed and invigorated minister, fresh from the fellowship that bulks so large in gatherings of this sort, would bring to them a message so vital, so inspiriting, that his entire community would feel the thrill and living joy of it.

Next year, there will probably be no guest, and logically no work! We may dare to emancipate ourselves entirely from the summer school idea. We may be bold enough to affirm that it is well for men and women and little children to come together in a Retreat for the sole purpose of recuperation, only giving attention to such things as the very nature of the gathering may demand shall receive informal attention.

J. P. ROWLISON.

CHURCH EXTENSION NEWS.

The National Convention at Toronto last fall recommended that $45,000 be raised by the churches in their Offering for Church Extension. An apportionment is going out early in August to each congregation. If the apportionments are raised by each church the amount will be reached. No apportionment is beyond the reach of any church. Why should not these apportionments be reached when the Board can answer only one-third of the appeals for loans to complete necessary buildings.

At the June and July Board meetings the following loans were promised: Cleveland, O., Broadway Church, $5,000; Denver, Colo., Highland Church, $4,000; Findlay, O., Central Church, $2,500; Burris, Ont., Canada, $500; Creal Springs, Ill., $200; Winnsboro, Tex., $500; Spokane, Wash., North Hill Church, $300; Gulfport, Miss., $300; Gloversville, N. Y., Bleecker St. Church, $1,000; Birmingham, Ala., 57th St. Church, $1,000; Portales, N. M., Central Church, $500; Crescent City, Okla., $1,000; East Atlanta, Ga., $1,200; Dallas, Tex., Central, (Colored) $500; Parkwater, Wash., $400; Ashland, Ala., $400; Exira, Ia., $500; Clinton, Mo., $10,000; Milano, Tex., $150; Limon, Colo., $500; Honolulu, $9,000; Woodland Ave., (Colored) Church, Kansas City, Mo., $2,500.

Recently an Annuity Gift of $2,000 was received from a good friend in Illinois, who has been making frequent gifts. Others should be sending Annuity Gifts.

Let our prayers and preparations be made for the approaching Annual Offering in September.

God has been blessing us as a nation with bumper crops. In basket and in store He has been giving us riches as His stewards. Paul says, "It is required of stewards that a man be found faithful."

During June and July the corresponding secretary visited forty-five churches in Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon and California and attended the conventions in those states.

The associate secretary has been busy in Oklahoma, Arkansas, Minnesota and New York and has held at Bethany Park an institute of four days on "The Every Member Canvass." He also attended the Laymen's Missionary Conference at Lake Geneva, July 29th to August 2nd.

G. W. MUCKLEY, Cor. Secy.

"CLAPTRAP" METHODS

of promoting Sunday school work are rapidly passing. The pronouncements of the late meeting of the Religious Education Association, held at New Haven, indicate that fact. Our constructive leaders are deploring the shouting and "boosting" methods of contests and special days. The Sunday School is coming to a sober realization of its responsibility for the building of Christian character and the inculcation of spiritual ideals in those to whom it ministers. Thoughtful leaders know that these can not be secured by noise and clatter and inflated attendance. It is to be hoped that the Disciples of Christ will not fall out of line with the sane, sensible Sunday school army that is now looking toward other goals than "great reports," big attendance and weighty offerings.

We call your attention to the BETHANY SYSTEM OF SUNDAY SCHOOL LITERATURE which has for its purpose the BUILDING OF CHARACTER:

I. THE BETHANY GRADED LESSONS, the superior in quality, we believe, of all other similar systems of literature. Compare it with others. We would prefer that you do this.
II. THE "CONQUEST" and other WEEKLIES, attractive but constructive and sober.
III. THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM, a magazine of social service.
IV. THE LIFE OF JESUS, a thorough, constructive review of the life of the Master.

"IT is with great reluctance that the author has gained the consent of his own mind to write this book and to send it forth. In a time when men's souls are vibrating to problems involving the most vital interests and ideals of humanity one's prestige is not likely to be enhanced by connecting one's name with a book on "The Meaning of Baptism." It will seem like turning from the living present to the dead past to discuss this question again. Modern-minded men in all the churches—including also the churches that have made a feature of the dogma of immersion—have little interest in the controversy. The great new issues of life and death have for them displaced those problems of ecclesiastical refinement which engaged their fathers. . . . . .

"It is not because I am so much interested in the baptism question, but because I am profoundly interested in the life and death problems of modern religion that I have let myself be persuaded to write this book and to send it forth. . . . . .

"Among my own people, the Disciples of Christ, I am frank to say, this dogma of immersion (by this I do not mean the practice of immersion) has been like a ten-cent piece held before the eye, shutting out the sun. The great ideals of their movement for Christian unity have been much obscured and, for many minds, wholly eclipsed by this doctrine which Alexander Campbell introduced into their thinking not many years after their movement was launched by his more catholic-minded father. My conviction is profound and urgent that the Disciples' plea for Christian unity will continue to be abortive so long as Mr. Campbell's view of baptism persists among them."

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

War!

By JAMES LOGAN MOSBY

(This won the $300 prize offered by "Life")

I WAS conceived in passion, hatred, envy, and greed, born in the morning of antiquity, and have a genealogy whose every page drips with the red blood of murdered innocence. I respect neither the feebleness of gray hairs, the helplessness of infancy, nor the sacredness of virtue, and walk, iron-shod, ruthlessly and impartially over the form of the weakling or the form of the giant.

I paint the midnight skies a lurid glow from the burning homes I have ravaged, and I turn peaceful scenes of rural beauty, where God's own creatures dwell together in amity, into a raging hell. I set neighbor against neighbor in deadly combat, and I incite the brother to slay his brother. . .

I make puppets of kings, princes of paupers, courtiers of courtesans, and thieves of respected subjects, and empires melt before my breath as does mist before the morning sunlight.

I make a religion fanaticism; the heathen I make a fiend incarnate; and of all men I make playthings devoid of reason and justice. Through intrigue I make the intelligent powerful, the unscrupulous wax fat on the spoils of blood-won victories gained by others, and the less learned suffer for their own ignorance.

Famine, want, and misery follow in my path; I lay waste green fields and still the hand of industry. I pillage the land of its resources but contribute nothing to benefit mankind, leaving pestilence to stalk ghostlike in my wake and complete the work of destruction. I lay a heavy tribute upon my most loyal subjects for the maintenance of my establishment; I squander the vitality and lives of those who serve me faithfully, yet return to the world nothing but ruin and ashes. The baubles of fame I confer on some are the empty shells of false standards wherein the license to commit murder and rapine is held up to be the insignia of glory by a mistaken civilization.

I can offer no excuse for my having come into existence, nor can I give one plausible reason why I should not cease to be, other than that so long as men who wield influence are permitted to gratify their selfish desires and ambitions at the expense of the many who must carry the burdens and endure the suffering, that long will I continue to exact my toll of sorrow, devastation, and death. For I am pitiless—devoid of all feeling; I fear neither man nor God; I am amenable to no law, and I am in myself the law and the last resort.

The New Spirit in Sunday School Work is Embodied in the Bethany System of Sunday School Literature

THE recent appointment by President Hill M. Bell of a Religious Education Commission for the Disciples is indicative of an unrest with the conditions that have obtained in the Sunday Schools of the past. It is a source of satisfaction to the Disciples Publication Society that the Bethany System of Literature has been prepared on the basis of the highest ideals of religious education.

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impulse is fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the society, desires nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, the Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Character Talks

By Orvis F. Jordan, Pastor of the Christian Church at Evanston, Ill.

Rev. O. F. Jordan.

"Everyday Religion."

"Religion has suffered from being shut up in some separate compartment of life. It is no longer permissible for a man to think all week in terms of evolution and on Sunday in terms of a mechanically constructed universe. Nor will our world permit us to shout amen in the sanctuary for the Sermon on the Mount and on Monday proceed to a program of cut-throat business or engage in rotten political maneuvering. The world hates a hypocrite and a trimmer. We want out-and-out men. An everyday religion is one that really makes a difference with the commonest things of life. It is a religion that will pull the barb from neighborhood gossip. It will sweeten the domestic life, helping husband and wife to bear with each other in making the home the most attractive place in all the world for the children. It is a religion that will help men to see the meaning of lives spent in the drudgery of our highly specialized and monotonous labor in these days of factories and great office buildings. It is a religion that will make men and women sing on other days than on Sunday."

"The Conquest is just what you say it is—'a journal of character-building,'" writes one of our superintendents. "The Conquest" takes itself seriously. That's why its readers take it seriously. Is the paper your school is taking one that emphasizes the things that should be emphasized in a Sunday school—serious Bible study, religious ideals and Christian service? "The Conquest" has as its aim not simply to give schools what they have been used to—small talk of school work; but to publish such material as will actually GROW CHARACTER.

These "Character Talks" form a regular feature of "THE CONQUEST," our weekly for Adult and Young People's Classes. Send for sample copy TODAY.

Graded or Uniform Lessons--Which?

Many schools are in uncertainty at this time as to how to answer this important question. The new year is upon them. Some leaders are asking for the old-time, uniform lessons. Others demand the modern graded system. For the help of such doubtful schools, we submit the following points for thoughtful consideration:

1. The Uniform Lessons are backward-looking; the Graded Lessons look forward.
2. The Uniform Lessons have been discountenanced by all leaders in public school work; they advocate enthusiastically the Graded Lessons.
3. The Uniform Lesson system was made before the true pedagogical principles obtained in education; the Graded Lessons are built upon these principles—they are fitted to the child. The old idea was to make the child fit the lesson!
4. Forward-looking schools today are rapidly adopting the Graded Lessons.
5. The recent International Sunday-school Convention decided one thing absolutely—that the Graded Lessons are here to stay.

Don't decide to ignore the Graded Lessons—at least not until you have examined the best graded materials published--

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

Our Common Salvation

There is a fine phrase used by Jude, the brother of our Lord, in his very short epistle, "our common salvation." The word "common" which he employs means very nearly what we mean by it. It is that which is general, usual, in no way separated from anything else that is normally related to it. It may even imply something cheap and vulgar, as when Peter says he has never eaten anything common or unclean; and it is definitely contrasted with things that are of particular or especial sanctity—the "koinos" from the "hagios," the common from the holy. The two words occur in this verse, for the very word with which "common" is contrasted, is that translated "saints." We have here the common faith of the holy community.

That is the first thing to think about as Christian brethren—the community of interest which we have in the religion of Christ. It is not simply "the common salvation" of the old version. It is "our common salvation" as children of God. It is this which makes a church possible, the fact that our religious life is not isolated. The apostles wrote to those who had obtained like precious faith with them. Paul wrote to Titus as his "own son in a common faith."

There are so many good things to be said about this faith, as something possessed by a collective group of people, having a corporate unity, and a continuous existence, that one could talk long and write at length about it. The corporation was a creature of Roman law, an artificial person, having an existence apart from that of the individuals composing it. It could commit acts as a person, and for them there could be corporate instead of individual responsibility. Yet the Romans are not the sole discoverers of the corporation. The Church is a corporate body, spiritual, and often legal. It is an organic unity endowed with the attributes of personality and perpetuity. It is composed of those who have a common experience of regeneration in the Spirit of God. This was to Jude so rich and sweet an experience that when he considered the matter of writing a letter to his fellow Christians, he had no other thought than simply to write of this joyous common possession —"our common salvation." He, an actual brother of the Lord Jesus, held his hope in common with all other Christians, no matter how near or remote in time or space.

But Jude was restrained from making his letter one of mere Christian complacency. Good as was his opportunity to exalt the Christian possession of a common hope, he was constrained to write earnestly exhorting those to whom he wrote to contend for the faith of the Gospel.

If faith is worth anything it must sometimes be striven for.

> "Must I be carried to the skies
> On flowery beds of ease,
> While others fought to win the prize,
> Or sailed through bloody seas?"

Faith is more than complacency; it is moral struggle. It compels us to labor as well as wait.

Still, our thought turns back to the phrase "our common salvation" and we almost wish that Jude had carried out his original plan and written us a letter about that. Here is a brother of Jesus writing with no arrogance, no pride of relationship, no assumption of authority. He was a brother of Jesus, and so was every man who loved Him; he wanted to write and when he wrote, he wrote, not of personal monopoly of his own, but of "our common salvation."

* * *

There is a well authenticated story which comes from Hegesippus, in which it is affirmed that the Emperor Domitian, hearing that there were descendants of David then living, demanded that they be brought before him, and that two men, whose names we learn from a recently discovered fragment to have been Zocer and James, were brought to him, and presented as grandsons of Jude, the brother of Jesus. Domitian questioned them concerning both David and Jesus, and they answered in terms of their history and faith. But when he sought to learn whether these men of royal blood and messianic relationship were dangerous to him, they showed him their hands hard with toil, and told him they were humble men, earning their own bread; and he dismissed them as too simple to be dangerous and ordered the persecution of the descendants of David to cease. He did it in contempt, for they were very humble men; and that to us is the interesting thing about it. They were the nearest blood relations of Jesus then living, and they were laboring men, and faithful Christians.

This man Jude, their grandfather, writing to his fellow Christians, had in mind not to tell them how great a thing it was for him to have lived in the same home with Jesus and to have been of his royal family; he wanted to write to them of "our common salvation."

It is a good lesson of brotherhood and humility.

Our common salvation is rich in its blessings not to a privileged few, but to all men everywhere.

Practicing Unity by Federation

How a Young Community Stands Together to Keep Denominationalism Out.

BY WILLIAM J. LOCKHART.

TO PROPERLY understand and at all appreciate the work we are doing in establishing "The Urbandale Federated Church," one must know the community and the spirit of the people in this unique Urbandale district. This community is that part of Des Moines, west of the Des Moines River, north of Hickman Avenue. "Urbandale" is a general term used to include all the people who ride on the Urbandale car line and have the "Urbandale spirit." It is a territory bounded more by the community spirit than by geographical limits. Yet it must be said that here is a great territory covering several square miles, a part of the city of Des Moines and rapidly building up, which until our movement was started had no church facilities nearer than the downtown churches. Elmwood United Presbyterian Church and the University Church of Christ more than a mile and a half away.

Eight years ago when entering upon evangelistic work, we settled in the "Burr Oakes," among the first pioneers to move into this new part of the city of Des Moines. For several years it was like a country home, and while all the advantages of the country remain, the advantages of the city have also come to our doors.

LEARNING TO "PULL TOGETHER."

In these early years we organized an "Urbandale Improvement League." Somewhat removed from the city there grew up a strong community spirit. People learned to pull together. We went after things and secured them. Together we succeeded first in getting a city graded school with five acres for a playground. We got better car service. We secured electric lights and now the sewer and city water are coming our way. We secured the paving of Beaver Avenue to the city limits. We opened and are still opening new streets. In material things we pulled together and we never knew of a neighborhood jar.

Some years ago the Urbandale vesper services were begun and held in the woods every Sunday evening during the summer. Out of these services grew the Union Sunday-school, which has continued throughout the past three years. During all these years when at home and as opportunity offered I preached a sort of a "Monroe Doctrine" that we should consider it an unfriendly act for any denomination to come in and endeavor to establish a denominational church. We were united on all other things, and I believed we could be united on religion.

LIVING UP TO ITS "MONROE DOCTRINE."

This spring I realized that the time had come for definite action if our ideal was to be preserved. The community was growing rapidly. Property values had increased greatly, new store buildings were coming and acreage was being plotted into lots. Nine different denominations had applied to the Comity Committee of the Inter-Church Council of Des Moines, to be given the right of way for planting a "mission" in Urbandale. The Comity Committee has only advisory power and could not prevent any or all of these different denominations from coming in and dividing our community. Only one thing could prevent this calamity, that was for Urbandale to move and mould her own religious life. We moved.

Returning from an Oklahoma evangelistic meeting, I called together a few of the neighbors and outlined a plan. The question was then raised, can we not unite on some one denomination? This I knew was impossible and the community soon learned that it was. However, we moved slowly. A series of prayer meetings were begun and held in different homes on each Wednesday night. In the course of these meetings we referred the things we were discussing to Mr. John R. Mott, who happened to be in our state for a day. A special messenger was sent to him at Iowa City. He listened, and as between a memorial denominational church and a federated church he expressed faith in the federated idea. This strengthened some of the willing but hesitant ones.

ELEVEN DENOMINATIONS REPRESENTED.

Things now moved rapidly. A committee was appointed to draft plans for a church that would meet the needs of Urbandale. We reported our plans for a federated church. They were indorsed at a mass meeting at the schoolhouse. I was invited to hold a ten-days' tabernacle meeting for launching the movement. The city of Des Moines took a keen interest and the business men furnished most of the material for the tabernacle, and the people of Urbandale did the work. In two days' time we built our first meeting house. I secured Mr. Tolbert McRae to lead the music, and the meeting was on. It continued over three Sundays, and resulted in bringing together 130 people, representing eleven different denominations, into one united congregation. Of this number about fifty were new converts, among them a number of the strongest men in the community to whom this plan made a strong appeal, and who had never been reached by any denominational church. Many others who had no church affiliations in the city came gladly into the community church. Already we have secured more than eight thousand dollars toward a Admits into membership without question any member in good standing of any Protestant evangelical church.

Admits anyone who has ever been a member of any Protestant evangelical church, and who may not at present be a member, upon a reconsecration of life to Christian service.

Permits any member who so desires to retain his membership in his former church or denominational body while holding membership in the federated church, thus retaining, where desired, the old ties while united in the community for Christian service.

New converts after confession of their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour, are first received by the denominational church of their choice in the down town city church and then received into the "Urbandale Federated Church." If the convert has no denominational choice, he is first baptized by any ordained Protestant minister he may choose and is then received into full fellowship, having no other church affiliations but the Federated Church.

Communion service is observed by the Federated Church on the first Sunday in each month.

The congregation refrains from participation as a congregation in any social activities that would do violence to the teachings of any church represented in its membership.

Missionary funds are gathered and disbursed to such missionary agencies as represent a federation of the various churches.

The community life is to be emphasized and the church made a community center. One mid-week service is given over to ministering to the social needs of the community. Saturday afternoon is a half holiday, one hour of which is given over to a serious religious service and then all retire to the playground for sports and recreation, the young people of different ages being directed by chosen leaders in their sports.

permanent building, and I have been asked by neighbors to continue the leadership during the building operation. This I shall do during the interval between evangelistic meetings or when I can get away from my other duties.

REMARKABLE SPIRIT OF UNITY.

I want to say that I have never seen a more remarkable unity in any congregation of our own people or in any denominational church with which I have been in contact than that which is characterizing this congregation made up of the representatives of eleven different churches. I am as confident of the continued working out of the plan for our community as I am certain Jesus was in earnest when he prayed that we all might be one that the world might believe.

As a community and especially as a church there is the deep conviction that the work is of God, and that he has been leading and will continue to guide the further working out of our plans.

Where there would have been a number of struggling missions we have in three weeks organized a strong church that will from its beginning dominate the social and religious life of the community. Our official board is made up of fifteen men, three of them new converts, members of no church except the Urbandale Church, and twelve of them trained Christian workers representing the six leading denominations in Des Moines. All are dominated with but one purpose and that is to unite and hold united the entire community of Urbandale for Christ and his service. Had we insisted on these men breaking with their denominational church completely and joining a church some few of us might have preferred, they would never have done so and we would have seen repeated here in our neighborhood the sad spectacle of a community divided against itself on the very thing Christ intended we should be united upon. The privilege granted in our accepted plan of maintaining a dual membership has won, and already proved the idea was from God. It is practical and solves the difficulties that have wrecked other efforts at Christian union. No one is asked to surrender a religious principle he holds or to cease to present it in a Christian spirit. We agree to recognize one another as Christians inside the church organization just as for a long time we have recognized one another outside the church fellowship. The unique work has attracted the attention of the entire church life of Des Moines, and only those question and doubt our future unity who have not been in the meetings through which we have passed or who have not caught the Urbandale spirit or known her people.

AN EVERY-DAY CREED.

By Charles Stelzle.

I believe in my job. It may not be a very important job, but it is mine. Furthermore, it is God's job for me, if I am honestly trying to do his will. He has a purpose in my life with reference to his plan for the world's progress. No other fellow can take my place. It isn't a big place, to be sure, but for years I have been molded in a peculiar way to fill a peculiar niche in the world's work. I could take no other man's place. He has the same claim as a specialist that I make for myself. Yes, I believe in my job. May I be kept true to the task which lies before me—true to myself and to God, who intrusted me with it.

I believe in my fellow-man. He may not always agree with me. I'd feel sorry for him if he did, because I myself do not believe some of the things that were absolutely sure in my own mind a dozen years ago. May he never lose faith in himself, because if he does he may lose faith in me, and that would hurt him more than the former, and it would really hurt him more than it would hurt me.

I believe in my country. I believe in it because it is made up of my fellowmen—and myself. I can't go back on either of us and be true to my creed. If it isn't the best country in the world, it is partly because I am not the kind of a man that I should be.

I believe in my home. It isn't a rich home. It wouldn't satisfy some folks, but it contains jewels which cannot be purchased in the markets of the world. When I enter its secret chambers and shut out the world with its care, I am a lord. Its motto is service, its reward is love. There is no other place in all the world which fills its place, and heaven can be only a larger home, with a Father who is all-wise and patient and tender.

I believe in today. It is all that I possess. The past is of value only as it can make the life of today fuller and freer. There is no assurance of tomorrow. I must make good today.

The Mind of Christ

BY JAMES FORT NEWTON.

On the first page of his great book, Bergson tells us that the intellect is "an appendage to the faculty of action" and, later, that it has "a natural inability to comprehend life." So also Kant, who made it clear that Pure Reason alone cannot know the reality of things.These thinkers do not belittle the intellect, but they do show us, in different ways, its proper limits. We cannot know living reality by simply thinking about it, still less by analyzing and watching it. We must be in it and of it, must enter into it by intuitive sympathy and know it, as Bergson says, "after the fashion of one who loves." Hamlet was not a creation of pure reason, but of swift and vivid artistic insight, and no doubt he was as much a wonder to Shakespeare as he is to us.

WHAT DOES PAUL MEAN?

So far the apostle and the philosophers agree, but here their paths part. Kant saved the day by appeal to the "practical reason," and Bergson to the instinctive mind, whereas St. Paul appeals to a higher mind which he calls "spiritual;" and this mind, he says, apprehends divine things. What is this highest mind? Instead of defining it, St. Paul shows us what it is by concrete example; it is the mind of Christ.

What, then, could St. Paul have meant when he said that we have the mind of Christ? We must be able to share it, and yet no one of us, or all of us together, can obtain it. Our chalice soon overflows, and the sea is still full. Only in our corporate and communal life can we be said to possess the mind of Christ and incarnate it. It is like the air and sunlight which the flowers have in common, and from which each derives its beauty of form and color. One flower differs from another flower in charm, but there are so many shapes of one life revealing its unity in variety. Just so the mind of Christ, more gentle and abundant than the sunlight, reveals its unity and richness in all the myriad forms which love and service and character take.

"CHRISTIAN MEDICINE."

From Arrah, in the United Provinces of India, comes the story of a cure that has greatly stirred the people of that region.

A native who had been critically ill with plague for five days was given up by the family. Indeed, a man had been sent to town to buy cloth for the burial.

"Our Indian preacher," writes Methodist Missionary Fred M. Perrill, "happened to meet the man on his return, and questioned him as to the sick one's condition.

"He was answered by a doleful shake of the head.

"To our preacher's suggestion that medicine be secured from our dispensary, the other man laughed, declaring that it was no use as the patient was practically dead.

"Finally, the unbeliever consented to try the medicine, giving it in the name of Jesus. And our preacher awaited the result with keen interest.

"Early the next morning our doubting brother ran into the mission house and excitedly declared that the sick man was not only alive, but almost recovered. 'Please give me a little more of that Christian medicine,' he added."

John Smith on the New Poets*

ACCORDING TO AN INTERVIEW BY THOMAS CURTIS CLARK.

WHEN I called upon my friend, Mr. John Smith, at his house by the side of the road, I found him poring over several books of verse. This reading he was doing only as a rest from the arduous toil of gardening; for Mr. Smith is a gardener, not a literary critic or professor of literature. For this very reason I came to him, feeling that a true estimate could be given by him of some of our "new poets." For I realize that, after all, the common man is the one who finally decides whether or not a writer is worth while.

I was delighted to find that Mr. Smith had a copy of Nicholas Vachel Lindsay's poems in his hand. Beside him lay volumes of John Masefield and Tagore; these he had evidently turned from to give more interested attention to the third book.

"What do you think of Tagore and Masefield?" I asked Mr. Smith, after we had returned to the living room from the garden; for of course my friend had to take me out to show me how his beans and tomatoes were thriving.

"Well, sir," Mr. Smith replied, "I'm afraid to tell you, I fear you'd say I do not have the normal amount of intelligence, or that I am woefully behind the times. But, if you are willing to take my talk for just what it is—the ideas of a plain everyday man, I will tell you frankly what I think." Of course I assented to his proposition. I was eager to learn his point of view; for I consider John Smith to be a man of remarkably shrewd insight into literary values. His grandfather was a professor of English in one of the eastern schools, but the grandson is sufficiently removed from him to be free from his ancestor's bias, at the same time falling heir to the elder man's remarkable intelligence.

"When I took up these Tagore and Masefield volumes," began Mr. Smith, "I confess that I had high hopes of finding gold mines in both of them. I had read the reviews of the work of these 'rising stars of the literary firmament.' I have been a reader of classic poetry from the time I was ten years of age, but I can say I am always willing to add to my friends, Shakespeare, Milton, Shelley, Burns, et cetera, the prophets of a new age.

"Perhaps the shock I received on picking up Tagore was the more intense because I had been reading early in the day some bits from Wordsworth and Shelley. For instance, I had been enjoying the Wordsworth poem beginning:

"'The world is too much with us; late and soon,
Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers;
Little we see in Nature that is ours
We have given our hearts away, a sordid boon!'

"Imagine my consternation, my dear sir, when I opened this little book of Tagore's, 'The Gardener,' and read this:

"'Queen: What will you have for your reward?

"'Servant: To be allowed to hold your little fists like tender lotus-buds and slip flower chains over your wrists; to tinge the soles of your feet with the red juice of ashoka petals and kiss away the speck of dust that may chance to linger there.'

"Poetic, isn't it, and powerful, very! I feel like reading in connection with this a sentence from one of the reviewers regarding Tagore's work. It is of a kind with much of the Indian poet's writing: 'In the poems of this mystic the world appears no longer in its brutality, its vehemence, its swift yet dense fluidity [whatever that may be]; it is seized in the very moment of its passing and fixed in the clarity and stillness of his vision.'

"But to quote again from this densely fluid poet another love song:

"'If you would have it so, I will end my singing,
If it sets your heart aflutter, I will take away my eyes from your face.
If it suddenly startles you in your walk, I will step aside and take another path.
If it confuses you in your flower-weaving, I will shun your lonely garden.
If it makes the water wanton and wild, I will not row my boat by your bank.'

"Now, regarding this I shall only tell you what my ragtime-playing daughter said when I asked her to put the thought of this poem into a few words. She said: 'If you don't want me roun', I'll hike!'

"Don't think, however," added Mr. Smith, "that I do not recognize any poetry in Tagore's work. I have read but one book, 'The Gardener,' and have found some true poetry here; as for instance this:

"'In the world's audience hall, the simple blade of grass sits on the same carpet with the sunbeam and the stars of midnight.'

"That's poetry, I acknowledge, and what follows, as well. But frankly, I do not see what all this noise is about regarding Tagore's poetry. I have seen more poetry in this month's magazines—which verse was probably sold for fifty cents a line—than I find in this expensive book. But, of course, Tagore is a Hindu, and has been widely advertised. Advertising, you know, is recognized as the eighth wonder of the world; and it certainly is that; for by means of it 100,000 copies of this book are said to have been disposed of, at $1.25 per!

"Just one other remark concerning Tagore: I do wish he could have spent an evening with Bobby Burns; he might have learned how to write real love songs.

"But you wanted to know what I think of Masefield. I must inform you, at the outset, that I've read but this one book, 'The Everlasting Mercy,' which brought Masefield his fame. I would not do injustice to his other books, which no doubt are all genuine poetry, guaranteed 99 per cent pure.

"Before taking up the Masefield book I had been reading from Shelley, unfortunately—Shelley, the most ethereal of all poets, in my opinion. His 'To a Skylark' had been receiving my attention:

"'Hail to thee, blithe spirit!
Bird thou never wert,

---

*"The Gardener." By Rabindranath Tagore. Macmillan Company, New York. $1.25.

"The Everlasting Mercy" and "The Widow in The Bye Street." By John Masefield. Macmillan Company, New York. $1.25.

"General William Booth Enters into Heaven." By Nicholas Vachel Lindsay. Mitchell Kennerley, New York. $1.00.

That from heaven, or near it
  Pourest thy full heart
In profuse strains of unpremeditated art.

"'Higher still and higher
  From the earth thou springest,
Like a cloud of fire,
  The blue deep thou wingest,
And singing still dost soar, and soaring ever singest.'

"What a fall was there, my beloved, when from this I dropped down to the first lines of 'The Everlasting Mercy':

"'From '41 to '51
I was my folk's contrary son;
I bit my father's hand right through
And broke my mother's heart in two.
I sometimes go without my dinner
Now that I know the times I've gi'n her.'

"But, you say, these are the words of a saloon bum, who was transformed from a boxer into a Christian? Very well; in that case the story should have been written in prose, and should have been included in Begbie's 'Twice-Born Men,' and not in a supposed book of poetry.

"But I am not saying that there is no poetry in 'The Everlasting Mercy.' There is. For instance:

"'O Christ who holds the open gate,
O Christ who drives the furrow straight,
O Christ, the plough, O Christ, the laughter
Of holy white birds flying after,
Lo, all my heart's field red and torn,
And Thou wilt bring the young green corn,
The young green corn divinely springing,
The young green corn forever singing;
And when the field is fresh and fair
Thy blessed feet shall glitter there,
And we will walk the weeded field,
And till the golden harvest's yield,
The corn that makes the holy head
By which the soul of man is fed,
The holy head, the food unpriced,
Thy everlasting mercy, Christ.'

"That looks like poetry to me, and I do wish that the writer had gotten the poetry started earlier in the game!"

"But, my dear man," I said, "do you not really think that Tagore and Masefield are two of the most significant figures in today's life and thought?"

"Indeed I do," Mr. Smith replied, without hesitation. "But you're getting away from the subject. I understood that we were talking of poets. If you wish, I might give you a discourse of an hour on 'Tagore, Preacher, Philosopher and Today's Greatest Interpreter of the Orient to the Occident.' Then I might follow with an hour on the significance of Masefield as a prophet of realism in literature. But that would be off the subject again. I am considering these men now simply as poets. My test of poetry is whether it presents 'imagery greatly conceived and greatly expressed.' According to this standard, I cannot call Masefield and Tagore great poets.

"While we are talking of poets," my friend the gardener continued, "let me tell you something. This man Lindsay is a true poet. Every page of this book contains poetry. Although I somehow can't get into that 'My sweetheart is the truth beyond the moon,' and 'the song of the garden toad,' I confess to a deep liking for most of this verse. There was never written a more beautiful or meaningful poem than this, entitled, 'The Cornfields:'

"'The cornfields rise above mankind,
  Lifting white torches to the blue,
Each season not ashamed to be Magnificently decked for you.

"'What right have you to call them yours,
  And in brute lust of riches burn
Without some radiant penance wrought,
  Some beautiful, devout return?'

"But perhaps I'm something of a socialist, and like the poem for that reason.

"You will be surprised to see me pass by 'General William Booth,' to tell you that I consider Mr. Lindsay's most significant poems to be the three he includes in his 'Gospel of Beauty' series. These, according to the author's statement, 'hold in solution my theory of American civilization.' And let me tell you this: if this Illinois poet will stick to his last and develop the ideas he has expressed in these poems, the world and much therein will be his, so far as final fame is concerned.

"In 'The Proud Farmer,' Mr. Lindsay presents his ideal of rural life, describing the rugged farmer who 'for forty years preached and ploughed and wrought —a statesman in the fields who bent to none.' In 'The Illinois Village' is given his ideal of village life. He begins the poem with these words:

"'O you who lose the art of hope,
  Whose temples seem to shrine a lie,
Whose sidewalks are but stones of fear,
  Who weep that Liberty must die,
Turn to the little prairie towns,
  Your higher hope shall yet begin.
On every side awaits you there
  Some gate where glory enters in.'

"Then in the poem 'On the Building of Springfield,' is pictured the ideal city:

"'Let every street be made a reverent aisle
Where Music grows and Beauty is unchained.

"'Let Science, Machinery and Trade
Be slaves of her, and make her all in all.
Building against our blatant, restless time
An unseen, skilful, medieval wall.'

"There is a poet who has tremendous ideas, and who has also the grace and power to fitly express them. Mr. Lindsay's friends are hoping that he will not take the advice of a certain Irish poet, who a short time ago told him that he must get away from the 'uplift' idea. He wishes him, I suppose, to take to champagne and cigarettes, and utter the thoughts, foolish or otherwise, that come to him while under their influence. That seems to be the idea of some literary cults today. I fear that this 'certain Irish poet' is hardly a good adviser for Mr. Lindsay, for he is only a poet, while the Illinois writer is primarily a prophet, secondarily a poet. I have full faith that Mr. Lindsay is not going to back down on his 'uplift' principles."

I suppose my friend Smith would have talked on until the day's end if I had let him, but I was considerate of him. I had noticed, also, that his tomatoes needed watering and realized that if I stayed with him through the day the plants would suffer. So I made ready to depart.

As I left, Mr. Smith remarked that he would be pleased some time to tell me why he thought the time would come when Nicholas Vachel Lindsay would be recognized as the first of American poets, as Alfred Noyes the dean of English poets.

This proposition, of course, I expressed interest in, then took my departure, taking also with me some few things to think over.

The Prayer of a Tired Man

From "Men at Work."

O GOD, whose infinite power and ceaseless labors create and maintain all things, let me learn to rest in Thee. May the cares of my work and daily toil and the pressure of responsibility on my nerves in no wise dull my soul toward Thee nor shut my heart to Thy peace. May this season of rest and recreation bring me into Thy presence, where out of the unbroken calm of Thine infinite power and everlasting serenity my faith truly may rest and my soul learn of the pathways of perfect peace. May I let the voices of field and forest, streams and mountain peak and sea surf tell me of Thy personal presence in the world. May I be able to drop the anxiety that spoils vision and deafens the ear and robs the heart of rest. Cleanse every cell of breathing tissue with breath of summer breezes and clarify my understanding in order that I may turn again to the joys of service. For these incessant burdens that test me and train me and strengthen my spirit, I give Thee thanks. Help me to love my task, be it large or small, and may all of its monotony and littleness, its irritations and depressions, its strain and pull on all my life forces, make for character in me. Teach me to be sweet and kindly at all times and to keep locked within my bosom the things that disturb and annoy. And bring me out from the resting places of the summertime refreshed and buoyant, ready for the larger tasks of the Church of God in this great day.

The Unescapable God

BY W. DeWITT HYDE.

> Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence?
>
> If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in hell behold, thou art there.
>
> If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea:
> Ever there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me.—Ps. 139:7-10.

TAKEN literally this passage does not appeal to the modern man. We do not think of a big man-shaped God somewhere in space following us everywhere we go. We do not think of God as John Fiske says he used to when a child—a stern man with spectacles, standing up at a high desk, and charging on a great ledger all we say and do. We do not any longer fear the stern judge with His dire penalties from which the only escape is acceptance of some arbitrary scheme He has devised for our salvation. All that has gone, and no preaching or praying will bring it back. The arbitrary God has ceased to interest the modern man, for he has ceased to hold the ideas on which such views of God are based.

THE GOD OF UNIVERSAL LOVE.

As Emerson tells us, however, "when half-gods go, the gods arrive." If both the man-shaped God in space, the stern judge, the deviser of arbitrary salvation-schemes, and the unknown God of the hysterical agnostic have gone, God the spirit of universal love has come, and is coming more evidently, more irresistibly, more triumphantly than ever before. The unknown God, too, of whom we heard so much a decade or two ago, has ceased to concern us, the God of whom William Watson sings:

"When overarched by gorgeous night
I wave my trivial self away,
When all I was to all men's sight
Shares the erasure of the day,
Then do I cast my cumbering load,
Then do I gain a sense of God."

That is beautiful poetry, but pernicious philosophy.

Substitute for space spheres of life, for the arbitrary man-shaped God the spirit of love, and all the old psalmist said comes true again. Indeed, a modern poet, Francis Thompson, writing out of a genuine experience, has said in modern English almost the very thing the old Hebrew psalmist tells us in our text. In his "Hound of Heaven" he gives a revised version of "Whither shall I flee from thy presence?"

"I fled Him, down the nights and down the days;
I fled Him, down the arches of the years;
I fled Him down the labyrinthine ways
Of my own mind; and in the midst of tears
I hid from Him, and under running laughter.
Up vistaed hopes I sped,
And shot, precipitated
Adown titanic glooms of charmed fears,
From the strong Feet that followed, followed after.
But with unhurrying chase,
And unperturbed pace,
Deliberate speed, majestic instancy,
They beat; and a Voice beat
More instant than the Feet
'All things betray thee, who betrayest Me.
Naught shelters thee, who wilt not shelter Me.
Lo, naught contents thee, who content'st not Me.
Lo, all things fly thee, for thou fliest Me.'"

Translated into plain prose, the ancient and the modern poets mean substantially this: In every sphere of life there is a Spirit of universal love or good will, which, if welcomed, makes life glorious and sublime, but if rejected, omitted, leaves life cold and dead. That Spirit of universal love follows, entreats us in every sphere of life to be His recipients, agents, embodiments. He sorrows for us in all the dryness and dreariness into which we fall when we try to leave Him out, and is patiently waiting, earnestly entreating us at all times and everywhere to let Him into our lives, and to let in with Him the joy and gladness His presence always brings. All this, however, sounds hopelessly vague and mystical so long as we confine it to generalities. Can we translate it into the hard, homely realities of daily living? Can we show that it is true to the experience of every one of us that with the spirit of love in our hearts we are always and everywhere blessed, and without that Spirit we are always and everywhere miserable? Let us see.

LOVE IN THE SPHERES OF LIFE.

Let us take four great spheres of life—home, society, work, play—as examples of all the other great spheres, and see whether in each of them it is really true that with this spirit of love they become happy, beautiful, noble, without that spirit they become cruel, bitter, deadly. That is the way to test and verify this deep truth the two poets, the ancient Hebrew and the modern Englishman, are trying to convey.

First, the home. Have you ever seen, either in your own experience or as portrayed by novel or play, a home in which one or more of its members was running away from the spirit of love? Do you know how ugly and hateful, how cross and cruel, such a home can be? It is the acutest form of suffering this sad and suffering world contains. For selfishness, lust, greed, hate, nagging, fault-finding, make misery everywhere, but most of it where contact is most constant and intimate. That is why something like one-tenth of all the families in America today abandon their home life in disgust in the divorce court. You can't flee from the presence of the spirit of love in the home without turning that home into the hardest, hottest, most disgusting and degrading form of misery. Here most clearly do we hear the voice of His Spirit saying, "Whither shall we go from thy Spirit?" "Naught shelters thee who will not shelter Me."

Yet the home with God in it, the home in which the spirit of love in each member seeks the good of each other member and the common good of all, is by far the purest, highest, sweetest form of blessedness we know on earth—the only worthy symbol of heaven. Whoever, either in literature or life, has entered a true home knows full well that God, the spirit of love, is there to maintain and bless, and that His presence is the only cure for those unendurable evils for which divorce is welcomed by increasing multitudes as the wretched remedy. If I ascend into the true home, Thou art there. We cannot flee God in the home. For as sure as we enter a true home, the spirit of love, the Spirit of God, is there to make it and keep it the blessed place it is.

GOD IN SOCIETY.

Society is another sphere in which it is vain to try to flee from God, the spirit of love and good will. Have you ever seen a social group of men and women without God, without the spirit of mutual love and good will? Then you know the hollow ostentation, the silly vanity, the bitter jealousies, the heart-burning envies, the treacherous insincerities, the carping criticisms, which deadly ennuis, the sour cynicisms, which fill the hearts of these pitiful creatures. You know how they try to curry favor with those whom they think richer or superior to themselves, and with what snobbishness, indifference, or contempt they look down on those whom they fancy poorer or inferior to themselves.

Leaving God out of their social schemes, leaving the spirit of universal love and good will out of their intercourse with their fellows, their hearts become cold and hard, their souls become dry and dead, their lives become hollow and insincere, and for them society becomes dreary and empty. Not by yacht nor automobile can you escape the scorching, withering blight that falls on any form of social intercourse that dares to leave Him out, and fly from His spirit of mutual kindness and good will. Here, again, we hear the following Voice of God—"All things betray thee, who betrayest Me." "Whither shalt thou flee from My presence?"

On the other hand, the most simple and casual meeting with our fellowmen, if God and His spirit of love be in it, is a joy to both him who gives and him who receives. Every friendship, every intimacy, every meeting, formal or informal, if God be there, if love be present, is the supreme blessedness of earth, the richest foretaste of heaven. No one who has once learned what God can do for an acquaintance or a friendship would ever willingly think of leaving Him out of his plans of social life. Whoever once has known the joy of sincere devotion to the happiness of others, however far removed in rank or station they may be, will always invite God to be the chief guest in all his social activities, and the spirit of love to be the ruling principle of all his social life. In the spirit of the Psalmist he will say, "If I enter into society, Thou art there."

GOD IN OUR WORK.

Our work likewise becomes both to ourselves and others a blessing or a curse, according as we take God into it, or try to leave Him out. We all know what work becomes when no spirit of good will to all animates and controls it—a sordid scramble for money, regardless of how we get it, or out of whom we take it, a dreary round of dull drudgery, the constant temptation to shirk, offer defective goods and render half-hearted services. We know how the godless employer squeezes and despises his employes, and we see on the other side reciprocated hate in strike and sabotage. Whoever works for money exclusively, with no genuine regard for employer and employes, creditor, customer, and consumer, is trying the fatal experiment of leaving God out of his work; and here as in every other sphere, he soon finds that not only is he himself in the hell of hard-heartedness and hate, but he is driving (or as the Psalmist says, if I make my bed in the industrial hell of mutual hate, thou art there) all who respond to his influence into the same hell. Public attention has recently been called to the downfall of the policy, recently prevalent and for a time successful, of substituting manipulation and monopoly for efficient service and a just greed above humanity, money before good will. And if he has ears to hear, he will hear the Voice of God in the consideration of the interests and sentiments of patrons and the public. Everything goes wrong for the man who puts God away from his work. He learns how true are the words of our modern poet,

"Lo, all things fly thee, for thou fliest Me."

Yet work with God, work wrought in the spirit of good will to employer and employe, to producer and consumer, to the public and to one's profession, is the most noble and blessed experience of life. To feel that we are doing something as well as we can to make life for others and for all happy and wholesome, noble and beautiful, gives us a fellowship with the creative love of God. As Carlyle says of the true co-worker with God, "Blessed is he who has found his work; let him ask no other blessedness." Such work is partnership with God in His good will to man.

If I take the wings of the morning and plunge into business, Thou are there.

IN JOY AS IN SORROW.

One might think play, pleasure, recreation a sphere where one might run away from God. Our modern poet, you remember, tried to flee not only "in the midst of tears," but "under running laughter." It can't be done. Our pleasures either increase or diminish our general vigor and efficiency, and so make us stronger or weaker servants of God, and they either ennoble or degrade those who provide them for us and share them with us, and so either express or violate the spirit of love, which is God. I think it is a great mistake to pick out and brand as intrinsically evil any form of amusement. For whether a form of amusement is good or bad depends on whether it invigorates and ennobles or deteriorates and degrades. And that in turn depends mainly on the environment in which it is sought, and the extent to which it is carried. Whatever pleasure weakens the power and inclination for work when work calls, is for us a godless pleasure. Whatever pleasure degrades or demoralizes those who provide it for us or share it with us, is a loveless pleasure. The awakening conscience about the social evil, the increasing sentiveness to the pitiful fate of the white slave, are signs that after centuries of blindness we are beginning to see that no honorable or right-minded man can have part or lot in the patronage or support of places and practices which involve for the unfortunate instruments of one's pleasure such bitter shame and suffering, dishonor and death, and spread disease and alienation in the healthy bodies and otherwise happy homes of innocent wives and children. No man who has a spark of chivalry or honor in his soul can seek or find pleasure for himself at such fearful, cruel cost to others. He will hear the Voice of God, the spirit of love saying:

"Lo, naught contents thee, who content'st not Me."

Yet the true child of God is no ascetic. All pleasures of mind and body, soul and flesh, all indoor and outdoor sports and games, will be welcomed and enjoyed as the good gifts of God, just in so far as they build up powers otherwise dormant or decadent, and bless not one alone but all. Nothing really good for all, in its remote as well as its immediate effects, will God withhold from them that walk uprightly. In the words of our poem, which we are taking as the modern version of our text.

"All which I took from thee I did but take
Not for thy harms,
But just that thou might'st seek it in My arms.
All which thy child's mistake
Fancies as lost, I have stored up for thee at home.
Rise, clasp My hand, and come."

or, as our Psalmist would say, "If I dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea of pure and noble pleasure, even there shall Thy hand lead me and Thy right hand shall hold me."

"WHAT ABOUT THE CHURCH?"

It we had time, it would be easy to show this truth of the omnipresence of the spirit of universal love, or God, in every other sphere of life—science, art, politics—just as we have seen it in home and society, work and play. But perhaps you are already asking, "What about the church? It not God present there in a greater degree than in these secular spheres of which we have been speaking?" That is a fair question, and deserving a square answer. Unless we find God, the spirit of love in these other spheres, we shall never find Him in the church. If we live the rest of our lives in hardness, pride, greed, lust, hate, selfishness, and then come to church to find God, we shall come in vain. No preacher can prove to us God's existence, no prayer can bring Him near—for our minds are empty of the love and good will which is His nature and character, and our hearts are far from Him.

Into a life that is godless and loveless in home and society, in work and play, no church or cathedral, no preacher or priest, can bring God and His love on Sunday morning. God and His love are everywhere or nowhere for each individual. If He could be found in church alone, or prayer alone, or preaching alone, He would not be God, He would not be the spirit of universal love. Unless we seek and find God and His Spirit every day it is a waste of time to come to church on Sunday. All we shall find if we come, will be a little preaching, or music, or ritual, to criticise and find fault with. If we get nothing out of the church and its services, it is because we bring nothing to it—no God whom we have been serving, no love in which we have been living and working the other days of the week. Fleeing God elsewhere, He flees us when we come to church. What, then, is the use of the church and public worship if we cannot find God there, unless we are finding and serving Him everywhere else? Is it not a superfluous institution, a waste of time that would better be given, as many do give it, to home and society, to work and play? Not so. If we find God and serve God in these other spheres, if we carry His spirit of love and good will into everything else, if from these other spheres we bring God and His love with us to church, then we shall find Him there. Prayer will bring us close to Him, and His love close to us; the hymns will lift us into higher, fuller fellowship with Him; the sermon will point out new ways of serving Him, and expressing His love in our lives; and the holy sacraments will assure us that, no matter how unworthy and black our sins, if we really desire Him and His life of love, He is ours, and we are His forever. Now such encouragement and guidance, such forgiveness and reassurance, we all need at stated times and places. The church is to the life of love and divine human service what a rally is to a political party or an athletic team. An evening rally in the interest of a football team at the opening of the season, or before a game, is no substitute for weeks and months of faithful training, skill, courage, and fighting spirit. If you do not have these, speech-making and song singing at the rally will amount to nothing. Unless you have these things outside the hall, it is worse than time wasted to come there to the rally. But if you have these things, the rally helps to bring more men out to practice, and to make those who are out already eager and alert to do their best.

A SERVICE OF RECONSECRATION.

Now to men and women in earnest to find and serve God, a meeting every week to receive the blessing of God, and to reconsecrate themselves to the life of love and good will, is a blessed and fruitful privilege. It all depends upon what we bring, the spirit in which we come. No ritual is so elaborate, no service so ornate, no preacher so eloquent, no prayer so fervent, that, save by a rare miracle of grace, it can bless the man of selfish, hard, cruel life. But, on the other hand, no service is so barren, no sermon so dull, no chapel so simple, but that he who comes to it with sincere sorrow for his sins, and earnest desire for help and strength to live the life of love strenuously and courageously, will find God and His spirit of love, and go away strengthened and encouraged, uplifted and inspired

I have said that, unless we hear and obey that voice in our secular pursuits, we shall never hear it in the church. The inverse of that statement is almost equally true. Unless we cultivate in church, in private and public worship, a sensitiveness to that Voice of God as, apart from the roar and confusion of details, He speaks directly and clearly to our hearts, we shall lose the power to hear it and obey in the close contact of our homes, the whirl of society, the stress of work, and the excitement of play. We all need to hear that Voice at all times and everywhere. To drive Him away at one point is to lose Him altogether. It is the Voice of universal good will. In the words once more of the modern poet's version of our text, He is ever saying to us:

"Ah, fondest, blindest, weakest,
I am He whom thou seekest!
Thou dravest love from thee who dravest Me."

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

MRS. WILSON.

THE whole nation feels the peculiar pathos in the death of Mrs. Wilson. While the President is beset with the most trying situation any President has had to face in many years this blow falls with power enough to crush a weaker man. It is no fiction, as they know who have passed through such an experience, that divine grace is vouchsafed in more abundant measure to those on whose behalf the Church makes faithful prayer to God.

The American Church feels so intimately the vital relation sustained by the President and his family to its organic life that with one accord his affliction has drawn its members to the throne of grace with him. May these days bring to our Christian President the discovery of unsuspected sources of strength and wisdom and comfort!

Mrs. Wilson's presence at the center of our national life, though extending over a period of but a year and a half, has been most wholesome and gracious. In the breadth of her interests, all of which anchored her yet more firmly to the simplicities and fundamentals of the home relation, she personified the most chaste ideals of modern womanhood. Her artistic interests, her social activities, her democracy, her unaffected and natural carriage in the semi-official position in which the President's wife moves, all combined with her strong domestic qualities to create a public affection for her which was lacking only time to grow into enthusiastic expression.

She lent a subtle strength to her husband's policies of state. The nation was coming to feel that its President was not just an individual, but an individual plus a home—an ideal home where there was constant inter-action of highminded personalities stimulating one another to wisdom and service.

Her passing takes away the keystone of that beautiful domestic arch, and bereaves our President of his chief human source of inspiration. None but God can make it up to him.

A NEW THING AMONG DISCIPLES.

ABSOLUTELY no precedent exists among the Disciples of Christ for excommunicating a church from the fellowship of its sister churches. It is a procedure of which they have been the victims but never the perpetrators. The California convention has added a new page to our history. It reads much like certain pages at the beginning of the book where it is recorded that a certain church in Western Pennsylvania, together with its pastor, Rev. Thomas Campbell, suffered virtual excommunication at the hands of the Presbyterian denomination, and twenty years later where the story is told of the "reforming" churches being excommunicated by the Baptist denomination.

In those hours these excommunicated churches determined never to belong to a "denomination" that could do that thing. They pledged themselves then to a program of liberty, of congregational liberty within the circle of allegiance to Jesus Christ; and they have stood ever since for that liberty, and declared that so long as denominations organize themselves so as to enquire into and pass upon the orthodoxy of a church that acknowledges Christ as divine Lord, and to excommunicate a church judged to be irregular in its opinions or practices, the day of Christian unity could not dawn. To do that kind of thing, they said, is the essence of denominationalism, and their one great passion was to abandon the whole denominational scheme and principle and find their fellowship with all churches that were simply churches of Christ. A church that is really out of harmony with the essential gospel of Christ will "go to its own place," they said, without any ecclesiastical action by its sister churches.

But these California Disciples have gone back to the pit from which our people thought they had been digged. They assume that they constitute a denomination, impertinently named "The Christian Church of California," and incorporated as such, and they allege that a certain church—First, of Berkeley—has departed from "the historic position of the Christian Churches." For this offense they refuse to allow said church to have fellowship in their denomination until it shall publicly return to the "historic position" of their denomination!

Let it be assumed that Berkeley church and her pastor, Rev. Mr. Loken, are doing wrong in receiving into their fellowship those whom Christ has received into his Church, without discrimination against any—a pretty difficult assumption for a Christian imagination to tolerate, even for argument's sake—still it remains true that the California convention violated the basic principle of the Disciples' reformation movement in arrogating to itself the power to pronounce judgment upon the congregation after the fashion obtaining in the denominational order.

Does anybody who knows the genius of the Disciples of Christ imagine that the sectarian action of this California "denomination" will stand?

"ECCLESIASTICISM" NOT SO BAD AFTER ALL!

GLEEFULLY the Christian Standard greets the news from the Pacific Coast. Its joyous approval of the action of the California convention betrays the utter insincerity of its vehement editorial opposition to a general delegate convention. The Standard has opposed such a convention on the ground that it constitutes an "ecclesiasticism" which cannot be trusted not to meddle with the liberty of the local churches in matters of doctrine and practice.

The California convention is strictly a delegate convention. It has done precisely and flagrantly the thing which the Standard direfully prophesies the General Convention will some day do, and yet the Standard now exhorts other conventions to go and do likewise!

It is a hazardous thing to make a guess as to what is going on in any editor's mind, but we feel pretty safe in saying that just at this precise moment the editorial-commercial brain that runs our Cincinnati contemporary is balancing various answers to this question: whether to keep right on opposing the delegate convention, or to accept it and USE it as a fine device for getting rid of the churches and the scholarly pastors and teachers who refuse to acknowledge the leadership of the Standard in our church life.

This suggests a plan to settle the contention over the General Convention, if indeed it has not been already settled. The Christian Century submits it to Messrs. Richardson and Medbury and Ainslie and Garrison and other leading advocates of the General Convention: Give assurances to Cincinnati that the Atlanta convention will refuse to seat delegates from First Church, Berkeley, Calif., and from other churches now practicing Christian union, and the Standard will drop its warfare on the delegate convention for good and all.

LET THE LEADER DEFINE HIS POSITION.

HAVING taken the leadership in inducing the Northern California state convention to excommunicate the Berkeley Church, Rev. A. C. Smither, of St. Louis, Mo., will probably consent to explain the terms of the resolution which he defended in a speech on the floor of the convention and in an article in the Christian Evangelist. The resolution explicitly declares two things: first, that the Berkeley church is no longer a member of "the corporation known as the Christian Church of California," and secondly, that it is in fact not "a Christian Church" at all. We believe the brotherhood will wish Mr. Smither to further define his views and we submit the following suggestive questions.

1. Does Mr. Smither believe that "the corporation known as the Christian Church of California" is IN ANY SENSE the Christian Church of California?

2. Does Mr. Smither wish to be understood as seriously and deliberately affirming that the Berkeley church is not any longer a Christian church? Will he explain why it is not a Christian church?

3. Does the practice of open fellowship with other Christians forfeit a church's right to be called a Christian church? If so, why?

4. Or, does Mr. Smither deny that Presbyterians and Methodists and other unimmersed evangelical Protestants are Christians—just as truly Christians as he is himself a Christian? Or is Mr. Smither a better Christian, or more of a Christian, or in any sense superior as a Christian, to the Presbyterians and others whom the Berkeley church declines to bar from its fellowship?

5. Are not these Presbyterian and other churches churches of Christ, as truly churches of Christ as the church in St. Louis to which Mr. Smither belongs is a church of Christ? If they are churches of Christ, how can another church of Christ refuse to accept their members without being guilty of practicing schism in the Body of Christ? Does not the refusal to receive them constitute a sectarian act? And does not the settled policy of a group of churches that refuses to receive them constitute such group of churches a sect?

6. By what right may the Disciples of Christ disclaim being a sect if the basis of fellowship in their churches is narrower than the basis of fellowship in the Church of Christ?

In good faith these questions are asked. An answer in like good faith will help to clear the air.

EDUCATION AND CHARACTER.

AT this time of year thousands of homes are busy in preparation for the sending of son or daughter away to school. Many homes are eagerly considering the question, to what school the boy or girl shall be sent. There is one consideration, often completely ignored, and still more frequently treated as of minor importance, the foremost importance of the development of character as an element in education.

Not only is this a matter of the foremost importance; compared with it everything else is unimportant.

The question whether the water supply of the school is contaminated with the germs of typhoid fever is less important than the question whether the school holds as its highest prerogative and duty the development of character.

What boys and girls learn out of books is a small part of education. It is not quite a negligible part, but it is distinctly a minor one. Whether the young person has four years of Greek and three of Latin, and two of Algebra and three of Geometry, or vice versa, is a question of detail hardly worth a second thought. Most of it will be forgotten, and ought to be forgotten. It is not learned to be remembered. But what impressions are made on plastic character that are to shape the life through all the years of manhood or womanhood, that is the supremely important question.

Choose schools that afford good instruction in such things as are printed in books. That is worth doing.

Choose schools with well known instructors and a good curriculum. That is something worth thinking of.

Choose schools in good climate and with wholesome surroundings. That is worth considering.

Choose schools with men and women of character and Christian worth to guide and train the boys and girls. That is more important than all else beside.

Choose schools that create character. That is the supremely important consideration.

"OUTSIDE THE DISCIPLES."

EVERY reader will be interested in the peculiarly significant account of the Federated Church given by Rev. William J. Lockhart on another page of The Christian Century. Here is an earnest attempt to really practice Christian unity, to demonstrate that we Christians are one already, regardless of our peculiar creeds, or modes of baptism or traditional prejudices. Mr. Lockhart is one of the best known and most favorably regarded of our Disciple evangelists. He has been especially effective in pleading for a Disciple evangelism suitable for leadership in union interdenominational meetings and has been found again and again at the helm conducting such meetings. The Urbandale church in Des Moines is but a further expression of the passion of his heart to lead his brethren to make some definite contribution to the cause of Christian unity.

There is an element of pathos in the Urbandale enterprise, not brought out in Mr. Lockhart's story, but suggested in a personal letter in which he says that this "is not a movement of the Disciples of Christ except as the leader of the movement received his inspiration from the genius of the Disciples' principles. Our plan is not open to the attack that has been made upon the Berkeley church, because this is a movement outside of the ranks of the Disciples."

The cumbersome device of a double-membership is admittedly adopted for the purpose of avoiding opposition on the part of those who do not believe it is the Disciples' essential business to practice Christian union. This device is probably intended to make the transition easy and will, no doubt, eventually, if not soon, fall away.

What Mr. Lockhart is here aiming at is precisely what Thomas Campbell aimed at. It is the thing the Disciples were born to accomplish—albeit without the hindrance of the awkward devices which the hardness of Christian hearts has seemed in this case to render necessary.

That the leader in such a work, himself a life-time Disciple, and an evangelist of power, should be compelled, consciously and purposely, to place his enterprise "outside the Disciples" in order to inhibit the criticism and attack of his Disciple brethren, is one of the saddest commentaries we have seen on the distance the Disciples of Christ have wandered from their original ideals.

GOOD HEALTH IN SUMMER.

IF YOU want to keep well in summer, live simply, temperately and righteously. Do not eat enormous amounts of heat-producing foods, nor consume great quantities of ice. Be sweetly reasonable and keep well. The health department of Buffalo has issued the following excellent suggestions, good all the year round:

Prevention saves many lives, but will eventually put many good doctors out of business.

Drinking good water neither makes a man sick, nor in debt, nor his wife a widow.

Money is the most envied and the least enjoyed; health is the most enjoyed and the least envied.

Joy, temperance and repose slam the door on the doctor's nose.

Give sanitation the first place in your selection of a picnic place.

Let no summer outing become the cause of your winter illness.

A once a year clean-up is about as good as once a year bath.

Every day in the year should be clean-up day.

Germs of tuberculosis have a good shelter in decayed teeth. Repair the teeth and remove the shelter.

A decline in infant mortality is the result of proper education.

A properly muzzled dog can't bite.

Hydrophobia and stray dogs are a bad combination.

Keep your ears open and your mouth shut.

The laymen of today who is ignorant in the theories of prevention must be a clam.

Many serious lung troubles follow neglected colds.

When in doubt boil your drinking water.

Avoid public drinking cups.

Dirty hands are preferable to the public roller towel.

Wash your hands before handling food.

Treat your body to an occasional bath; it may not be entitled to it, but it will repay you with better service.

Assembly for Chinese Presbyterians.

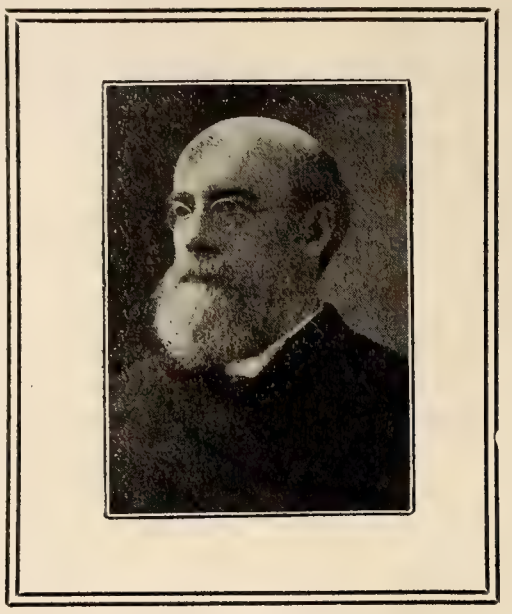
The Presbyterian Brotherhood is to be congratulated on the rapid development of its work in China. Report brings the news that the time is at hand when the Presbyterians of that country, now numbering over 60,000, will be bound together in a General Assembly which will represent the nineteen presbyteries and six synods which are organized in that country and which are the outgrowth of mission work conducted by the Presbyterian churches of the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, and Canada. This united General Assembly will be the outcome of the Federal Council of Presbyterian Churches in that country which has been in existence for seven years. The movement toward such a union of all Presbyterians in China in one General Assembly has been making steady progress since 1890, when a group of Presbyterians meeting in Shanghai expressed a desire for closer relations.

Christian Colleges to Form Association.

Steps have been taken for the organization of an Association of Christian Colleges—that is, of colleges controlled by or in close affiliation with evangelical Protestant church of the United States. The Presbyterians seem to have led in this important movement. For several years the Presbyterian College Union has urged the importance of such an association, and last December appointed a committee to take steps to effect the organization. The subject was considered by the council of church boards of education in January. The executive committee of this council recently met with a number of representative college presidents at St. Paul, and appointed a committee to prepare a tentative constitution and by-laws and to arrange for a permanent organization in Chicago in January, 1915. The organization will be perfected in connection with an educational congress to be held in Chicago the same month. The council of church boards of education will hold its annual session at this time, and the conference of church workers in state universities will also meet at the same time and place. The three organizations will hold separate sessions, but arrangements will be made for joint meetings. The association of Christian Colleges is expected to be permanent. Efforts will be made to have representative college presidents from all the leading religious bodies in attendance at this congress.

More About Dr. Mathews' Tour.

Further information comes of the tour of the Orient which will be made by Dr. Shailer Mathews next winter. Dr. Mathews will visit Japan as ambassador of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, of which he is president. The plan involves a formal representative mission, the first of its kind ever undertaken between the United States and any of the countries where missionary work has been done. Individual church bodies have, of course, had their representatives visit the work of their missions, but the present proposal is that a representative of the federated Protestantism of America go to represent the entire group of co-operating organizations, thirty in number, representing a church membership of approximately 16,000,000 people. On the part of Japan there is involved the action of the Federation of Japanese Churches, and arrangements will be made there for the conduct of work on Japanese soil. The plan proposes a series of addresses at the chief centers of Christian activity in Japan, including the universities. The general purpose of these addresses will be to give to the Japanese Christians an idea of Christianity in America, particularly along undenominational lines with reference to the development of Christian scholarship and social service. It is also intended to give the Japanese an impression as to the general attitude of American Christians toward Japan as a nation, thus reciprocating the work which is now being done by representatives of Christian churches of Japan in America at the present time. The carrying out of the plan is thought to be of great importance from the point of view not only of church but of international fellowship.



Rev. Washington Gladden, who is reported to be "out in opposition to nation-wide prohibition."

Y. M. C. A. Holds Boys' Conference.

Of great significance was the recent Annual Boys' Conference held at Saginaw, Mich., under the direction largely of the Young Men's Christian Association, but with the aid also of the Sunday-school and other organizations. For three full days the association brought together representatives of Michigan's boys' associations. The real purpose of the gathering, reports the Congregationalist, is to inspire boys and young men with higher ideals, to aid them in reaching a better life and induce them to accept Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour. The last night of the great Saginaw conference in 1913 hundreds of delegates made the "forward step" decision to become better Christians and signed cards pledging themselves to this end. Following the conference the delegates returned to their homes with the spirit of service burning within them. They held meetings in every city and rural community where they could get a church. The boys themselves conducted these meetings, offered the opening prayer, introduced the speakers and carried on the business of the meeting without the least aid from adults. As a direct result of these meetings, hundreds of boys in the state of Michigan became Christians and entered actively into the work of influencing other boys. In the fourteen counties of Michigan in which organized county work is being carried on by the Y. M. C. A., there were 2,053 boys enrolled in Bible classes.

Gideons Meet in Boston.

Boston enjoyed the convention of the "Knights of the Grip" held in that town recently. Tremont Temple gave royal welcome to these thousands of Christian traveling men. Sunday was the great day of the feast. After morning prayer and consecration service the Gideons flocked to the churches. In many a pulpit of Greater Boston the voice of the commercial traveler was heard on Sunday morning. At two in the afternoon hotel lobby meetings were held again. At three o'clock a special gospel service took place in Lorimer Hall. At half-past four a great Bible demonstration occurred, when more than 8,000 Bibles were placed in Boston hotels which had not previously had them. At five o'clock a gospel meeting was held on Boston Common. At half-past six the Gideons led young people's meetings in various churches, and at seven a gospel song service took place in Tremont Temple, followed at half-past seven, by an address by Rev. Dr. R. S. MacArthur on "The Gideons as Soldiers for Christ and the Church," and the introduction of the new international officers.

Methodists Find Business Good.

The Methodist Book Concern has no fault to find with business conditions. The profits were sufficient to enable the Methodists to turn over $300,000 for the care of aged ministers and their dependent families. During the past quadrennium the book concern had a business of nearly $11,000,000. Many books are published, but the most important work of the publishing department has to do with Sunday-school literature. The Methodist Sunday-school enrollment reaches beyond 4,000,000.

Fraternity Sunday, Sept. 6.

Twenty-two specific subjects are suggested for use on Fraternity Sunday, September 6, 1914, which has been suggested for celebration by the Chicago Church Federation Council. Church Honors J. P. Morgan.

Rather an unusual kind of memorial is that made to J. Pierpont Morgan by an Italian congregation of a Jersey City church—the Church of our Lady of Mount Carmela. This church subscribed $1,500 for the purchase of a candle to burn in memory of Mr. Morgan as a token of their appreciation of his many charities in Italy. It is soon to be placed in the Vatican at Rome and will be lighted only on All Souls' Day. At this rate it will endure for thousands of years, for if burned continuously it would last at least nine years. It took four and a half months to make; it stands sixteen feet high and weighs 400 pounds, tapering gradually from 18 inches at the base to 6 inches at the top, and is made from white beeswax imported from Italy for the purpose. It is beautifully ornamented in high relief, the modeling being heavily laid with gold leaf valued at more than $300. The portrait of Mr. Morgan and his favorite flowers, American beauty roses, are done in oil by the artist Paulo Restivo, who has specialized in this department of art.

Methodists Strong in Germany.

In Germany, where there are now two Methodist conferences, the growth of the Methodist fellowship is notably large. In 1886, when the German and Swiss conferences were separated, the total of probationers and full members in Switzerland was 5,299; in South Germany 4,993; in North Germany, 3,863; a total of 14,155. Seven years later the total for the same territory had risen to 18,360. And now, in 1913, the membership in Switzerland was 10,190; South Germany, 13,497; and in North Germany, 14,396, a total of 38,083. There are more than four thousand members of the Epworth League in the North Germany conference alone, and the Sunday-school enrollment in the same conference is 12,123.

Death of Methodist Leader.

Milton S. Terry, who recently passed away, in Evanston, Ill., was one of the respected scholars of the Methodist church. Mr. Terry was a pastor in early life, but became a professor of Old Testament language at Garrett Biblical Institute, in Evanston in 1885; he later held the chair of Christian doctrine. He was a member of the American Oriental Society, and of the Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis, and wrote many books of a theological character.

The Bible and the Public Schools.

Henry F. Cope, secretary of the Religious Education Association, is not an advocate of the giving of Bible instruction in the public schools. Addressing the recent session of the National Education Association, at St. Paul, Dr. Cope said that the demand for religious education in the public schools rested on three misapprehensions: First, that the state can teach religion; second, that religion can be taught like mathematics or geography; third, that the teaching of religion in the public schools would effect any great change for the better.

Americans Lead Catholics in Missions.

The Catholics of the United States are advancing to first place in support of Catholic missions of the world, according to figures quoted in the Central Christian Advocate. They are supplanting France in that respect. Ten years ago Catholics of France gave $815,000; five years ago $675,000, and last year, according to reports just made public $500,000. Ten years ago Catholics of the United States gave $45,000 a year, and last year, according to the same report, $440,000. The great givers to Catholic world missions are among American dioceses, New York with gifts last year amounting to $157,000; Boston, $57,000; Philadelphia, $53,000; Cleveland, $7,800, and Baltimore, $7,100. Not a city in Catholic countries like Austria, Italy, Belgium and Spain, declares the "Freeman's Journal," comes anywhere near the gifts of these generous Catholic American cities. St. Louis far outranks Rome; Minneapolis outranks Vienna, New Orleans gives more than London, and Pittsburgh Catholics give more than do those of Liverpool.

FEDERATION IN THIS NATICN.

Let's congregate and federate,
All creeds sedate annihilate,
And truth misstate to propagate
A concord great, inviolate.
From your belief seek quick relief.
Of all things chief, the olive leaf
Presents a brief for all the grief
Of misbelief on life's lone reef.
Don't sit and sigh, but do and die,
And rend the sky with battle-cry,
Smite hip and thigh the reason why!
The cause is high; don't argufy.
Judgment berate. Error placate.
Faith extirpate. Invalidate
Your mental state. Without debate,
Let's congregate and federate.

Evangelistic Results in New York.

The Evangelistic Committee of New York City, an interdenominational organization, last summer carried the gospel to 680,345 persons, who attended its open-air tent and shop meetings. It is planning to reach 1,250,000 this summer and will do this work at a cost of about $40,000.

Church Figures from Canada.

According to the latest church census of Canada, the Roman Catholic population numbers 2,833,041; the Presbyterian, 1,115,324; the Methodist, 1,079,892; the Church of England, 1,043,017.

A New Methodist University in the South.

In view of the fact that the Methodists of the South were by a recent court decision divested of any real property control over the Vanderbilt University at Nashville, the recent General Conference authorized the establishment of a new Methodist university for which a fund of $5,000,000 is to be raised. Atlanta has been chosen as the site.

Cleveland Plans Evangelistic Campaign.

The two hundred Churches of the Federal Council of Churches in Cleveland are planning simultaneous rally Sunday for October 4, to be followed by a month of evangelistic service, the various neighborhoods of the city being taken as the unit of organized and co-operative effort.

Dr. Hirsch in Germany.

Professor Emil G. Hirsch, of the Department of Semitics in the University of Chicago was one of three delegates from Chicago to the Church Peace Conference which met at Constance, Germany, August 2-5. Over fifty American delegates attended the conference, which was held under the auspices of the American Peace Society.

"Good Citizenship Day," October 18.

Good Citizenship Day will be observed, if the suggestion of the Society of Christian Endeavor is adopted, on Sunday, October 18. It is urged that special effort be made to secure exceptional attendance at services and that the sermons and addresses have to do with the moral obligations of citizenship, commendation being given to those causes which are promoting reform and enlightenment.

Dr. Forbush at University of Chicago.

Dr. William Byron Forbush, president of the American Institute of Child Life, Philadelphia, was the university preacher at the University of Chicago on August 2, and on August 9 Professor Gerald Birney Smith, of the Department of Systematic Theology, was the speaker. The convocation preacher, August 23, will be Dr. James Hope Moulton, of the University of Manchester.

Death of Dr. Jesse Bowman Young.

The death is reported of Dr. Jesse Bowman Young, Methodist pastor and author. For two score years Doctor Young was a contributor to Methodist church and Sunday-school literature, as well as to undenominational papers.

Yuan-Shi-kai's "Confession of Faith."

Secretary L. Wilbur Messer, of the Chicago Young Men's Christian Association, brought back this "confession of faith" from Yuan-Shi-kai, President of the Chinese Republic: "I am unequivocally a Confucianist, yet I know that nothing but Christian ethics can save China."

Chicago Endeavor Year Book Out.

The year book of the Chicago Christian Endeavor Union will be studied with special care by Endeavorers everywhere on account of the meeting of the world's Christian Endeavor convention in Chicago next year. The book recounts in compact compass the specific activity of the many Endeavor organizations in Chicago and vicinity. The efforts of the individual societies and of various county and city organizations will be suggestive to other Endeavorers.

A False Step.

The Roman Catholic archbishop of St. Louis, in speaking before the Catholic conference on charities in that city last month, is reported to have demanded that the municipality of St. Louis should appropriate money to support Roman Catholic charitable institutions.

Spiritual Movement Stirs Scotland.

Following the reports of the great revival in Scotland during the past winter comes the report that in that country is growing a host of young men committed passionately to the great essentials of evangelical Christianity. It is believed by some that a movement has begun in the Scottish churches as powerful in its purposes as the Oxford movement was in the Church of England in the middle of the nineteenth century. While the Oxford movement gave an impetus to formalism and sectarianism this new Scottish movement is touching only the great universal elements of Christianity.

Of Human Interest

Our Poor Human Nature.

George A. Dorsey, Curator of Ethnology, Field Museum, Chicago, does not have much faith in humanity. In one of the articles he is writing daily for the Chicago Herald, he sets forth the statement that human nature is, after all, brutish and hungers for war and blood. Here is what he says:

"Do you and I want war? Do we want to be long distance participants in what might prove the most hellish war the world has ever seen? Oh! I know what we will say to this question, but will we be honest? We spurn with indignation the mere suggestion that we, you and I, want this war to take place.

"And yet, as the catastrophe approaches hour by hour, we get more and more excited, our pulse beats faster, our breath grows shorter, our eyes brighten, and at last we are glutting to the utmost our fundamental savage, brutish nature to participate by the vicarious route our lust for blood and death. And this is one of the causes of war.

"All say: 'War is hell; let there be no more of it.' All say it because it is the fashion nowadays; it is good form to say it. Belonging to Christian nations, we are conscious of a sense of duty in assuming that attitude. But I repeat: deep within us is fundamental human nature as real, as brutish today as ever before—only now it is buried up deeper beneath the accumulated lacquer of centuries of so-called civilization.

"It is rather more difficult these days for elemental traits to break through than it was formerly. But not an hour of the day passes in Chicago or London or Berlin or Pipetown that doesn't furnish proof that life is still a contest, fundamentally the same as ever, the essential difference being in terminology and in rules.

"How otherwise can we explain this thing that approaches like a car of Juggernaut, which men go out to meet, protesting the while, saying they do not want to be crushed, explaining they don't want to see their fellowmen perish; and yet, in person or vicariously to a waving of flags and marshal music, and in brilliant garb, and even singing, they go out to meet the Destroyer more than half way?"

Jacob Riis's Turning Point.

In a Methodist revival in the old eighteenth Street church, Brooklyn, under the preaching of Rev. Ichabod Simmons, Jacob Riis underwent a genuine conversion and dedicated his life to Christian service, notes the Christian Advocate. It was his desire immediately to give up his newspaper work and take to preaching, but the faithful minister strongly advised against it. "No, no, Jacob," he said, "not that. We have preachers enough. What the world needs is consecrated pens." "Then and there I consecrated mine," said Riis. "I wish I could honestly say that it has always come up to the high ideal set it then. I can say, though, that it has ever striven toward it, and that scarcely a day has passed since that I have not thought of the charge then laid upon it and upon me." Without this spiritual passion the philanthropic inclinations of Riis would not have developed into the practical work he accomplished. Endowed by nature with an intensely earnest spirit, and with a perseverance that knew no bounds, he would still have been unable to sustain his enthusiasm without a profound religious motive.

Three Great Laughers.

James Russell Lowell is said to have been of a very fun-loving disposition. Light-hearted jest and nonsense were sprinkled plentifully through the long life which was so filled with solid, hard work and achievement, says a writer in the Christian Endeavor World. One day when walking with a friend they passed a large building over the door of which was written: "Home for Incurable Children." "Ah," said Lowell, with a shake of his head, "that is where I shall have to be sent one day."

Everybody knows of the immense labors of David Livingstone in the inhospitable part of Africa, and of the devotion of his noble wife. Does everybody know that in the midst of their lonely life they were often much of the time as jolly as a pair of school-boys off on a holiday? To such an extent did the spirit of mirth preside over their counsels and undertakings that sometimes Mr. Livingstone would say to his wife: "Really, my dear, we ought not to indulge in so many jokes. We are getting too old; it is not becoming. We must be more staid in our demeanor."

Charles Kingsley was always bent on introducing as much frolic and merry-making into his family life as possible. He was proud to be able to say: "I sometimes wonder whether there is as much laughing done in any home in England as at our parsonage."

Emerson as a Vocalist.

As a student at Harvard, Ralph Waldo Emerson did not give much promise of his future greatness. His dissertation was spoken of as "a very good one, but too long to give much pleasure to the hearers." He was class poet, but only after seven others had been successively elected, and had successively declined the honor. A story told by Mr. Arthur Stanwood Pier, in "The Story of Harvard," goes to show that Emerson's musical efforts were even less appreciated.

Singing in the yard was a popular diversion, and early in his freshman year, Emerson, wishing to have a share in the fun, went to the singing master, who said to him, "Chord."

"So I made some kind of a noise," said Emerson, "and the singing master said, 'That will do, sir; you need not come again.'"

Two Holmes Puns.

"Here are two little-known puns of Oliver Wendell Holmes, reported by the Christian World. 'The young lady is in evening dress,' said a friend, one evening, referring to a rather overdressed damsel. 'The close of the day, my dear sir,' remarked the witty doctor. 'That is Holmes pun,' retorted the friend. 'I'm worsted,' rejoined the doctor."

A Terrible Disease!

Mrs. Crockett and her daughter stood before a painting which represented a soldier with hollow cheeks and staring eyes. On the gilded plate in the frame were the words, "After the Attack of Lutzen." "What is 'Lutzen,' Mary Anne?" asked Mrs. Crockett in a hoarse whisper. Mary Anne admitted that she did not know. "Well, anyway," said Mrs. Crockett, with conviction, "it's a terrible disease. I can see that easy enough without anybody telling me."

Uncle Joe on Socialists.

"Uncle Joe" Cannon, chewing a long cigar vigorously, said in Danville:

"These young Socialists and anarchists and what not want to run the world. And a pretty mess they'd make of it, with their 'hunger strikes' and 'silence patrols' and what-not. Why, they've got no experience."

Uncle Joe smiled a grim smile.

"We used to say that you were never too old to learn," he grumbled. "Nowadays the idea seems to be that you're never too young to teach."

ABOUT PREACHERS AND OTHERS.

Revised Scripture for Summer Use.

A Methodist minister feeling the stress of summer weather, has put out on his weekly leaflet the following:

"Warrant for closing churches in summer:

"I will come into thy house in the multitude of Thy mercy— except in summer.

"The Lord is in his holy temple—except in summer.

"How amiable are Thy tabernacles—except in summer.

"My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of the Lord— except in summer.

"God is known in His palaces as a refuge—except in summer.

"Preach the word. Be instant in season and out of season—except in summer.

"Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together—except in summer.

"They continued steadfastly in the Apostle's doctrine and fellowship and breaking of bread and prayers—except in summer."

Why They Resigned.

"Say, Parson," said Elder Berry at the church board meeting, "here are the resignations of all the quartet choir." "My son," said Rev. Fourthly, in distress "what is the trouble?" "Your announcement Sunday morning," replied Elder Berry, sternly; "you know you said, 'Providence having seen fit to afflict all our choir with bad colds, let us all join in singing, "Praise God from whom all blessings Flow."

His Helpful Sermons.

"When I can't sleep at night," said she, "I say to my husband, 'Oh, read me one of my dear minister's sermons!' And he has not read five minutes when I am sound asleep!" The "dear minister" said, of course, that he was delighted to hear it; although it was not wholly for that purpose the sermons were published.

About "New Religions."

A minister who was going abroad said in jest that when he came back he might bring a new religion with him. A person who was present said, "You may have some difficulty in getting it through the custom house." "No," said Dr. Brooks, "we may take it for granted that a new religion will have no duties attached."

Explaining The Jonah Story.

The late Bishop Phillips Brooks had a version of the "Jonah" narrative, essentially his own. When some one was expressing wonder at the possibility of Jonah being swallowed by the whale, he said, "There was no difficulty about that, for Jonah was one of the Minor Prophets."

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

Ellen Louise Axsen Wilson

The death of Mrs. Wilson comes at a peculiarly difficult time, from the viewpoint of the President. Touching beyond measure was the report that our President penned his offer of mediation to the warring European nations while sitting by the bed of his dying wife. A writer in the Chicago Herald has put into vivid language the story of the life and death of this remarkable woman. It is too good not to be given to readers of The Christian Century, hence we reproduce here.—THE EDITOR.

SHUT the door softly, for the first lady of the land is sleeping.

They have regarded her with tears, those who loved her so, and for the first time she has not heard her husband call or answered her children in that soft, low voice of hers.

The blinds are drawn in the great White House at Washington. It was not so that Ellen Louise Axsen, wife of President Woodrow Wilson, would have chosen to pass out to the larger life. Her days were spent in building an altar, and her husband called it simply "home." From that hearth fire, its warmth still surrounding her, her spirit suddenly took flight.

The glow is left for all the world to see.

From Georgia she came nine and twenty years ago, the bride of a young college professor, with all a southern woman's sweetness and ideals, the sweetness that led a stranger to call Southern women "God's agents on earth," and with a wit that won friends everywhere.

Her smile was magic; it was the arch, sweet gayety of the days of our grandmothers, and it was welded to the thoughtful dignity, the broad common sense that has made the home of the Woodrow Wilsons a beacon light since first it was thrown on the screen of publicity.

Mrs. Wilson was an artist. Her pictures were not merely good, they were powerful. Painting was a passion with her, but for many years after her marriage she did not touch a brush, for she was an artist in the greater sense—an artist-wife, an artist-mother.

"A wife," she said once to a friend, "should keep part of her life quite free."

And then came the story of how Governor Wilson—this was shortly before presidential days—had returned from an arduous campaign to find her absent.

"I had told him I was going to attend a certain committee meeting," she said, "but he had forgotten. He came into the 'little White House' at Sea Girt, N. J., saying 'Where is mother?' When he found I was not there he felt quite lost, he told me."

There was regret and pride in the voice of the first lady of the land as she told that story. Its human note is almost too much for us now, for a President is bereft of his helper, a worker of a comrade, a husband of his wife and a harassed, weary man of her whom he called "my rest."

No more fitting epitaph than those two words can be found.

There is a picture, too, of a young mother with three little girls that the daughters of the White House must recall vividly today, with a pride and a pain no words can tell. It is of "mother" who taught them for years, who told them stories, who sang and read them to sleep, who even made their little frocks, and from whom no word that was not courteous and kind was ever heard, while laughter rang out every moment, spontaneous and free as their own. The echo of that laughter still rings on, for it was never malicious, never forced.

To be the wife of a college professor, the wife of the head of Princeton University, the wife of Governor Wilson and the President's wife and never to fall down through those twenty-nine years from the pedestal on which her own actions had set her took no uncommon talents of mind and heart.

In addition to that, to be the mother of three daughters as different in temperament as though they had been no relation—the very modern daughters of an old-fashioned woman—took patience and courage and broad-mindedness of an unusual degree. But all these things the daughter of old Doctor Axsen, a Presbyterian minister, accomplished without apparent effort.

Her brown eyes were clear to the last, her brown hair waved as daintily above her wild-rose cheeks, her voice was as gentle as if the strain of life had passed her by on the other side. Death had no creases to smooth away from her brow, and it is sleeping we leave her, for one so joyously alive, so nobly good, is never dead.

* * * *

Just before the presidential election a newspaper woman went to the home at Sea Girt to interview the wife of the future President. This reporter thus tells the story of her conversation with Mrs. Wilson:

"They wonder at Mr. Wilson's lack of excitement over the victory," the President's wife said—Mr. Wilson had just been nominated at Baltimore for the presidency—"they cannot know that however the decision went it could be only good-bad or bad-good to us. If Mr. Wilson got the nomination it meant the breaking up of our close home life together——"

Ah, me! She had the face of a Madonna and a voice like rippling waters and her smile went everywhere.

"If he did not get it we still had the best of life's gifts left—our home."

"And now——"

"Now I shall lose much of my husband, but I try to give him gladly to his country."

"You have shared this campaign together?"

"Every minute of it. I have kept the clipping bureau, cutting out the articles he ought to see and filing what he might want, so that he could get it at a minute's notice."

Then I saw for all her brave smiling that she looked tired. Perhaps those cheeks were a little too pink!

"At every moment of his career I have known every move beforehand and approved. They say now that if Mr. Wilson should come to me as President and tell me he was going to lay down the office on a question of principle, I would meet the situation with a smile and a quotation from Browning. My belief in him and my encouragement—he never tires of telling me that they have carried him through his darkest hours."

"Spirituality," "moral strength" and words of that sort came constantly to her lips.

A fine copy of a Bouveret "Madonna" that hung over the fireplace of the reception hall called forth my comment.

"I copied that one midsummer like this not very long ago," she answered. "For ten years after my marriage I did not touch a brush, though I was a painter before. I recognized that a woman cannot have two great passions. My husband and my children came first.

"The children were all born at the same time," she said, humorously. "I taught them at home until they were 12. fed them on Greek classics and read them to sleep with standard poets. Sometimes I tell them they never read trash until they went to college.

"I have been a happy woman. Mr. Wilson's profession of teaching permitted us to be together a great deal. and then I was blessed that his work did not lie in a field I could not follow, say, higher mathematics. Jurisprudence and political economy are subjects in which any woman ought to be interested. They even make good dinner table topics. Everything has combined to make our lives twine together ideally. A husband should find in his wife an escape from his cares. I try always to keep reserves from which Mr. Wilson can draw when he needs them. He calls me 'his rest.'

"Others will have more of him now, but"—she smiled with proud serenity—"we've been so much to each other for so many years that nothing can change us now."

A door opened at the far side of the room and a man came out, a rugged, negligibly-tailored man with student stoop and gray penetrating eyes that took you in, sifted you and let you pass at a glance—Woodrow Wilson.

"Please give me back my wife," he said. "We always drive at 4 o'clock. It is our only time to be alone," and his large man's hand fell caressingly over her hand as it rested on the table.

* * * *

"Will you please give me back my wife?" The phrase is poignant at this crisis. Our President stands alone. facing the agony of loss. He is in darkness—he cannot see the light.

But there is a light, and it was kindled by his wife. When the eyes of the lonely husband can bear it he will look up, see that home-fire and warm his hands at the blaze.

In memory he will give thanks for "my rest," Ellen Louise Axsen Wilson.

LORD TENNYSON'S FAITH.

In the last year of Lord Tennyson's life, in his feeble health, he took short walks with his daughter. Afterward she became his biographer. The faithful daughter says that her father used often to say in these morning walks, "My chief desire is to get a fresh vision of God."

Disciples Table Talk

Iowa's State Convention.

The state convention of the Iowa Christian Missionary Society was held at Colfax, from July 13th to the 20th inclusive. While the local attendance was not so large as usual, owing to the location of the encampment grounds, the churches were well represented throughout the state. R. W. Lilly, of Keokuk, who was elected convention president last year, was unable to be present, and J. O. Boyd, a young lawyer, and superintendent of the Keokuk Sunday-school, took the chair. The leading feature of the week was the addresses of John L. Brandt, of St. Louis. The committee had secured him to give a series of sermons or lectures during the week. One night during the convention W. J. Lockhart was asked to call for pledges for the state work. Three thousand dollars was needed. The audience responded promptly and in a few minutes $3,129 had been pledged. This assures the success of the state work for the future. George E. Roberts was re-elected as corresponding secretary and Leon S. Dudley was re-elected as state Sunday-school superintendent. A new feature of the convention this year was that it was held on the encampment plan. In the years past, breakfast and lodging had been given free by the church entertaining and the convention. This time everyone paid his own expenses. Many of the delegates secured tents and camped on the grounds. It was voted unanimously to return to the same place next year.

Ft. Worth, First, to Have $125,000 Home.

For nearly half a century a landmark of Fort Worth, the First Christian church has stood forth in its usefulness. At last after months of discussion, the old-time church must fall. In its place will be built a modern edifice, one of the best houses of worship in Texas, at a cost of approximately $125,000. Realizing the imperative necessity of more room and better equipment for church work, the officers unanimously recommended and the congregation approved the raising of funds for a new church. This was done some time ago, but only recently has the date been set for the old edifice to fall. According to the pastor, L. D. Anderson, the tearing down of the building will start before another month passes and as soon as this is done, the new church will be begun. Among the first ministers of the church were: Rev. B. F. Hall, Dr. Joseph Clark, Elders Caskey, Johnson, Murphy, McKnight and Dr. Lowber. Since the pastorate of the present pastor, Mr. Anderson, the church membership has increased many members. Its present enrollment is almost 700 and it has a Sunday-school enrollment of about 400.

Chicago Pastor Completes Fifth Year.

Very few pastors are given the privilege of work in such a fruitful field as that in which Austin Hunter has been ministering the past five years. He has just celebrated the completion of his fifth year with the Jackson Boulevard Church, Chicago. Seven hundred and forty-eight people have been added to the church during this time, almost all at the regular services; 160 couples have been united in marriage, and 158 funeral services conducted. A seven thousand dollar mortgage on the property has been paid off, and a social center building purchased and paid for. The church has been made a living link in the C. W. B. M., and also conducts a Chinese mission each Sunday, which is the largest Chinese mission conducted by any Chicago church. This is a down-town work and suffers great losses by rapid removals to the suburbs, but there is no cessation in the fruitful activities that have characterized the church for many years. That Mr. Hunter continues with Jackson Boulevard is sufficient evidence of the satisfaction of the congregation with the work he is doing.

Kentucky Convention, Aug. 31-Sept. 3.

Kentucky Disciples will hold their convention this year at Ashland, Aug. 31-Sept. 3. Fite, Paducah, presiding. Wednesday, Sept. 2: C. W. B. M.—President Mrs. John Gay, presiding. Thursday, Sept. 3: Bible-school—President J. W. Hagin, Covington, presiding. Unity Spirit at Lockhart, Tex.

Dr. Albert Buxton, pastor at Lockhart, Texas, has been proving practicable the leadership of the two most widely different Protestant bodies in theoretical union. One Sunday, he took his congregation to the Episcopal church, and assisted the visiting bishop in the services. Later the rector preached in the Christian church, and then Dr. Buxton in the Episcopal church.

Paris, Ill., Church Has Big Day.

July 30 was a big day with the Christian Church in Paris. Paris has a Cradle Roll numbering almost 200. The occasion referred to was the annual baby party. It was the first time it has been celebrated and not all the youngsters could persuade their mothers to attend. But 65 of the babies were present with their mothers. These, together with the fifteen Cradle Roll visitors and a few others, made a party of 175. This will be one of the annual affairs but after this it will be held on Thursday afternoon before Mothers' Day.

Illinoisans and the Atlanta Convention.

All Disciples living in Central and Northern Illinois and Western Indiana, who contemplate attending the Atlanta Convention, should get in touch with J. A. Barnett, pastor Third Church, Danville, Ill., who will be glad to furnish information relative to the special train that will be run out of Danville over the Chicago and Eastern Illinois and the Louisville and Nashville Railways. The train will afford excellent accommodations and will stop over at Nashville.

W. F. Richardson as Chauffeur.

W. F. Richardson, pastor at First, Kansas City, Mo., motored his family to Chicago a few days ago, on their way to Pentwater, Mich., where they are spending the month of August.

W. A. Shullenberger Highly Honored.

The church at Trenton, Mo., has shown its appreciation of its pastor, W. A. Shullenberger, by raising his salary from $2,000 to $2,400, thus honoring itself as well as its leader. Mr. Shullenberger has recently received a call from four New York churches which have consolidated into one, but has elected to stay in Trenton.

How One Preacher Spent His Vacation.

E. T. McFarland, pastor at First, Lawrence, Kans., spent his two-weeks' vacation holding a meeting at Custer, Okla.

Dr. Combs on "The Preacher."

Dr. Geo. H. Combs said, in one of his addresses at the Southern California Convention: "The preacher must be no copyist, but imitate only his Divine Master. He must know no boss, either official board or ecclesiastical council."

M. L. Pontius Begins New Work Sept. 1.

M. L. Pontius closed his work at Peoria, Ill., July 31, and will begin his pastorate at Jacksonville Sept. 1. Mr. Pontius preached at Taylorville, Aug. 2, the pastor, George H. Brown, being absent on vacation. E. N. Miller, 2424 Main street, Peoria, is chairman of the pulpit supply committee, at Peoria.

More Excitement at Westville, Ill.

Citizens of Westville, Ill., are very much agitated over the unfavorable publicity given that town by the Patmont affair. A committee said to be representative of Westville has called a meeing to give Mr. Bickel, pastor of First Christian Church of Danville, an opportunity to present facts regarding Mr. Patmont. It is feared that Westville has lost its pristine "fair" reputation throug.. the recent entanglement in the Patmont case!

Success at Davenport, Ia.

During the two years' pastorate of J. T. Houser, of First Church, Davenport, Ia., there have been 328 new members added to the congregation, the present membership being 810. The church building has been remodeled at a cost of $32,000.

Men's Class in Rally.

The Brotherhood Class, at Central, Wichita, Kan., held a midsummer rally at the church recently. Congressman Neeley addressed the class. The Brotherhood Class is the largest adult class of the Disciples in Kansas. Hon. C. F. Matson is its president and Judge J. N. Haymaker, president of the National Brotherhood, teaches.

Central, Des Moines, Thrives Through Summer.

The summer program of Central Church, Des Moines, Finis Idleman, pastor, has been one of unabated interest. For the first time for a number of years this congregation has continued its own evening service. The down-town churches all have closed except Central. Audiences have been good notwithstanding the intense heat of successive Sundays Many additions are reported.

Jewett Family in Reunion.

The Annual Reunion of the Jewett Family of America, Inc., of which Geo. A. Jewett, of the Christian Leader, is president, was held in Buffalo, July 3, 1914. This was the first time the Reunion has been held anywhere else than at Rowley, Mass., some thirty miles north of Boston, a place where the Jewett family first settled when they came from England in 1638. The Buffalo papers were very liberal with their space, giving frequent mention of the reunion and giving a complete report of the proceedings. The Buffalo News, on Sunday, gave a full page with many illustrations, pictures of various officers, pictures of the old Jewett homestead in Massachusetts, cut of the coat of arms, etc. About seventy-five members of the family were in attendance.

An important event of the recent California Convention held at Long Beach, was the adoption of a resolution offered by the College Commissioners regarding the erection in Southern California of a Bible College of the Disciples. According to officials of the convention the idea of establishing the institution with a small endowment is rapidly growing in popular favor.

Church Has "House-Raising."

The members of Central Church, Shreveport, La., are not afraid of hard work, even in the summer time. On August 1, Claude L. Jones led his people out to the Forbing camp meeting grounds, eight miles from Shreveport, where they had an old-fashioned "house-raising." The material for the auditorium had been gathered together. A large crowd of men and women of the church, and friends, were present and no difficulty was found in putting through the work. A great camp meeting is being arranged for, to be held August 21, and continuing ten days.

E. R. Edwards Calls Christ Insurgent.

That Jesus Christ was the foremost insurgent of all times and that the results of his insurgency, although slow in being realized, have affected every social and political crisis from His day until the present time, was the declaration of E. R. Edwards, of Martinsville, Ind., in an address at Bethany Park a few days ago. Mr. Edwards spoke on "The Real Insurgent." He showed that insurgency, which he declared was only a synonym for progressiveness, was one of the oldest traits of humanity. He

Christian University's New President

A Man of Religion and Learning.

BY CARL JOHANN, PRESI DENT EMERITUS.

[The announcement of the election of Earle Marion Todd to the presidency of Christian University follows fast upon the news of the declination of Rev. O. F. Jordan of the same office as published in last week's Christian Century. Mr. Todd's qualities of mind and temper are so well

Rev. Earle M. Todd, Who Has Accepted the Presidency of Christian University.

set forth by his venerable predecessor in the following statement that we feel no further words are called for except approval of this appreciation—THE EDITOR.]

The trustees of Christian University have elected Earle M. Todd to succeed me as president, and he has accepted. I am glad to have such a successor. I know no man who is greater in his personal religion than he; his faith is strong, and his piety is deep and wholesome. His fervent religious nature is happily coupled with a love for learning that rises to a passion. He is scholarly in taste and a student by habit and for the love of knowledge. His is one of the deepest of natures and yet he is one of the most approachable of men; modest almost to diffidence he devotes himself with marked self-forgetfulness to the ministry of men. His father was a preacher and educator in the Christian Church before him. Brother Todd was born in Indiana, and is just in the prime of life. He has lived in several states in this country and was twelve years in England, seven of which were spent in London; his experience is cosmopolitan. He brings high culture and a rarely fine disposition and a tenderly sympathetic nature to the exacting and arduous task of a college president.

I have written thus at length that you may know some of the reasons why I am glad to have Brother Todd as my successor. I have given my life to Christian University, and here my strength was exhausted. My task was to make brick without much straw, and gather straw for my successors to make more and better brick. My soul has much satisfaction in seeing the endowment and equipment of the school greatly enlarged. I always did heavy classroom work, and the added strain of erecting new buildings was too much for my strength, so that a year and a half ago, the last day before Christmas, while conducting the worship in chapel, I was stricken with paralysis, and I have not been able to teach since that time; but the trustees wanted me to continue as president, with the assistance of the vice-president, Professor H. M. Garn. At the end of a year and a half Professor Garn wanted to be relieved of the work of acting president in order to give all his time to teaching; and we needed a strong and vigorous man for the rapidly growing interests of the school; so I resigned last spring and the trustees elected me president emeritus with a living salary for life. I shall still live for the school to which I have given my life and find my satisfaction and comfort in seeing it educate young men and women for Christian service in the world. A deep joy comes to me in being able to turn my work over to such worthy and strong hands, and I shall continue to help to the full extent of my strength.

Prayer For Peace Asked

An Appeal from the Federal Council of Churches of Christ.

New York, Aug. 6, 1914.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, through its administrative committee, begs leave to suggest that Christians join in earnest prayer to Almighty God, in view of the calamitous war in Europe, that He may guide the embattled nations to an early and lasting peace; that the sufferers, direct and indirect, by this gigantic conflict may have divine comfort and sustaining grace; that the churches in the hostile countries may in the emergency have strength, wisdom and guidance from above in fulfilling the sublime duties for which they were commissioned by the Master; and that Christians in our own beloved land may be ready for any sympathetic or helpful service to their Christian brethren abroad which Providence may indicate.

We urge that, in addition to prayers in public worship for the mercies and blessing of God, petitions in private be also offered, and that all local federations of churches hold meetings for prayer at noon every Tuesday. Such a service was held in the Bible House, New York, on Tuesday, August 4th, and it will be the first of a series of prayer-meetings.

Where there are no local federations, let the churches unite in providing for a half hour prayer service.

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES OF CHRIST,
By Henry K. Carroll, Associate Sec'y.

asserted that Moses was the first great insurgent and that Daniel, David, Elijah, Isaiah and all of the Hebrew prophets had fought against established wrongs. The insurgent activity, Mr. Edwards pointed out, of John the Baptist and the apostle Paul had been responsible to a great extent for the speedy success of Christ's work. The speaker interpreted insurgency as the spirit of democracy pleading on behalf of the people for a larger share of responsibility in the welfare of the government. Mr. Edwards said that insurgency had been responsible for all social, political, industrial and religious progress and that it has been behind every forward movement. The speaker defined the progressive as one who can not be stopped when he "once is started" and the "standpatter" as one who cannot be started when he is stopped. Mr. Edwards declared that the insurgent spirit of the present day was not confined alone to the political and the industrial world, but that religion was on the verge of a forward movement that would mark an epoch in Christianity. "Insurgents in the religious world insist that the people shall rule, rather than priests and creeds," said Mr. Edwards. "The impending forward movement of the church means the certain overthrow of ecclesiastics as the ruling power in the church and that life as it should be lived will be emphasized in place of the cumbersome and often filthy dogmas, doctrines and forms of the present-day church."

California Preacher Passes Away.

Following the injury that he received in a fall at his ranch near Fresno, Cal., recently, W. H. Martin, formerly pastor of First church, Fresno, was rushed to a sanitarium in that city and there died July 15. Mr. Martin was 70 years of age and was well known all over the state. Mr. Martin celebrated his seventieth birthday April 26. He was born in Harrodsburg, Mercer County, Kan., and received his early education in that section of the state, later graduating from Kentucky university. During the civil war he served with the Confederate side in the cavalry under John Morgan. After the war he went to Australia and was there for five years doing evangelistic work. Upon his return to the United States he came to California, reaching this state in 1878. He was pastor of the Christian church in Woodland for seven years, then he answered a call to Santa Rosa, and later came to Fresno. He occupied the pulpit at First church, Fresno, for twelve years. Later he went to Santa Barbara where he stayed for five years and then answered a call from Whittier. He accepted this work and was later appointed chaplain at the state school at Whittier. Two years ago Mr. Martin retired to a fruit farm near Fresno, but preached in nearby towns.

FOREIGN MISSION GAINS FOR JULY.

The receipts of the Foreign Society for the month of July amounted to $47,586, a gain over the corresponding month, 1913, of $9,564.

The churches, as churches, gave $9,495, a gain of $2,769. The Sunday-schools gave $29,696, an increase of $6,682. These are certainly good gains in the regular receipts for a hot and dry month.

The record for ten months of the current missionary year is as follows:

The total receipts amount to $274,777, a gain of $12,208. There has been a gain in eight months out of ten, a loss only two months during the year.

The churches, as churches, for the year have given $96,554, a gain of $8,534. We have only two more months. Let us express the sincere hope that the gain from the churches, as churches, will reach not less than $10,000 for the year. There has been a gain also of 83 contributing churches.

The Sunday schools have given $77,679, a loss of $2,088. Children's Day was one week later this year than last, which accounts for the loss. It will be more than made good by September 30, no doubt. Now let us make another good gain in August! Step by step we must move forward.

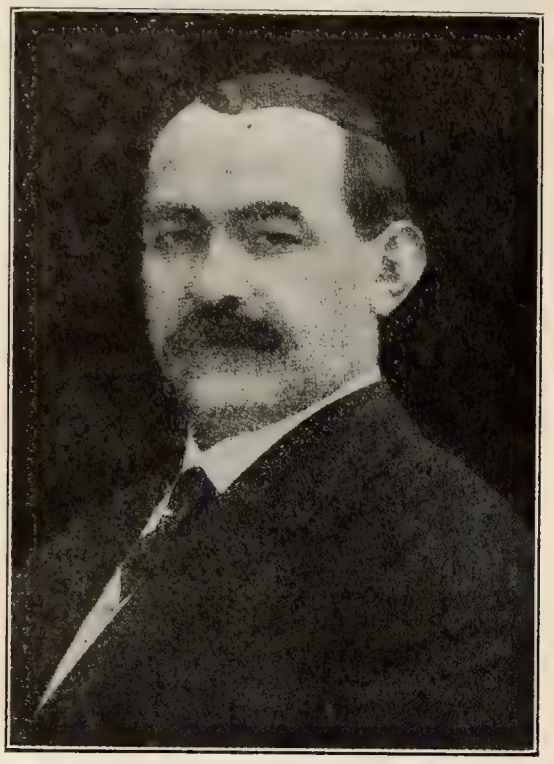
Many churches and Sunday-schools have failed to remember the missionaries and their work. It is not too late to give them a helping hand. Please attend to the matter at once and be kind enough to send your offerings to F. M. Rains, Secretary, Box 884, Cincinnati, Ohio.

ILLINOIS CONVENTION AT DECATUR.

The Illinois State Convention will be held this year in First church, Decatur, September 7, 8, 9 and 10. You and your entire congregation have a cordial invitation to enjoy one of the very best conventions ever held in the old "Prairie State." That is saying a good deal, but a glance at the program will convince you.

We urge every one to take a personal interest in advertising the convention in every way possible and in working up large delegations. The convention city is central and easy of access from all parts of the state. A record attendance is confidently anticipated. Decatur will give us a cordial greeting.

Appoint your delegates early on the following basis: "Every congregation having fellowship with the work of the society shall be entitled to one delegate for each hundred members or fraction thereof."



Rev. L. O. Bricker, First Church, Atlanta, who is sounding a call to Disciples everywhere to attend the National Convention in October.

Let all delegates take credentials with them from the church clerk and hand them to the Registration committee and receive a delegate badge, which will entitle the wearer to vote in all the deliberations. Don't forget your credentials.

For many years we have asked each congregation in the state for one dollar to help bear the convention expenses, in order that we may not have to use one penny of the missionary offerings for this purpose. This is in no sense a "registration fee," as no fee is charged for registration of delegates and visitors; but it is a free will gift from the church to help defray the convention expenses of our society. Send a dollar bill, or your personal check, to this office and name the church that sends it. Or send it to the convention by your minister or delegate who will hand it to the registration committee and take a receipt for it. Don't forget the dollar!

Please write E. M. Smith, 345 W. Packard St., Decatur, the names of all who will attend from your church—visitors and delegates—so assignments may be made in advance and save delay.

ATLANTA, THE CONVENTION CITY.

Quite apart from the program of the Atlanta Convention, which is to be one of the very best in the history of our great gatherings, and well worth a journey across the continent to enjoy, Atlanta itself is a city of most absorbing interest. No matter where you live, Atlanta will give you something, an ideal, a vision, a viewpoint you never had before.

Atlanta is a miracle city. When General Sherman began his famous march "from Atlanta to the Sea," he left behind him seven hundred souls alive, out of the fifteen thousand that had made up the population of Atlanta. From the smoking ruins there has arisen a metropolis of over 226,000 people, the financial capital, the railway center, the distributing point, and the office city of the South; the livest and loveliest city on the continent.

The business men of the brotherhood will find Atlanta an interesting city to visit. When you are down among the forest of sky-scrapers, you will think that you are in New York, but as you look around and behold a dozen more in process of erection, you will know that you are not—that you are in Atlanta. You will catch the contagion of the world-famed "Atlanta spirit," that does things bigger and better, and makes a success of everything it undertakes. Atlanta is bigger than its size—it is the throbbing heart of the New South, sending life and energy and vision to every section of Dixie. You will return home a better and keener business man for having visited Atlanta.

Pre-eminently, Atlanta holds things of interest for the the ministers of the brotherhood. It is a Protestant city, and religion is on a high plane here. Atlanta leads all American cities in the percentage of its population that belongs to, and attends the services of its churches. It is the cleanest city morally on the continent. Through the Evangelical Ministers' Association, of which the writer has the honor to be president, the churches of Atlanta stand in absolute unity, and present a solid front against the forces of evil. A widely known educator and sociologist, who has visited the ministers' associations of nearly every large city in the United States, recently declared the association of Atlanta to be the most remarkable of its kind in the country. The churches here have discovered that there is no evil that may not be overthrown, no wrong that cannot be put down, no good thing that they cannot build up; they have failed in no single undertaking in recent years. The ministers of the brotherhood may learn something in Atlanta that will make them more useful in their own cities. If the brethren at large desire it, we will arrange a side meeting during the convention to be addressed by the men who have brought to pass such good things in Atlanta.

Atlanta is surpassed only by New York and Chicago in the number of first class hotels, and by none in quality. We can house over 5,000 people in magnificent new hotels within sight of each other, and within five minutes' walk to the convention auditorium, at prices ranging from $1.50 per day, and up.

We are making such preparations for the comfort and pleasure of our guests as have never before been attempted by a convention city. Our people will not find themselves strangers in Atlanta. Our cause is well established here; and the First church is regarded by all people as the most vigorous and progressive religious organization in the city. Make your plans to come, and write now for reservations.

L. O. Bricker,
General Chairman.

W. A. BALDWIN LEAVES NEBRASKA WORK.

The following resolutions were adopted unanimously at the recent Nebraska convention, at Bethany Aug. 2, 1914. It was with extreme sorrow that the great audience considered the withdrawal of Mr. Baldwin from the work.

"To the Convention of the Disciples of Christ:

"The Governing Board of the Nebraska Christian Missionary Society recognize in our corresponding secretary, W. A. Baldwin, an exceptionally efficient officer. He is a skilled statistician, accurate and painstaking.

"His administration of church differences has been exceedingly tactful and wise. His knowledge of men and his ability to discern and recognize merit and expose deception and fraud have made his services to the churches and to the Board invaluable.

"His Christian gentility, refinement of character and devotion to the Kingdom of God through his service in the Nebraska Missionary Society in the past fifteen years have been marked, and the twenty-three thousand Disciples of Nebraska hold him in affectionate regard. The pure gold of his character shone out in the sorrow that came recently into his life, and his Christian fortitude is praiseworthy and commendable.

Secretary W. A. Baldwin, who has given up the leadership of the Nebraska state work.

"We are proud of the distinction Mr. Baldwin has brought to the state of Nebraska in the councils of the brotherhood nation-wide. It is our desire to retain the advice and counsel of our brother in the future of the Nebraska state work, and to have his interest in our perplexing problems in the trying days to come. It is with extreme regret that we lose the services of Mr. Baldwin as our corresponding secretary. We regret that the inadequacy of our receipts compel him to withdraw from the work for which he is so peculiarly fitted in training and temperament.

"Our prayers and Godspeed go with Mr. Baldwin throughout his life work, and we know he will always be found advancing the Kingdom of God.

"On behalf of the Governing Board of N. C. M. S.,

"By L. C. Oberlies,
"C. E. Lemmon, Committee"

CHURCH EXTENSION RECEIPTS COMPARED FOR TEN MONTHS.

For the first ten months the receipts from the churches show an advance from $9,857.50 (1912-13) to $10,089.04 (1913-14), a gain of $231.54. In August and September the Board must receive $35,000 from the churches in order to reach $45,000 assigned to Church Extension by the Toronto Convention.

In individual receipts for the first ten months, we are sorry to record a falling off of $19,677.54—from $51,460.48 (1912-13) to $31,782.94 (1913-14). This falling off is easily explained when it is noted that in October, 1912, the Board received $24,800.97, which was the result of our effort to reach the Million Dollar point by the time of the Louisville Convention. In our regular individual receipts, there has been a gain if October, 1912, be left out of the counting. We trust there will be many individual gifts and annuity gifts made during August and September.

OUR ANNUAL OFFERING.

It is important that pastors and missionary committees order their supplies at once for the September offering. The new folder, "A Chain of Reasons," is a convincing piece of literature. A college president pronounced it "the best piece of church extension literature ever put out." These are sent free to every missionary committee, pastor or elder ordering them. We also send collection envelopes free.

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

FOREIGN SOCIETY NOTES.

A Department of Agriculture of the University of Nankin, China, will open its doors this fall to admit students. This is one of the important steps taken by that great institution. Jos. Ballie is in charge. He has been connected with the University for some time.

Miss Sylvia Siegfried, returned missionary of the Foreign Society from the Philippine Islands, attended the Fleming County, Ky., Convention, August 5.

Dr. Royal J. Dye with his family is at Onaway, Mich., enjoying a much needed rest.

The graduating exercises of the University of Nankin, China, were conducted on June 20 and 22, 1914. There were twelve in the graduating class. Addresses were delivered in five languages—Greek, French, German, English and Chinese.

Of the 376 churches on the books of the Foreign Society that have adopted the "Budget Plan" only 273 have sent offerings, leaving 113, or nearly one-third, without any contribution to their credit. Let us hope that August and September will present a different showing.

Year before last the little church at Lotumbe, Congo Free State, Africa, contributed $92. Last year the same church contributed $234. The missionaries at Lotumbe report that they are well and happy.

Last month the Foreign Society received $2,000 from a friend in California on the Annuity Plan. This friend had made a number of gifts before, and expects to make others.

Herbert Smith of the Congo, writing concerning the work at Lotumbe, (four years' work there,) says: "Four years ago there were some 45 people present at the Sunday-school. Today (May 24) there were 260, besides the number which gathered at our various outposts. How different the people look today than four years ago. Then they had very little clothing to wear. Today they were dressed clean and respectable. Then the membership of the Lotumbe church was 35. Today it is 922. Then the little church was preaching the gospel in one or two others places; today the heralds from Lotumbe go over 40 different outposts. There is one outpost 300 miles away. Four years ago the greater number of the force of evangelists was still in heathendom. Now they are torch bearers into the darkest places of these African forests."

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

THE FIRST REVIEW

Before the reviews of Mr. Morrison's new book have begun to come in from the religious press there comes this appreciation from a prominent Disciple layman who received one of the first copies of the book. The letter is addressed to the author:

"I finished yesterday your 'Baptism.' It is very readable, and, as far as I am able to detect, flawless in its argument. It is a weapon wherewith the Lord could enable one to put a thousand to rout. It seems to me to be the most significant book put out by the Disciples in years. It reveals scholarship, religious insight, interpretative ability, tolerance and vision. I cannot see how it will fail to be widely read both among our people and others. I will watch for the reviews with much interest, and am glad I have read the book before the reviews appear."

This reader is not the only one who has already finished this stimulating work. Messages coming from thoughtful men over the country justify the prediction that "The Meaning of Baptism" will prove to be the most discussed book that has appeared among the Disciples for many years. Not only that: the discussion it will provoke bids fair to carry the Disciples' Restoration Movement many leagues forward in fulfilling its mission.

A DAY OF QUESTIONS.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR AUGUST 30, 1914.

Read Matt. 22:15-22 Memory Verses, 16, 17

Golden Text.—Render therefore unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's.—Matt. 22:21.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(15) Then went the Pharisees, and took counsel how they might ensnare him in his talk. (16) And they send to him their disciples, with the Herodians, saying, Teacher, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, and carest not for any one: for thou regardest not the person of men. (17) Tell us therefore, What thinkest thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Caesar, or not? (18) But Jesus perceived their wickedness, and said, Why make ye trial of me, ye hypocrites? (19) Show me the tribute money. And they brought unto him a denarius. (20) And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? (21) They say unto him, Caesar's. Then saith he unto them, Render therefore unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's. (22) And when they heard it, they marveled, and left him, and went away.

Verse by Verse.

BY CLARK BUCKNER.

v 15. The Pharisees took counsel how they might ensnare him in his talk: It has been predetermined to kill Jesus, but they sought to make it appear that they were following the course of the law. Inasmuch as they did not possess the power themselves they seek to entrap him by leading him to speak traitorous words relative to the Roman government. Dr. Charles E. Jefferson says: "Men laid their traps and tried to catch him; he walked bravely in the midst of them, and never was entrapped. The intellectual athletes of his time tried to trip him—they flung their lassos at his head—they never got a lasso round his neck. ...They ask him all sorts of questions, expecting that by his answer he would incriminate himself—he never did." Many of our readers have heard Congressman Walter M. Chandler, in his famous address, "The Trial of Jesus, From a Lawyer's Standpoint." It will be recalled how clearly he shows that from every standpoint his trial was illegal and that it amounted to nothing more than a travesty. He was really murdered.

v 16. And they sent to him their disciples: The rabbis trained young men who were to become rabbis. Herodians: They favored the kingship of Herod. We know that thou art true, etc.: They suppose that by flattering Jesus they shall win his confidence and lead him to "talk." They appeal to his fearlessness.

v. 17. Is it lawful to give tribute unto Caesar? This is a burning question. This tribute was the tax levied by Rome. If Jesus answered in the affirmative, he would arouse the enmity of the people, for they paid their tax very unwillingly, feeling that, inasmuch as they were under the rule of God alone they should not be responsible to any foreign power. Yet they were, according to the existing order, subject to Rome and to say that it was unlawful to pay tribute to Cæsar, the emperor, was treason, and would be so regarded by Rome's Palestinian representative, Pontius Pilate.

v. 18. But Jesus perceived their wickedness: He was equal to the occasion. He was beyond deception. He knew their insincerity. Ye hypocrites: Literally 'play-actors.'

v. 19. Show me: Compare with Luke. They brought unto him a denarius: It amounted to seventeen cents, which was the amount paid for a day's work. It was not used any more than was necessary by the strict Jews, for they regarded it as idolatrous, since it bore an image of Cæsar. They were easily secured from the money-changers.

v. 20. Whose is this image and superscription? The coin was either a Roman coin or one of Tetrarch Philip.

v. 21. Render therefore unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's: "If a king's coin is current in a country, the men of that country do thereby evidence that they acknowledge him as their Lord." (Talmud) See Rom. 13:7. And unto God the things that are God's: I think this passage is relevant. By rendering unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's we thereby render unto God the things that are God's. When we do our duty toward man we are doing our duty toward God.

v. 22. When they heard it, they marvelled: Jesus was keener than they were. They sought to trap him but he had trapped them. They could say nothing, so they left him and went away.

At the Heart of the Lesson.

BY REV. A. Z. CONRAD, PH.D.

THE CONSPIRATORS' NET.

The net has been deftly spread. The decoy has been well placed. They hope soon to have their prey entangled in the meshes of the net. "Is it lawful to give tribute to Caesar?" Here is a serpent with fangs. Here was a choice of roads either one of which led to a precipice. Conscience or country which will he choose? When the law conflicts with conviction what course is to be taken? These are the questions which are wrapped up in the main interrogation. Jesus does not accept their assumption that such issues are really before them in the payment of taxes. He knew how easy it is to make questions of policy questions of conscience. It is very natural to try and make a virtue of doing what we desire to do or of declining to do what we do not want to do. We seek justification for our preferences and our prejudices. The "tribute" was the poll tax which was collected by the "publicans" and paid over to the Imperial Treasury. It was what was supposed to be due from each citizent in support of the government. Caesar was the equivalent of the government itself.

THE UNDECEIVED CHRIST.

"But Jesus perceived their wickedness, and said, why tempt ye me ye hypocrites?" Jesus was not victimized by their duplicity. He knew what was in their minds. Just how far the omniscience of Jesus was in abeyance no one is able to determine. When "he emptied himself and took upon him the form of a servant" there was a suspension of the divine attributes at least in their conscious presence so that there were things of which Christ seemed no more certain than did others.

His power of discernment enabled him always to interpret human motive and purpose. "He knew what was in man." He was no mere "mind reader." His perception was not limited to ordinary human discernment. He had a divine insight enabling him to thoroughly understand the intentions of men. "God is not mocked." No man can hope to mask his vices and have them go undetected. Not according to appearances but in righteous judgment God passes sentence of commendation or condemnation.

In a single phrase Jesus tore the mask from the faces of the members of this commission. "Ye hypocrites." It was one of the harshest terms he could employ but the justice of it made those accused impotent.

At that moment their thin disguise was removed. The soul was stripped and bare of every concealment. "Hypocrites!" Almost any other condemnation is less awful. We need guard our own souls against the blight of it. "He is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

AN OBJECT LESSON IN ETHICS.

"Show me the tribute money." "They brought unto him a denarius." The denarius was about sixteen cents. The American revisors translate it "shilling." It was equivalent to a day's wages. It was the tax required in support of the government. Having the coin in his hand Jesus enquired: "Whose is this image and superscription?" It was his turn to ask questions. He met their own supposedly impossible question with another which seemed innocent enough and plain enough. "They say unto him, Cassar's This was merely paving the way to a further answer to the question they had asked. What Jesus desired to emphasize first was the sovereignty of Caesar. They had to recognize the fact of an existing government. The coin represented the sovereignty of the man whose image it bore. The very fact of the coin with its image and inscription was a declaraton of an established civil authority. If then there was a government it must be maintained or a better put in its place. So long as Caesar reigned he had rights. So long as they were subjects of Caesar they would have obligations to Caesar.

THE CITIZEN AND THE STATE.

"Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's." Then Jesus recognized civic duties. The demands of citizenship were not treated lightly by our Lord. The principles of the Christian religion clearly favor obedience to constituted authority except where it manifestly conflicts with the revealed law of God. This rarely happens. Sometimes it does. The question then becomes this, What things are Caesar's? What are the responsibilities of citizenship? It is government that makes possible individual progress. We are afforded protection in the pursuit of physical, intellectual and spiritual development. Evil and avaricious men are beaten back when they would interfere with our progress.

The criminal is prevented from carrying out his designs only because of his fear of punishment which organized society in the form of government would mete out to him. Anarchy would be suicidal. No true Christian was ever an anarchist. The spirit of Jesus involves obedience to the laws of the commonwealth. The payment of taxes is one of the most evident of obligations. Government can not be maintained without expense. Taxes may be unjustly levied. Taxation without a voice in the government opposes every sense of justice. Again taxation for private interest is intolerable. The "passive resistance" in England was justified because of the wholly unjust requirement of money from those who in the nature of the case could derive no benefit from it. No one can be a true citizen and shirk his reasonable part in the maintenance of the government under whose protection he lives. The avoidance of the "duty" on imported goods is as dishonest as stealing from a neighbor's house. There is an utterly false code of ethics which justifies the avoidance of obligations to the government and to corporations.

The enormous taxes now levied in almost every city of America are to be accounted for on the basis of this very wrong ideal of citizenship.

TOPIC AUGUST 26, 1914.

An Appeal to the Heroic. Matt. 10:16-42; 19:16-30; Eph. 6:10-20.

We may think we like easy tasks but we do not. In the end we despise the man who asks us to do only what is easy, and we despise ourselves for accepting his estimate of our ability and inclination. The church that prospers makes heavy demands upon its members. It believes in their capacity and willingness to do great things. It has been said that Christian Science makes no appeal to the heroic. I do not affirm or deny the charge. If it is true, Christian Science will become contemptible in the eyes of all earnest people.

"I count life just a stuff
To try the soul's strength on, educe the man."

Browing spoke for us all in these lines. We admire strength. We are pleased with ourselves when we choose what requires strength. To be weak is to be miserable.

SHEEP AND WOLVES.

Christianity invites men to use their reason, to enlarge their sympathies, to see life whole. The messenger of Christ is denied the use of the weapons of the world. Force, deception, and cunning are the weapons of his enemies. Among men who depend upon the war club and the bayonet and living to get for them what they want he is like a sheep in the midst of wolves. He seems to be entirely helpless. But the figure may be pressed too far. The wolf will remain a wolf. The wolfish qualities of men may be changed. The Christian teacher conquers the enemies of his mission by making them its friends. But he must be a hero. He cannot win by adopting the ways of the world. If he answers reviling with reviling, men will class him as one of themselves and think no more of him. If he is fond of debate, they will enjoy disputing with him, and remain satisfied with their old opinions. If he leans heavily upon the arm of powerful political or military friends, he compromises his message. He must talk to the hearts and consciences of men. If he cannot win by the truth presented in love, he cannot win at all.

ACCEPTING CONSEQUENCES.

The immediate consequences of the preaching of the gospel are not always what we should like. The gospel has always been a disturber of the harmony of families and the peace of states. The disciple must be willing to be called a trouble maker. If a family is fundamentally wrong on any important question, the first member that discovers the truth and proceeds to act upon it, will be opposed, and the man who helped him to see the truth will be censured and possibly subjected to violent treatment. Of course, the preacher of the gospel is no lover of discord. His object is to bring peace on earth. He is the subject of the Prince of Peace.

THE NEEDLE'S EYE.

To be true to ourselves we may have to give up things that have become a part of us. The money or lands we possess represent a father's industry, frugality, foresight, loving thought for us. Or when we look at our possessions, we see ourselves, for we have put our life into them. To give them up voluntarily is the act of a hero. Then we have to think of what wealth gives to its owners, influence, independence, the means of culture, pleasant surroundings, and association with leaders in industry, politics, education, and religion. And there is the joy of making money for the man who knows how and has capital. Nearly the whole of life may seem to be bound up with wealth. But if the soul is in danger, Christianity says that wealth must go, and it permits no compromise. There is no profit to the man who gains the world and loses his soul. Matt. 5:29-30; 8:19-22; 13:44-46; 16:24-25; Luke 5:11, 27; 21:2-4; Acts 21: 13; Rom. 8:12-17; Heb. 13:13.

The New Spirit in Sunday School Work is Embodied in the Bethany System of Sunday School Literature

THE recent appointment by President Hill M. Bell of a Religious Education Commission for the Disciples is indicative of an unrest with the conditions that have obtained in the Sunday Schools of the past. It is a source of satisfaction to the Disciples Publication Society that the Bethany System of Literature has been prepared on the basis of the highest ideals of religious education.

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

Graded or Uniform Lessons--Which?

Many schools are in uncertainty at this time as to how to answer this important question. The new year is upon them. Some leaders are asking for the old-time, uniform lessons. Others demand the modern graded system. For the help of such doubtful schools, we submit the following points for thoughtful consideration:

1. The Uniform Lessons are backward-looking; the Graded Lessons look forward.
2. The Uniform Lessons have been discountenanced by all leaders in public school work; they advocate enthusiastically the Graded Lessons.
3. The Uniform Lesson system was made before the true pedagogical principles obtained in education; the Graded Lessons are built upon these principles—they are fitted to the child. The old idea was to make the child fit the lesson!
4. Forward-looking schools today are rapidly adopting the Graded Lessons.
5. The recent International Sunday-school Convention decided one thing absolutely—that the Graded Lessons are here to stay.

Don't decide to ignore the Graded Lessons—at least not until you have examined the best graded materials published--

Man's Wrath Praising God

The mind and conscience of Christendom are stunned by the suddeness, the magnitude and the horror of the war into which the nations of Europe and the welfare of the world are suddenly plunged. The impossible has happened. The nations that have been leading in the world's progress have suddenly abandoned their peaceful and productive pursuits to fly at each other's throats. The world looks on in horror that lacks words for its expression. If any five intelligent men, one from Vienna, one from Berlin, one from St. Petersburg, one from Paris, and one from London, should meet and act as Austria, Germany, Russia, France and England have acted, they would be thought insane. Nations ought to be more wise, more sane, more patient, more just than individuals. A fault or folly that might be pardonable in one man ought to be impossible to a nation. But it is not so. The wisdom, justice, forbearance and goodness of the nation falls below that of its best representatives. Not yet have the nations a conscience equal to that of their best people.

* * *

Meantime there rests on rulers a solemn weight of responsibility to God and to the stern sense of outraged justice among men. Aristotle was right when he said that the occasions of wars are slight, while the causes are profound. The causes of the present war lie deep in the hatred of Slav and Teuton, in the covetousness of Russia for Constantinople, in the determination of France to repossess herself of the lost provinces of Alsace and Lorraine, in the long and mutual jealousy of England and Germany. This bitterness and hatred and jealousy is long lived. It has been inherited from war to war since Napoleon fought Wellington, since Europe faced Asia in the crusades, since Gauls fought Goths in the days of Rome's decline, and still back to the strife of the Persians and the Greeks and so on back to the dawn of history. Never has it died out. The clash of arms has resounded in nearly every generation, and never has the issue been wholly a new one. Always there was an unsettled element inherited from the last great conflict or the one before. The causes of any present war in Europe spring as new shoots out of roots of bitterness that grew and bore their bitter fruit as far back as the dawn of history.

* * *

The ties that bind America to Germany are many and strong. Thousands of our best citizens were born there. Hundreds of our ablest scholars were educated there. The blood of the Teuton runs red in the veins of America. It will go against the grain of American affection to see Germany fighting Russia, and to sympathize with Russia. But Russia had a right to support Servia against Austrian aggression, and Germany had no right to give aid and comfort to Austria in her attack upon the peace of the world. For it is the world that is sinned against. Already we have almost forgotten Servia. It is the world that suffers; not Servia or Austria not Russia but humanity.

Deep are our sympathies with England. She did not want war.. Her leaders have exercised commendable self-restraint. So far as we can see her part in the terrible struggle was not of her own choosing. America can but feel for her strong sympathy born of our common blood and language, and strengthened by an admiration for her earnest effort to preserve the peace.

It is far too soon to pass final judgments. The tangled web of European politics does not unravel itself so simply as to justify us in calling any nation faultless. All have been at fault. The war preparations of all European nations and of America have been an invitation to this or to some other great struggle. They are among the causes, which lie deeper than the occasions, of war.

* * *

This war will not leave things as it found them. A new map of Europe will be necessary. But this will not be the most important change. There will be a new birth of Democracy in Europe. The common people, taxed in peace and butchered in war, will rise and demand of their sovereigns a reason for their sweat and tears and blood. Democracy will be more nearly regnant in Europe than ever before.

But this is not all.

This great and horrible war will surely bring nearer the reign of universal peace. The worse this war the sooner and the more lasting the peace that is to come. Is it not written that God shall make the wrath of man to praise Him, and restrain the remainder thereof? Let now this prophecy be fulfilled. Though the guns war and the land be drenched and the sea reddened, still shall prevail the mighty purpose of God. The reign of peace is nearer than it was. "God moves in a a mysterious way, His wonders to perform." But He performs them: and even the wrath of man shall praise Him.

Concerning the Situation at Berkeley

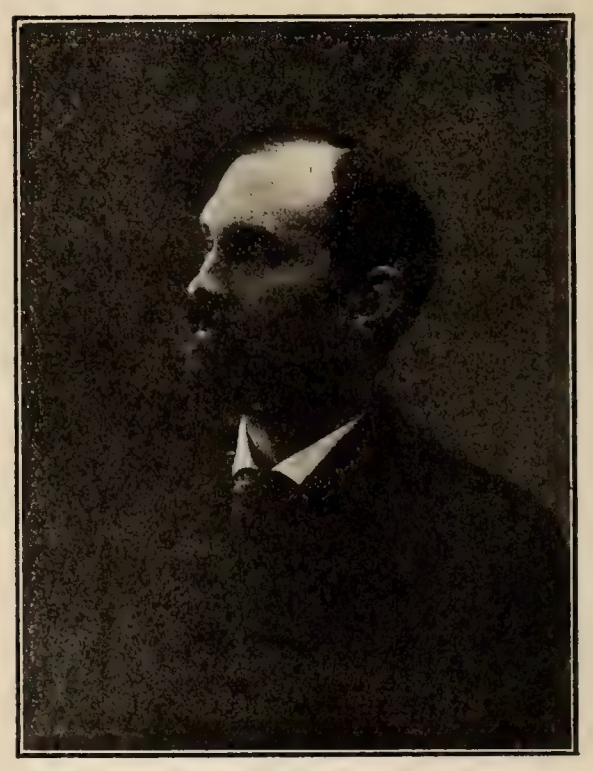
A Reply to Rev. A. C. Smither's Account in the Christian Evangelist.

BY H. H. GUY.

The following article was written at our request. It seemed obviously unjust to allow Mr. Smither's report of the exclusion of Berkeley church by the California convention, and of the causes that led up to it, to go uncorrected. Doctor Guy is an elder in Berkeley church. He was, as the text of his article shows, a member of the faculty of Berkeley Bible Seminary, and when that institution failed to carry out its agreement for a united affiliation with Pacific Theological Seminary individual Disciples of Christ came forward with their gifts to support him on the faculty of the latter institution. Doctor Guy and those supporting him believe that the turn events have taken both in Seminary affairs and in the state convention is a travesty on the Disciples' plea for Christian unity. He has written under the pressure of confidential knowledge which he does not feel at liberty to use, knowledge of outside official interference and of moral weakness on the part of certain men now prominent in the opposition, but who formerly stood with Mr. Loken in the church matter and with himself in the higher program for the Seminary. When he says at the close that he has written with "restraint" only those informed of the inwardness of the situation will know how well he has discriminated between the things he ought and the things he ought not to say. Doctor Guy was for twenty years a missionary in Japan. He was the first "living-link" missionary among the Disciples of Christ. He was supported by Central Church, Des Moines, Ia. Receiving his Ph. D. from Yale University he became Dean of Berkeley Bible Seminary some four years ago.—THE EDITOR.

Prof. H. H. Guy, Ph.D., of Pacific Theological Seminary.

Rev. H. J. Loken, Pastor First Church, Berkeley.



President Charles S. Nash, D. D., of Pacific Theological Seminary.

IN an article appearing in the Christian Evangelist of July 30, A. C. Smither writes at length concerning the action of the state convention at Santa Cruz where by a large majority the delegates from First Church, Berkeley, were refused seats on the ground that by the practice of Christian unity with unimmersed Christians that church had "removed itself from the fellowship of our common brotherhood" and by this act had "ceased to be a Christian church."

Concerning the action taken by the Berkeley church whereby it decided to have fellowship with other Christians the statement made at Santa Cruz by Rev. H. J. Loken, Berkeley's pastor, is both to the point and true. I quote from Mr. Smither's article. He says the pastor stated that "the Berkeley church taught and practiced immersion only, and that they accepted accredited members from all other evangelical churches of whatever faith into their fellowship, and gave such persons, should they leave the Berkeley church, the letters they brought with them, and an added commendation from the Berkeley congregation. He states that the position and practice of the Berkeley church were in harmony with the early and original Campbellian movement. He also claimed that if the convention passed this resolution it would constitute itself an ecclesiasticism, that it would violate the principles of Christian democracy, and that the results would be nation-wide."

MISSTATEMENT OF MOTIVE.

In so far Mr. Smither gave an accurate account. But the main body of his article, is misleading and untrue. In response to a telegram from The Christian Century to make whatever reply I deem advisable, I wish to call attention, in this hastily written statement, to certain major misrepresentations which, to every informed California Disciple, lie on the surface of Mr. Smither's report.

At the very outset Mr. Smither gravely misstates the motives that lay back of the action of the Berkeley church and her pastor when they adopted the practice of "open membership" with other Christians. He says:

> It was expected by the advocates of this plan that the church would grow with phenomenal rapidity by an influx of members from the neighboring churches. Thus far the church building has not been enlarged to accommodate the vast audiences that were expected to throng that church. To January 1, 1914, only sixteen unimmersed persons had sought membership in that congregation.

It was not expected "that the church would grow with phenomenal rapidity by an influx from neighboring churches." Indeed the very contrary was expected. In fact it was pretty well known that there would be a numerical loss. That a very few of the members of the church would withdraw was well known, that many from neighboring churches would come in was altogether uncertain, and was not consciously desired. The action of the church had had an incomparably larger thing in view. The Disciples' Commission on Christian Union of which Peter Ainslie is chairman, which met with the Congregationalists' Commission in New York the very year the Berkeley church took this action, had advised the union of Congregational and Disciples churches by the plan of enrolling each member in the united church as "Congregationalist" or "Disciple" without making immersion a condition of such enrollment. This was urged upon our churches as a splendid movement and it was freely advised that this device made possible an important forward move by Disciples churches. The action of the Berkeley church was partly based upon that suggestion from our Christian Union Commission.

TO MAKE PRACTICE CONSISTENT WITH PLEA.

The other motive which led to their action was the fact that we as a brotherhood stand accused of teaching and practicing a scheme which really un-Christianizes all other Christians. Our plea for Christian union is regarded as in reality a propaganda for absorbing the other churches. It is charged that we would never consent to Christian union until all the Christians of the world had been rebaptized according to the mode which we Disciples practice. It was the intention of the Berkeley church to take a position which would forever make such interpretations of her position impossible. By taking the stand which it did Berkeley church said that, while regarding immersion as the only mode of baptism practiced in the New Testament days, and while feeling under compulsion to so practice the rite today, it held itself in duty bound to receive all Christians into its fellowship, with the understanding that its liberty to continue to teach and practice what it believes to be the doctrine of the New Testament is not infringed upon. The results of this action were partly as anticipated and partly a surprise. Locally, the vision of the congregation was greatly widened and its spiritual life was much enriched. In the brotherhood at large, both in the state and the nation, considerable confusion arose and in the confusion some bitterness was stirred up.

NOT A PROSELYTING SCHEME.

The important point in this connection is that Berkeley church, while it has greatly prospered since taking its forward step, had no proselyting purpose in its resolve to practice Christian unity. It was not a scheme to get members; it was a way of bearing our testimony to the fundamental principle of the Disciples' reformation. The sectarian position in which our traditional practice placed us was intolerable to the church's conscience (as we believe it should be to the conscience of every church of Disciples) and we determined to continue it no longer.

The results, as Mr. Smither correctly states, on Berkeley Bible Seminary were far reaching. Mr. Smither states that the Berkeley Bible Seminary was for some time a joy to the brethren throughout the state. This of course refers to the time before the dismissal of the faculty due to their participation, as members of Berkeley church, in the alleged "defection" of that congregation.

It makes interesting reading now to turn back to the time when all this was fresh in the minds of the people and before the venom from St. Louis was injected, and note the comments on the situation. This from E. B. Ware, whom Mr. Smither calls "that old warhorse of our California churches" and who introduced the resolution of excommunication at Santa Cruz, in his paper at Healdsburg August 8, 1912:

> Berkeley Bible Seminary from the beginning has been a denominational failure. So have several others we might name. The $100,000 or more contributed by the Disciples of Christ in California to the Berkeley Bible Seminary propaganda, has, thus far, been practically a dead loss.

Mr. Ware adds, quite pointedly:

> The fact is that the day of the denominational school is done—no denomination has the resources nor the prestige necessary to make a school what it ought to be and what the best interests of the students demand.

I am divulging no secrets when I say that it was the nearly universal opinion that the most distressing and difficult problem the churches of California had to face was what to do with Berkeley Bible Seminary.

The proposal to merge the Seminary with the Pacific Theological Seminary, which came at about the time of the Rev. H. O. Breeden, LL. D., Pastor at Fresno, Who Strongly Opposed the Excommunication Proceeding.

Berkeley church's action, was everywhere hailed with relief and enthusiasm in Northern California. It offered a solution which would save the Seminary and at the same time foster the principle of Christian unity. In his misstatements concerning the Seminary and the "Christian Union League," and my own personal relation to them, Mr. Smither can hardly be excused. He says the Pacific Theological Seminary is a Congregational institution. But Mr. Smither knows better. He knows that Pacific Seminary definitely severed its connection with that denomination in 1912, and took a position as definitely non-denominational, electing to its board of trustees two Disciples—Rev. Geo. W. Brewster, Jr., of San Jose, and Mr. Charles Knox, of Berkeley. It is indeed on friendly terms with the Congregational denomination, as it has sought and is still seeking to be on friendly terms with all denominations. The institution has on its faculty Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, Disciples and others. I represent the Disciples of Christ on the faculty, not in the sense that I am elected to teach any doctrines peculiar to my people, for no teacher represents his denomination in that sense. Each is chosen because he is believed competent to give instruction in his particular field. Mr. Smither charges that the Christian Union League resorts to misrepresentation to secure funds for my support in the union seminary:

Rev. A. C. Smither, Manager of the Christian Board of Publication, St. Louis, Who Urged the Excommunication of the Berkeley Church.

> Not satisfied with their work in Berkeley, the adherents of this plan began to devise means for extending this propaganda throughout the state.
> An organization called the Christian Union League was effected as an instrument through which this new cause was to be promoted. This league began, at an early date, the publication of a monthly entitled the "Christian Union Advocate," of which Brother Loken is editor. This league is also devoting itself to the task of securing means with which to support Dr. Guy as a professor in the Pacific Theological Seminary, which is a Congregational institution. The brethren in this section of the state report that the representatives of this organization claim that their appeal is made to churches not familiar with this situation on the ground that Professor Guy is representing our churches in the faculty of that theological seminary.

WORK OF THE LEAGUE.

It is altogether inexcusable to misrepresent facts as Mr. Smither has done in connection with the Christian Union League. The League, composed of members from twenty-three different churches throughout the state, was not formed to promote "this new cause" if by "new cause" reference is made to the open membership plan of the Berkeley church. It was formed for the promotion of Christian unity in every way, but the immediate occasion that called it into being was the imminent failure of the union of the Berkeley and the Pacific seminaries. With the dismissal of the faculty and the temporary closing of the doors of Berkeley Seminary the whole plan to which many of us—teachers and pastors and business men—had devoted much energy and enthusiasm seemed about to come to naught. The Christian Union League was organized with the practical end in view of conserving so much as possible of what had been won in the movement for the union of the two seminaries. It was not organized to propagate the practice of Berkeley church. It had no connection with Berkeley church, save that, naturally, many Berkeley members became members of the League in order to aid in the Seminary task. It is through this league that my support as professor "representing" the Disciples in this non-denominational seminary is gathered. Without its generous aid the Disciples would have had no part or lot in this highly significant enterprise.

THE LEAGUE AND THE SEMINARY.

A glance at the preamble of the Constitution ought to make it clear that what was in the minds of the organizers of the League was the union of activities wherever possible.

> Lamenting the present divided state of the church and the consequent barrenness of its life and ineffectiveness of its service: and recognizing the essential Christian character of all followers of Jesus without regard to their denominational affiliation; and holding it to be the mission of the church of Christ to proclaim the gospel to all mankind, exalting the worship of the one true God, and laboring for the progress of knowledge, the promotion of justice, the reign of peace, and the realization of human brotherhood, we here form ourselves into a Christian Union League and adopt the following constitution.

The offer made by Pacific Theological Seminary afforded an immediate opportunity to carry out its principles. The League has no pet scheme or plan of Christian union. It purposely avoided the making of a plan, in the hope that, after

The Pan-European War

An Analysis of Conditions and an Interpretation of Motives.

BY CLYDE SCOTT STILWELL

ON June 28 last, while making a visit of inspection at Serajevo, Bosnia, the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, heir to the Austrian throne, and his consort, the Duchess of Hohenberg, were assassinated by a Servian student. But little more than a month has elapsed since that tragedy and Europe is in the midst of a horrible war ignited by the flash of the murderer's pistol. It is natural to inquire why this should be so. It is inconceivable that had the murder been committed by a fanatic of one of the great powers of Europe it would have gone farther than the prompt execution of the criminal and an apology by his nation. But the assassin here was a Servian, and Austria promptly asserted that the crime was the result of a Servian conspiracy.

On July 23 we find Austria sending to Servia demands to suppress anti-Austrian agitation and to permit Austrian representatives to sit on boards of investigation and trial of the Servians implicated in the assassination conspiracy. To this ultimatum Servia replied conceding everything except permission for Austrian officials to sit upon the court of inquiry. Austria peremptorily rejected this reply as unsatisfactory and declared war on Servia. Meanwhile Russia had announced that it could not "remain indifferent" to Austria's demands on Servia, and began to make hostile preparations against Austria. Thereupon Germany came to the assistance of its ally, Austria-Hungary, by declaring war on Russia and prepared to attack France, the old-time enemy of Germany and the ally of Russia.

In the endeavor to strike a quick and telling blow at France it became necessary for Germany to invade Belgium, a neutral state. This was not only opposed by the armed resistance of Belgium, but caused England to declare war on Germany. Thus, in ten days, there developed a pan-European war which looms up as the most terrible and momentous armed conflict of all history.

THE LINE UP.

Here we see England, France and Russia, members of the Triple Entente, together with Belgium and Servia, opposed to Germany and Austria-Hungary, with Italy the third member of the Triple Alliance, declaring and endeavoring to maintain her neutrality. It is a question how long Italy can remain neutral, because Germany is insisting that under the terms of the Triple Alliance the obligation is upon Italy to assist them. But there are reasons, to be mentioned later, that may cause Italy to break away from the Triple Alliance and cast her lot with France and her allies.

Already the primary differences between Austria and Servia have become comparatively insignificant and obscure in the face of the gigantic struggle now pending in which the very national existence of the principal countries of Europe is involved. To get an understanding of this complex situation requires a retrospective glance into European history, and a consideration of the political, racial, economic and social factors entering into this conflict.

In the first place, the murder of the Austrian heir apparent has proved to be simply the vehicle, and not the cause, for bringing the war to pass. The cause of the war lies much deeper, and Austria is utilizing the crime against her as a means and opportunity to crush threatening and powerful opposition, which, if successful, would strike at the very throne of the Hapsburgs.

AUSTRIA'S SITUATION.

The state of Austria has been in existence over a thousand years. A large part of its population is Teutonic. The population of Hungary is mainly Slavic, but this kingdom has been controlled for many centuries by the House of Hapsburg, which has also ruled Austria for six hundred years. The present Austro-Hungarian Empire, whose dual form was created in 1867, is ruled over by Emperor Francis Joseph I, a member of the House of Hapsburg. It has been the common belief that his strong personality has held the two kingdoms together and it is doubtful if the present dual form of the empire could survive his death and influence. For this reason his great age makes the dissolution of the empire a possibility of the near future.

Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria

Of all the countries of Europe, Austria has been the most reactionary. Its constant policy has been to obstruct all movements toward political liberty and national freedom.

For a time Austria held despotic sway over Italy, but this control was dissipated about the middle of the last century by Cavour, Italy's great statesman. Austria still holds several important Adriatic seaports. Her natural commercial outlet is through the Mediterranean Sea, and she has long had in mind the annexation of all, or as many as possible, of the Balkan States both to increase her coast line, to control future commerce by rail to Persia, India and China, and to safeguard her national life. Her large Slavic population has also opened to her the possibility of becoming the predominating figure in a federation of the Slav nations of the Balkan Peninsula. This would work out to her advantage not only in preventing Russia, her hereditary enemy, from reaching the Mediterranean through the Balkan States, but would effectually stop Russia from ever annexing any or all of the Balkan States, which would take from Austria-Hungary any possibility of growth, commercially or otherwise. Any attempt on the part of the Balkan States to get together in one political entity has always found Austria opposed to it. Such a possible federation would not only threaten Austria's commercial outlets, but would have a tendency to draw to it, because of racial sympathy, the kingdom of Hungary with its large Slavic element. In fact, the whole tendency in Austria-Hungary is for the Teutonic element to gravitate toward Germany and the Slavic element to lean toward Servia and the other Slav nations.

SERVIA'S INTEREST.

The Serbs have been known for fifteen hundred years in the Balkan Peninsula where, in the Middle Ages, they had an established empire. The Turks, swarming into Europe during the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries conquered the Serbs as well as the Bulgarians, overwhelmed Hungary and besieged Vienna. Through Servia's splendid aid they were repulsed and central Europe was saved from the ravaging Turk. For centuries Servia was a Turkish province, but never lost racial identity or hope of national existence. By the Treaty of Berlin in 1878 Servia was declared an independent state. A little over a year ago after successfully driving Turkey out of the Balkan Peninsula, ambition and jealousy brought Greece, Bulgaria and Servia into strife with each other, and there then went glimmering whatever prospect there had been of an autonomous Balkan federation, or even a union of the Slavic nations.

The desire of Austria to annex Servia has long been suspected and felt by the Servians, and other Balkan states as well. In 1908 the Austrian Government did annex Bosnia and Herzegovnia, thus greatly increasing her seacoast. This action raised a storm of protest on the part of Russia, because these provinces are largely Servian in population and sympathy, and their control has placed Austria in a more strategic position for naval growth, national strength and further encroachment in Balkan territory. Needless to say this high-handed act only confirmed Servia's suspicions and added fuel to the fire of Russia's jealousy and hatred.

So it is we find Austria accepting the assassination of her Crown Prince as an excuse for chastising little Servia, but back of that is her desire to gain control of that country, and to have an entering wedge into the Balkan Peninsula.

RUSSIA'S MOTIVE.

Russia has a mixed motive for coming to the assistance of Servia which is partly racial, partly political and partly commercial. Her population has a large Slavic element and her racial sympathies are with the Slavic peoples of the Balkan States and of certain parts of Hungary.

Commercially, Russia needs an outlet on the Mediterranean for the Baltic is ice-bound for many months and her use of the Dardanelles for warships is forbidden by international agreement. She is therefore in direct opposition to Austria's plan for her commercial advance. Russia's last attempt to gain a foothold on the Mediterranean by an attack on Turkey brought on the Crimean War, because England feared lest Russia's success would prove a menace to India and her other Oriental possessions and the English route thereto. This much is true: If Russia cannot get a Mediterranean outlet through her sympathetic relations with the Balkan States, she is determined that Austria and Germany shall not obtain the same privilege. The reason for her attack on Austria is thus disclosed.

WHY GERMANY IS THE CENTER OF THE WAR.

The interest of Germany in Austria and the Balkan States has already been indicated and when Russia attacked Austria it called for German interference. The large population and resources of Russia, coupled with despotic rule and power, are a constant source of anxiety to Germany. It cannot be said that France has forgotten her defeat in the Franco-Prussian War of 1870, and she is an ally of Russia. Germany's commercial growth and increasing naval power has brought her to the breaking point with England several times during recent years. But for her alliance with Austria she would be practically isolated, and it therefore behooves her to be on intimate friendly terms with her ally. Indeed, it may be no idle dream of German statesmen to look forward to a closer union with Austria and through her to control the Balkan Peninsula and gain great harbors and a coast line for the development of her maritime power. It is clear that Germany's future plans are at cross purposes with those of more than one other great European power, and their union to defeat Germany may be thus accounted for.

POSITIONS OF ENGLAND, FRANCE AND ITALY.

England no longer fears encroachment by Russia on her Asiatic possessions for Russia is now busily engaged in developing Siberia and in her rivalry with Japan. But with Germany she has developed a growing commercial conflict so that she cannot idly stand by and see her rival lay plans for a great and powerful empire that would embrace Germany, Austria and the Balkan States. As between German and Russian control of the Balkan Peninsula, Great Britan would prefer Russian domination. There also enters for consideration the sympathy of the English people with the struggle of the Balkan States for national liberty. Last of all, it is unlikely that Italy will forget.

CANNOT FORGET THE PAST.

Outside of her relations with England and Russia in the Triple Entente, the main interest of France in this struggle is the measuring of her strength with that of Germany. As was said, France has not forgotten the Franco-Prussian War of 1870, and it is her desire to win back the province of Alsace-Lorraine. The Triple Entente was formed to offset the power of the Triple Alliance, and for this reason France is under obligation to assist Russia.

Italy has declared her neutrality, but Germany is insisting that she should come to her assistance under the terms of the Triple Alliance, or else be prepared to fight. However, Italy has no desire to engage with Austria in an attack on Servia, for she remembers Austria's cruel domination and control of her own country, and how Austria tried to thwart the plans for the unification of Italy. In a general conflict of this kind, it is fair to assume that Italy will remember that France and England were her friends when Austria was her oppressor and Prussia was indifferent.

consultation with men of various congregations and different conceptions of union, plans might be wrought out which would meet the favor of all concerned and satisfy the principles of the New Testament. The appeal for funds for the support of the Disciples' representative in the union seminary was not made to congregations "not familiar with the situation" but was made, so far as that was possible, to every church and every preacher in the state. Campaign funds were not abundant and consequently it was not possible to reach all. Individual members of the League may have at times and in certain places loosely used the expression that I "represented our churches" on the faculty but the League at no time made such claim. I could only represent those who supported me on that faculty, and those who supported me did so on behalf of the Disciples of Christ with whose movement I am identified.

CHURCH AND LEAGUE DESIRE TO CO-OPERATE.

In the light of the foregoing explanation these words of Mr. Smither's are simply ridiculous:

> I presume, now that the lines are clearly drawn and defined, that we shall have added another rent in the Church of Christ in the name of Christian Union, and that the Christian Union League, should it long survive, will be another small denomination as the result of pride and obstinacy on the part of a few misguided individuals.

This, of course, is simply to lament the consequences of the Santa Cruz action which action Mr. Smither ardently encouraged. The Christian Union League could not in the nature of the case become another denomination even if it would. Certainly it is not to blame for the action taken at Santa Cruz. It has not excommunicated "the corporation known as the Christian Church of California," nor is it seeking to do so. Neither has the Berkeley church excommunicated said "corporation." The church desired to co-operate, as it has always done, and sent its delegates to the annual meeting, which delegates were refused a place not by any obstinacy or pride of their own but by the deliberate act of the "corporation" itself.

UNWORTHY OF A CHRISTIAN EDITOR.

And it is not true, as stated in one paragraph of the resolution of excommunication, that the Berkeley church "is seeking to introduce its 'divisive' plan into other Christian churches of California." The Berkeley church has minded strictly its own business, having work enough at home without seeking glory outside of its own parish.

Mr. Smither's whole article is a species of legerdemain more worthy of a fakir in the religious festivals of the East than of a Christian editor. He neglects to make mention at all of the fact that whatever bad spirit there is in the discussion in Berkeley was injected by himself. His correspondence with certain members of the Berkeley church, whose reputation for disturbing the peace of congregations is state-wide, which correspondence was published in the Berkeley daily press; his unsought advice to the church board; his counselling the few disaffected members of the church to go to law in the secular courts to gain the property; his going about the bay district and by innuendo and suggestion bringing the good name of certain men into disrespect, which good name was all they possessed; his refusal to print in the Christian Evangelist the correspondence of certain men in explanation of their position; the contradiction between his public and his private utterances on the subjects of baptism and the practice of Christian union—all these things, of course, remain unnoticed in his description of the situation at Berkeley, California. It is well known that in the mission work in Los Angeles he was, when pastor there, a strong advocate not only of admitting unimmersed Oriental Christians into the fellowship of the church but was willing to leave the question of mode of baptism to the individual who might in the future seek admittance into this union church, which, of course, is going farther than Berkeley church has dreamed of going.

OPPONENT PREVIOUSLY FAVORABLE.

It is also interesting now to recall that E. B. Ware, who introduced the resolution excommunicating the delegates of the Berkeley church, both in private letters and in his newspaper, the Healdsburg Tribune, had defended the action of the Berkeley church. It seems evident that Mr. Ware "changed his mind" through influence emanating from St. Louis.

I have tried to write under due restraint, with a humble sense of the delicacy of the situation, a desire to aid it by the candid telling of the truth and to avoid harming it by unnecessary personal feeling, and with the constant prayer that the churches of Christ in California may see in its true light the un-Christian thing they have been persuaded to do and may set in motion appropriate forces for undoing it.

Using the Grace of God

BY J. H. JOWETT

THERE is a very arresting passage in one of the letters of the apostle Paul, in which he urges his readers not to "receive the grace of God in vain." So that it is possible to receive a good thing and yet to receive it in vain. We can receive good advice, and yet good advice may be fruitless. We can receive the right and privilege of the franchise, and yet by our indifference or indolence we may never vote, and so the power of the gift is vain. We can receive a gift of books, and they may represent literary masterpieces, and we may even give them a prominent and distinguished place in our library, but if we never open their treasures we have received the gift in vain. I once received a packet of seeds in which there slept great possibilities of floral glory, but I thoughtlessly put them away in a drawer, and so received the gift in vain.

THE GOSPEL OF GRACE.

It is even so with the gospel of grace. I suppose that if the attendants at public worship were to be challenged, the vast majority would claim to have received the gospel of grace. But think what that gospel is. It is the expression of God's unfathomable goodwill and the pledge of his infinite love. It offers to the children of men the franchises and the privileges and the holy favors of the children of God. It unveils resplendent hopes, and it promises spiritual possibilities of undreamed-of glory, possibilities of Divine communion and Divine attainment. Now in a certain way we can receive this grace, but we can also receive it in vain. As with the civic franchise, we may never use it; as with the gift of noble literature we may never enter into its treasures; and as the gift of wonderful seed we may not create the conditions for the unfolding of its powers, we may receive grace and yet receive it in vain.

Now, what does the apostle wish us to do with grace? How shall we use it so as not to receive it in vain? I wish to follow the guidance of the apostle in answering these practical questions. And the first of his counsels may, I think, be given thus: Use the grace of God to grow graces.

THE GRACE OF PATIENCE.

The apostle mentions a number of the graces and virtues which he urges us to grow. To review them is like looking at some lovely garden. I want to select two or three of the graces in this radiant fellowship. And first of all he mentions the grace of patience. We are to use the grace of God to grow this grace. In my early preaching I used to speak of patience under the figure of a fern. Ferns grow in shady places which are not exposed to the glaring sunshine, and which are kept moist by falling waters or heavy dews. And it seemed to me that the fern of patience grew best where life was shadowed, and where it was moistened with many tears. It seemed to be a growth that flourished best in the twilight. In a certain measure all this was true, but in the larger experience of years I do not think I should use a fern as the symbol of this Christian grace. A fern is a very frail and fragile thing. If you walk through a shady copse where the ferns are growing you can scarcely avoid bruising them, and you find them all about with broken necks or broken backs. But the grace of patience is not frail and fragile and easily broken. It is tough and wiry and enduring. And therefore I think I should prefer the symbol of the heather rather than of the fern. The heather is tough; you may bend it, but you do not break it. When you release your hold upon it, it quietly recovers its position. If you lie down upon it it rises again when the weight is removed. If you try to pull it up by the root it seems as though an acre is its friend. And so it is with the grace of patience. It is very tenacious, very deeply rooted, and not easily disturbed. There are many varieties of this masculine virtue. There is the patience of "unanswered prayer," and there is the patience that "triumphs over wrong;" and yet again there is the patience which is "faithful in that which is least," the patience which gives the last touch to its work and perfects everything with the most exquisite degree of refinement. Well we are to use the grace of God to grow this spiritual grace, and thereby prove to the world that we have not received the grace of God in vain.

THE VIRTUE OF PURENESS.

And the second grace the apostle mentions is that of "pureness." We are to use the grace of God to grow this grace. And when the apostle first gave the counsel it was to fellow-believers who were living in Corinth. They were to grow this strong and lovely grace in that dissolute city, which combined the perils and evils of Liverpool and New York. In these altogether unfavorable surroundings they were to grow this grace of pureness, which might fittingly find its symbol in a white violet.

It is comparatively easy to grow white violets in congenial conditions. I know a lovely country lane in the Midlands of England, where, in the early spring, the white violets are out in countless multitudes. But then the setting is so appropriate, everything so friendly. I have gathered them under the shelter of great beeches, with the blackbird singing on the bough and the cuckoo calling across the field. But who would like to try to grow white violets in Fifth Avenue or in Fleet street? And yet the Apostle Paul said that they could be grown "in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments." It would be very easy in these conditions to grow things like resentment, and malice, and bad temper, and hatred, and revenge; but if we are to grow pureness, "the white flower of a blameless life," we shall require grace to do it; and with the grace of God we can grow this grace, and can make the place of our feet glorious.

THE GRACE OF KINDNESS.

There is one other grace which I will take from the list of the apostle Paul. By the grace of God we are to grow the grace of "kindness." And again let us remember the conditions in which it has to be grown. It is easy to grow the grace of kindness among kind people; that requires very little skill in gardening, and very little effort and patience. But to grow kindness among the unkind, to give a flower for a blow, to return beneficence in response for ill-treatment, demands larger resources, but such as are abundantly found in the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. But try to imagine what would happen if this kind of thing were done. If we grew these flowers of chivalry among our enemies, how gloriously we should prove ourselves to be servants of God! And so the apostle urges us to use our resources in the grace of the Lord, and to grow the grace of kindness, the virtue of practical tenderness, of gentle fruits of life in Christ.

SUPREMACY OF THE GRACE FILLED SOUL.

One other piece of counsel the apostle gives us to prevent the futility of receiving the grace of God in vain; we are so to use the grace of God as to demonstrate the supremacy of the grace-filled soul. We are to prove that the soul which is in grace is the master of circumstances. Let me give one or two examples of how this is to be revealed. And here is the first: "As sorrowful, yet always rejoicing." We are to use grace in order to prove the supremacy of the soul even when life is passing along heavy roads, and though waters are out and journeying is full of difficulty and travail. There should be a certain buoyancy in the soul which suggests to the onlooker the uplifting power of the grace of God. The other day I heard a thrush singing on a very dark and dismal morning, as once before I heard a lark carolling in the mist. So is the follower of Christ to demonstrate the power of grace, even in unfriendly circumstances, and by a song in the night to manifest his communion with the gracious Lord.

And here is a second example: "As having nothing, yet possessing all things." Here again we have the threatening tyranny of circumstances, and here again we have the soul in triumphant ascendancy. In material possessions the soul is poor, in spiritual possessions the soul is a millionaire. The soul is encompassed by the treasures of grace, and even in circumstances of dire poverty its speech and disposition are redolent of wealth.

James Smetham tells of a fellow-believer in a Methodist class-meeting whose entire income did not amount to thirty shillings a week, but who used to give praise in the class-meeting as though he had twenty thousand pounds a year. The grace of God filled his soul with the treasures of heaven, and he manifested a spiritual supremacy even amid circumstances that were heavy and depressing. He used the grace of God to proclaim the supremacy of the grace-filled soul.

THE CHURCH DERELICT.

THOMAS CURTIS CLARK.

I CHOSE you from the nations' best,
My kingdom to declare;
To lift my brethren, wayward, lost,
From darkness and despair.

What mean these jangled notes I hear
Of jealousy and strife?
What once was called a house of prayer
With selfishness is rife.

O know ye not the thorny way
My feet in patience trod?
'Twas thus I sought again to lead
My people back to God.

Where is thy message, O my Church?
Is love's appeal in vain?
Was it for naught the Lamb of God
On Calvary was slain?

Mr. Morrison On Baptism

A New Approach to an Old Theme.

BY ARTHUR GORDON

AT FIRST thought it is hard to believe that there can be any vital interest in a book on baptism. To the average Christian the theme has a rather remote and secondary value. This is not because the ordinance is falling into disuse in the church, but because it is taken for granted in a placid and unemotional way, and the controversies that once surged around it have largely ceased to have meaning for the Christians of this age.

There are those, to be sure, who still react to the mention of baptism with quick and tense interest. There are people to whom the polemics of the subject are still momentous, and who keep at hand an arsenal of weapons for the discomfiture of dissenters from their views. But their number decreases, and their arguments seem increasingly unimportant to Christian people who are attempting to interpret the ideals of Jesus to the modern world.

A TIMELY APPEARANCE.

I think it extremely fortunate that Mr. Morrison's book should appear at such a time as this. It is a stimulating message to those who, wearied with the endless and profitless arguments with which an earlier generation busied itself, have ceased to care much about one of the great subjects of Christian concern through the centuries, and though they would not contemplate the abandonment of the ordinance, or depart from what they regard as its apostolic observance, they find it lacking in the values with which other forms of Christian service are invested.

This reaction is the perfectly natural outgrowth of the over-emphasis upon the external expression of baptism into which some sections of the church have been betrayed in the past. And the Disciples of Christ have in part shared in the false emphasis, and to that extent are paying the price of disillusionment and indifference. To many of our people baptism has still a commanding place in the program of Jesus, and a legal if not a magical efficacy in the attainment of Christian standing. Indeed there are Disciples whose conscience is more sensitive on the subject of baptism than on any other theme. They would regard grave moral delinquencies or serious church disorders with less concern than a departure from the traditional usages of our congregations in the practice of and insistence upon baptism after the prescribed manner.

A CONVINCING APPEAL.

The revolt from this type of over-stress goes further than we at first imagine. The protests are not always uttered, and sometimes they are only confessed in personal and vague unrest. Now and then have there been efforts to correct the legalism of much of our interpretation of baptism by insistence upon its richer meaning, and an attempt to clothe it with a fuller and more spiritual value. One of the sincere and worthful efforts to this end was made a few years since by Mr. Aylsworth in his little book on "The Spiritual Aspects of Baptism." But while there is value in the effort to invoke that complex of emotional experiences which baptism brings from the past to the sensitive soul, there is a more radical service which needs to be rendered in its behalf in order to rescue it alike from over-emphasis and from the lack of appreciation into which it has fallen.

Mr. Morrison has undertaken to render this service. And it speaks much for the sense of duty in his soul that he should select for his first book a subject so liable to misconstruction, and so lacking in appeal to the general religious public. He will write other books in the future. He is destined to take his place among the notable contributors to the literature of the Disciples. Of that fact he has given abundant proof in his editorial work. But we doubt if he will ever make a more timely or convincing appeal to the thoughtful and discerning minds among the Disciples than he does in this book.

A DEFENSE OF BAPTISM.

Mr. Morrison has the reputation of speaking frankly and radically upon questions which deeply concern him. From this fact it might be inferred that he would deal with baptism in some critical or revolutionary way, at variance with customary and accepted views. It is a surprise therefore to find that his treatment is rather a defense of baptism than a criticism. The book is a spirited and telling effort to vindicate the deeper values of baptism, and to save it from the most insidious dangers with which it is confronted today—the dangers on the one side of false emphasis, and on the other, of neglect.

Nor is there any doubt as to Mr. Morrison's convictions regarding the so-called mode of baptism. He makes it plain that the root meaning of baptism in the Greek is immersion, though he concedes, what every informed Disciple knows, that the argument from language is indecisive, and that the "scholarship of the world," to use a favorite Disciple phrase, is very far from being wholly on the immersionist side of the question. What is more significant is the fact that Christian usage took a term which usually denoted a physical act, and invested it with so much newer and fuller meaning that the original bodily act was all but forgotten in the moral values involved in the new relation.

NEWER AND HIGHER MEANING.

It is this newer and higher meaning to which the act of baptism attained in Christian usage that made it impossible to employ the word "immersion" as its equivalent. And this it was which made Mr. Campbell's substitution of "immerse" for "baptize" so distasteful alike to Baptists and Pedobaptists, and renders such a confusion of terms impossible even among Disciples, save in the case of extreme literalists. "Immerse" is a physical term, which we freely apply to any act of dipping. "Baptize" is a word which we cannot use today in any but the religious sense. It has acquired this value in the course of its employment in the Christian vocabulary.

As to the origin of baptism, Mr. Morrison is equally explicit and informing. The action was not of Christian creation. Back of its employment by John and Jesus lay the stretches of Jewish custom, both the ceremonial washings of the Old Testament, and the practice of proselyte baptism for the induction of non-Jews into the status of synagogue members. Those who insist on deriving baptism from direct divine command have labored nervously but hopelessly to invalidate the specific testimony of the Jewish sources. It has never been the task of spiritual religion to devise new external forms for its expression. This has been true neither of the Hebrew religion nor of Christianity.

Having thus cleared the ground for a consideration of the New Testament teaching on the subject of baptism, Mr. Morrison presents a study of its meaning in the work of John the Baptist, in the life of Jesus, and in the practice of the apostolic Church. As to whether Jesus commanded baptism, we are not quite sure that we follow the author. He clearly points out the textual groundlessness of the baptismal dogma. But he seems at the end of the argument to concede that Jesus may have uttered such a command, as the early usage of the church would suggest. This it seems to us goes beyond the evidence. Nor does it consist with the manifest purpose of our Lord to absolve his people from the legalism under which it was the evil fortune of religion to have suffered for so long a time.

A VITAL AND ENDURING SERVICE.

But when he develops his thesis as to the social meaning and value of baptism he is on very sure ground, and in this part of his book we believe he has rendered a vital and enduring service to the Church. The reader of the book will perceive as never before that while the historic contention of the Disciples for immersion is valid and is the only satisfactory attitude upon the vexed question of mode, the real meaning and value of baptism lie in a realm removed by broad diameters from this region of controversy, and that baptism, among the Disciples and among all Christians, invites a new and higher evaluation.

The book is going to be widely read. It challenges many traditional views, not only among our own people, but as well in the broader Christian world. It will provoke discussion, because it disturbs some assumptions that were supposed to be established verities. It will be attacked both by those who regard it as too radical, and those who think it too conservative. But it will not be read with indifference by any, and we venture to believe it will leave in every mind a more satisfying conviction of the timeless and perpetual value of an institution hallowed by the observance of our Lord, and enriched by the sanction and practice of the Church through the centuries.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

WRITE TO MR. LOKEN!

HE HAS the courage of his ideals. He is unwilling to preach Christian unity without practicing it. The custom of withholding the "hand of fellowship" from a Christian person who "comes forward" bringing a credential from a Presbyterian or Congregational church of Christ unless such Christian person has been immersed became intolerable to him.

He could not be loyal to Christ and debar from his fellowship any soul whom Christ had received into His Church. He frankly told his congregation so. They responded with a declaration that henceforth they would practice Christian unity as well as plead for it.

That was two years ago.

The other day the missionary convention of Northern California—in the name of Christian unity!—excommunicated the church and minister from fellowship in its work! Their delegates—Christian women and men—were compelled to arise in the face of the whole assembly and walk out of the convention hall.

Nothing like that ever happened before in a convention of Disciples of Christ. The decree of excommunication declared that the church had "ceased to be a Christian Church," BECAUSE IT RECEIVED CHRISTIANS INTO ITS MEMBERSHIP!

California is a long way from the center of the Disciples' strength. Mr. Loken, no doubt, feels the loneliness of the position into which Christ's disciples have thrust him. Perhaps he is wondering if the St. Louis publisher who led the movement against him and his church represents the temper and attitude of the whole brotherhood of Disciples.

Show him how preposterous such a suggestion is! Show him that he belongs to a spiritual fellowship of souls who share his ideals even if we do not all possess his courage. Do not let us get so absorbed in a discussion of abstract principles that we forget to say the word of cheer to the man that needs it.

Write to Mr. Loken! Whether you are minister or layman, a leader or a very humble marcher in the ranks—write to him, and do it now!

A PERSONAL OPINION SIMPLY.

QUITE regardless of their agreement or disagreement with the practice of the Berkeley church, practically all the generous-minded leaders of the Disciples' brotherhood deplore the sectarian position to which Manager A. C. Smither is attempting to commit the Christian Evangelist. His leadership of the forces of reactionism at the California convention is made the subject of the most severe criticism in a considerable body of correspondence now being received at this office, not alone from men who are known as "progressives" but from many who hold to what they are pleased to describe as "the middle of the road."

Mr. Smither's demand that a Disciples' convention should put itself in the position of judging the orthodoxy of a church of Christ and of excluding such a church from its fellowship while that church sincerely confesses its faith in Jesus Christ and its allegiance to his will, will find no approving support among his informed and highminded brethren.

Dr. Garrison, editor emeritus of the Evangelist, will not approve the present attitude of the Evangelist. In an excellent article appearing in that paper recently, Dr. Garrison states with characteristic lucidity the broad principle of fellowship upon which a movement for Christian unity like this of ours must rest. Writing of the use of instrumental music in public worship, and of the expediency of societies and boards in general missionary work, he says:

> If the brethren who claimed the right to use instrumental music in the worship and to organize missionary boards and societies for the spread of the gospel, had required their brethren who opposed these expediencies to adopt them, under penalty of being disfellowshiped, they would have been equally guilty of violating our principles of unity. If today our national or state conventions should make any given form of co-operation a test of fellowship, they would be schismatics, according to the New Testament, and according to our own historic position. Methods of co-operation we must have, and the majority should decide what method is most efficient. If any have conscientious scruples against co-operation under such a method, through a misconception of our Christian liberty, or for any other reason, they have the right to co-operate on some other basis that commends itself to their judgment and conscience, but not to make such method a ground for division.

Changing what ought to be changed the same words would apply to the Pacific coast situation. The California convention made itself a schismatic and sectarian body by expelling from its co-operative life a congregation which had during its entire history participated in that fellowship and which sent delegates in good faith to this year's gathering.

No one who knows the broad spirited men who compose the directorate of the Christian Evangelist can imagine that Drs. Charles S. Medbury, Peter Ainslie, W. F. Richardson, C. J. Tanner and the rest will for a moment give their consent to the launching of the Disciples of Christ upon a policy of excommunication whose end no man can foresee, except as history teaches that its end is confusion and shame. Counting out Mr. Long, it is doubtful if there is a single man on his board that will sustain Mr. Smither in his un-Disciple and un-Christian course.

It represents his personal opinion merely, and is so to be taken, with only such weight as the brotherhood is willing to attach to the personal opinion of A. C. Smither.

FOR THE READER TO JUDGE.

ANYBODY can see the disposition with which A. C. Smither approached the Berkeley situation by reading simply the following from his account in the Christian Evangelist:

> That Brother Loken is not in agreement with our brethren on the subject of baptism is confirmed by the following statement from him in an editorial in the June issue of his paper:
>
> "Every denomination has its denominational hobbleskirt, which it must get rid of before it can talk business on Christian union. In our own brotherhood it is close immersion, and it is perfectly obvious to every one who has seriously faced the problem of union that our participation in the union of Christian people means the taking off of that obsolete and old-fashioned garment."
> It is perfectly evident to my mind that no church can long be in fellowship with our great movement for Christian union whose pastor refers to Christian baptism as "an obsolete" and "old-fashioned" "hobbleskirt."

Mr. Loken calls "close immersion" (by which he evidently means "close membership") a "hobbleskirt," and Mr. Smither charges him with referring profanely to Christian baptism! It is as if Mr. Smither should characterize "close communion" in a similar way and some one should take him to task for speaking profanely of the Lord's Supper!

Mr. Loken holds the act of Christian baptism in fully as reverent a spirit as Mr. Smither possibly can. He practices it just as the Disciples have always practiced it, and in no other way, and he has not the slightest intention or desire to practice it in any other way.

We shall have to leave to the reader to say whether Mr. Loken's critic honestly misunderstood what Mr. Loken actually said, or whether he saw a chance to make a telling point at Mr. Loken's expense and, without scruple for truth, made it.

A CONVENTION OF CHURCHES.

WITH the approach of the annual convention date the new character of our national gathering grows into higher relief. Until last year our conventions were simply mass meetings of individuals. The few business problems that came before them were pretty largely matters of routine, the main problems being decided for the convention by the several missionary boards. With the new order, however, there will be more and more attention given to the BUSINESS in which the churches are engaged.

Besides two or three longer sessions for transaction of business there will be a deliberative session of the General Convention every morning at 9:30 o'clock. Thus there will, no doubt, be brought into the deliberations of the whole body of delegates many matters which have hitherto gone by default for want of time or place to consider them, and many matters hitherto decided by a few officials whose decisions were usually ratified by the mass meeting without serious discussion.

There may be objections brought against the clean-cut organization of the delegates into a deliberative body, but it is hoped President Henry's wise policy of allowing visitors and delegates to remain undiscriminated in last year's convention at Toronto, will be regarded by President Bell as wise only for last year, the first year of the new order, and not as setting a precedent for Atlanta or for future conventions.

The time has come for the churches to have their convention, and to have it organized and conducted in an orderly and unambiguous fashion.

A MISSIONARY ENTERPRISE.

RELIGIOUS newspapers, as a rule, do not pay for themselves. Neither do churches; neither do colleges. But how absurd it is to call the deficit on a religious newspaper a "loss." Some one has recently stated the case very pointedly in these words:

> It would be just as good sense to declare that a church that expended $12,000 in efficient service for humanity last year had "lost" that sum. Neither the Church nor the State has a single educational institution in the country that can run one year on the income of its students. All of them must have money provided either by taxes or endowment funds in excess of that paid by the students.
> The religious editor is a minister, whether he bears the title "Reverend" or not. His paper is his pulpit. If his paper is required to make money, and if he must determine its policy so as to make money, it would be the duty of every high-minded Christian editor to resign.
> Religious journalism belongs on a missionary basis. It is the church's greatest missionary. It is her most far-reaching educational agency. In performing its natural function it ought not be compelled to yield profits any more than a college or a local church ought to make profits for the president or pastor or the trustees.
> Every Christian ought to GIVE money to support the religious journal that represents his ideals, that is advancing the cause which he believes ought to prevail, just as naturally as he gives money to support his local church or to support Christian colleges or to support a missionary on the foreign field.

These remarks are prompted by the receipt during the past year of several generous gifts for the support of the Christian Century and the extension of its circulation. What Mr. Long alone did in making a large gift to the Christian Evangelist should be duplicated for The Christian Century by the co-operative gifts of the many who believe that upon the success of the cause which this paper represents depends not only the efficiency but the destiny of the Disciples of Christ.

CAN AMERICA GAIN ANYTHING?

EUROPE is concerned over the fact that a general war there would profit the United States. We could begin by buying back at low prices the American stocks and bonds held in Europe on which it would be necessary for those countries to realize and could then sell them breadstuffs at advanced rates and so get our money back. Sir George Paish, editor of the London Statist says America can sell her crops to Europe, and Americans "can buy back from Europe great quantities of securities at attractive prices in payment for foodstuffs, raw material and even manufactured goods exported from the United States."

Further he says, "A great war in Europe would give the United States an opportunity of assuming the position of world banker by supplying capital freely to countries and individuals in all parts of the world who need it and can provide the required security. Should the American people take advantage of the golden opportunity thus afforded, then the outbreak of war in Europe will mean not diminished but increased prosperity for the people of the United States."

President Wilson has been quick to see the possible advantage to America in the registration of shipping under the American flag. It is even suggested that the world trade might be put under the stars and stripes. This would be a decided change, for we are now a nation almost destitute of ships. Ninety-six per cent of all our foreign freight and 98 per cent of that bound for Europe goes under other flags.

Nevertheless, the net results of war are evil and that continually. A great war would diminish the purchasing power of Europe for years to come, and thereby limit American exports. In the long run the advantage of Europe is our advantage. The welfare of the world stands or falls as our Lowell put it thus in his "Present Crisis:"

> "So, the Evil's triumph sendeth, with a terror and a chill,
> Under continent to continent, the sense of coming ill.
> For mankind are one in spirit, and an instinct bears along,

MR. LOCKHART'S "MONROE DOCTRINE."

A CLEVERER expression has hardly been coined of late than that used in the article by Rev. W. J. Lockhart in last week's Christian Century. Describing how a young community became conscious of its religious task, he says that the citizens determined to be united in religion as they were united in all other common interests.

Nine denominations asked to plant missions in the community, but the people declared they did not want any denomination at all. And Mr. Lockhart says that he preached for three years "a sort of 'Monroe Doctrine'" to the effect "that we should consider it an unfriendly act for any denomination to come in and endeavor to establish a denominational church."

There's clear thinking back of those words. The denominational church is an impertinence. Get used to saying it, preachers! Do not be apologetic about it! Say straight out that a Methodist church, a Baptist church, a Presbyterian church, a Disciples' church (if it belong to the Disciples' denomination, and conforms to the sectarian practices of that denomination) is an impertinence!

Teach the communities where there are no churches and the communities where churches are already established that there is not one denominational feature of a denominational church that is in any degree vital to the welfare of the community. And show them that the denominational interests which a denominational church has to serve are not only irrelevant to the religious life of their community but harmful to it. Teach them that religion must be a community affair primarily, and not a denominational affair.

The Disciples of Christ started out a century ago with a message not unlike this "Monroe Doctrine" of Mr. Lockhart's and a program not greatly different from that embodied in the church he lately organized in the Des Moines' suburb. But they soon became involved to certain denominational doctrines of there own, and forget their non-denominational program.

And when Mr. Lockhart organized that non-denominational church of Christ under the protection of his "Monroe Doctrine" he felt compelled to explain that it was quite "outside the Disciples!"

The Christian Century would like nothing better than to defend the thesis that, in the light of the Disciples' origin, the litle Urbandale is truly INSIDE the Disciple movement.

Bruce Barton on the Rural Church.

The Congregationalist and Christian World is running a series of articles by Bruce Barton, special writer, on the rural church. This series is the result of actual investigations on the part of Mr. Barton in three rural counties of each of four states, Missouri, Ohio, Indiana and Tennessee. His research has been made, however, from his desk in a New York City office. The first article is too extended to consider in detail but the opening paragraphs are pointed and revealing. Mr. Barton writes:

"Actually, of course, I have been here at the desk all through the week; but so far as personal, dependable knowledge of those various counties is concerned, and the development that has gone on in their economic and social and religious life, I know them better than the men and women who have actually lived in them during the past decade. I know their people; the crops they raise and how much is realized on them; the schools they have; their interests and recreations; their lodges; and their churches. For in each of those twelve counties the Department of Church and Country Life of the Presbyterian Church has had trained investigators working, making a complete survey. The results of those surveys tell more about each one of the twelve counties than any dozen old settlers together could tell. They tell among other things that there are 760 churches in the twelve counties. AND HALF OF THEM ARE DYING, ONE-FIFTH ARE ALREADY DEAD."

Hindu Christians Appeal to Americans.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in India sent an appeal to the General Assembly in this country asking all Christians in this land and in Canada to treat the Indian immigrants coming to this country in such a way as not to block the advance of Christianity in India. One cannot but see in this appeal an implication that influences in America are not exactly helpful toward the upbuilding of Christian character. For this fact let America take the shame. The appeal reads as follows: "We have heard with great concern of the great number of people of India, largely from the Punjah, who have gone to the United States and to Canada. Our concern is lest they come under influences which will harden their hearts against the message of Christ, and cause them to return to India embittered in spirit and estranged from the Church of Christ. In their behalf we are impelled to ask you, our Christian brethren, not to forget to put out a helping hand to these strangers among you. They will respond to your sympathy and appreciate your efforts in their behalf. It is not for us to tell you in what way you may help these strangers, countrymen of ours. We write to assure you that any help you give them will be a help to the Church of Christ in India."

Protestants Gain Power in Latin-America.

The spread of Protestantism throughout near-by countries of Latin-America is reported by teachers from Cuba and Mexico now in the United States. The Continent reports that Miss Esther Crooks, a Baptist mission teacher, has asserted that Protestantism in thirty years will prevail throughout Cuba. The need on the Island, she says, is a purer manhood and womanhood, which religious enlightenment is bringing about. Miss Anna Bartley, one of the oldest missionaries in Cuba, says Protestants, through mission schools, rapidily are creating a national vitality which is rejuvenating the people of the island. Miss Beulah Hume in Boston recently pointed out the opportunity in Mexico for Protestant schools. Religious conditions in the war torn nation are not so bad as painted. The system of education established by Porfirio Diaz, although it brought about his downfall, has turned the eyes of the people toward spiritual enlightenment.

Woman's Congress of Missions, at Exposition.

According to the corresponding secretary, Mrs. L. E. Hicks, the purpose of the Woman's Congress of Missions at the Panama-Pacific Exposition to be held next year, is to carry on a part of the work of the Committee of One Hundred appointed by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America for religious work during the Exposition of 1915. A General Session of the Woman's Congress of Missions is to be held during the first week in June, 1915. The best speakers on missionary and kindred subjects from all over the world will be present. The programme will be of world-wide interest and all Christian women attending the meetings will have an unprecedented opportunity to gain information and inspiration. Missionary societies should begin now to plan for their leaders, at least, to have the privilege of being present. The meetings will be held in the new Civic Auditorium of San Francisco. Also, on stated days throughout the Exposition, different phases of Christian work among various nationalities will be presented, and on other days pleasant social events will bring women from all over the world together, giving an opportunity for better personal acquaintance and a wider knowledge of the work of the growing kingdom of God.

Warring Germans Want Bibles.

An appeal has reached the American Bible Society, whose headquarters are in New York City, from Germany for Bibles in German, Russian, French, and Polish for use among the soldiers, and for money to aid in distributing them. Such requests it may be quite beyond the power of the Society to meet in view of the difficulty of either securing them from Europe or sending them from the comparatively small stock of Scriptures now on hand. It is earnestly hoped that the Christian people of America will be ready to aid the society in whatever measures may be found necessary. Any gifts made for the purpose will be received and used as the way may open. The Board of Managers has taken the following action, which will be forwarded as soon as possible to the various Bible Societies in Great Britain and on the Continent: "The Board of Managers is deeply moved and distressed by the horrors of the war in Europe, and deems it fitting to give expression to its sympathy for all those of every nation who must suffer anguish and bereavement. It is the earnest desire of the Society to do whatever it can to help them either directly or through our sister Societies in Europe. It directs that copies of this action be transmitted to such Societies as can be reached.—The Secretaries."

Dr. Palmore's Will.

The will of the late W. B. Palmore, Methodist editor of St. Louis, sets apart his three-fourths interest in the St. Louis Christian Advocate as a perpetual inheritance for the Superannuated preachers and widows and orphans, under the care of the three Conferences of the M. E. Church, South, in Missouri, specifying that ex-Gov. Lon V. Stephens of St. Louis, Hon. Jno. A. Rich, of Slater, and S. P. Emmons of Mexico, representing the St. Louis, Southwest Missouri and Missouri Conferences, respectively, shall constitute a Commission or Board, which shall be self-perpetuating, a vacancy created by the death, removal or inability of any member, being filled by the remaining members, with the understanding that each Conference must have a representative.

Lord's Day Congress at San Francisco.

President Wilson has accepted an invitation to become the honorary president of the "Lord's Day Congress," to be held in San Francisco next year. Numerous associations formed to promote the observance of the Lord's day will take part, from other countries as well as the United States. Among them are the following European: Belgium—Association for Sunday Rest in Belgium and The Social League of Buyers.

Denmark—The Danish Sunday Rest Society, Copenhagen.

England—The Central Sunday Closing Association, London and The Imperial Sunday Alliance, England.

France—The French Protestant Society for Sunday Observance, Paris.

Germany—The German Central League for Sunday Observance.

Switzerland—Central Swiss Committee for the Observance of Sunday, Geneva, and several others in Switzerland.

Sunday School Secretary For Philippines.

Arrangements have just been completed, with the co-operation of the American Bible Society, by which Rev. J. L. McLaughlin is to be the official representative of the World's Sunday-school Association in the Philippines. Mr. McLaughlin has been secretary of the Philippine Islands Sunday-school Union, giving such time as was possible to its affairs in connection with his duties as an agent of the American Bible Society. He will now be a paid secretary, giving to the work of the World's Sunday-school Association one-half of his time, which, with the full time of a Filipino assistant, will be equivalent to full time service. Mr. McLaughlin has a genius for executive work, and a rare passion for this service, together with a large Sunday-school vision. Under his leadership the work in the Islands should go forward by leaps and bounds. The new secretary has had a splendid team-mate in the person of Rev. Harry Farmer, who has been the enthusiastic chairman of the Educational Committee of the Philippine Islands Sunday-school Union.

"Fraternity Sunday" in Chicago.

The Church Federation Council is making large plans looking toward the observance of Fraternity Sunday, Sept. 6, in Chicago. It is expected that there will be in the city then 75,000 Knights of Pythias. An effort is being made to have the saloons of Chicago closed on that Sunday. Practically all of the fraternal orders of the country now exclude from membership saloonkeepers and bartenders.

Jewish Rabbis in Session.

One of the most interesting religious conferences held in this country is that of the Jewish Rabbis. They have recently closed a great convention at Detroit. A unique step taken was an effort to overcome in every possible way the prejudice of Christians and people in general against the Jew.

Chicago Professor Dies in London.

Robert Francis Harper, professor of Semitic languages and literatures, University of Chicago, died recently in London. He was a brother of the late W. R. Harper, president of the university. As a writer on many subjects pertaining to Assyrian and Babylonian research he was well known. Since 1907 Doctor Harper had been editor of the American Journal of Semitic Languages, and for some years served as associate editor of the Biblical World and the American Journal of Theology.

Japanese Churches Unite.

The Japanese Presbyterian Church of San Francisco, has been holding united services with the Japanese Congregational church during July with such success that it is planned soon to organize the "Japanese Church of Christ," the same plan of organization lately effected in Japan. It is hoped eventually to have the same union extended to all the Japanese Christian churches in the state, both Presbyterian and Congregational.

Winona Assembly in Successful Season.

Extensive preparations are being made to provide for visitors at Winona Lake Bible conference Aug. 21-30. The season so far at Winona has been profitable and full of encouragement, according to officials of the association. This is good news, considering the fact that the association, early in the season, was reported to be $900,000 in debt. All cottages are occupied this year, and there is an activity which has not been observed in recent years. There have been 600 students at Winona College summer school and the numbers at the Moody Bible School have also been larger than last year. Among the speakers at the assembly this season are: Dr. F. B. Meyer, Rev. Charles Brown, Doctors J. Stuart Holden, John McNeill, J. Wilbur Chapman, Mark A. Matthews, W. E. Beiderwolf, J. K. McClurkin, James M. Gray, James I. Vance, and many others.

Says Washington Gladden:

"It is better to say, this one thing I do, than to say, these forty things I dabble in."

Silvester Horne's Last Speech.

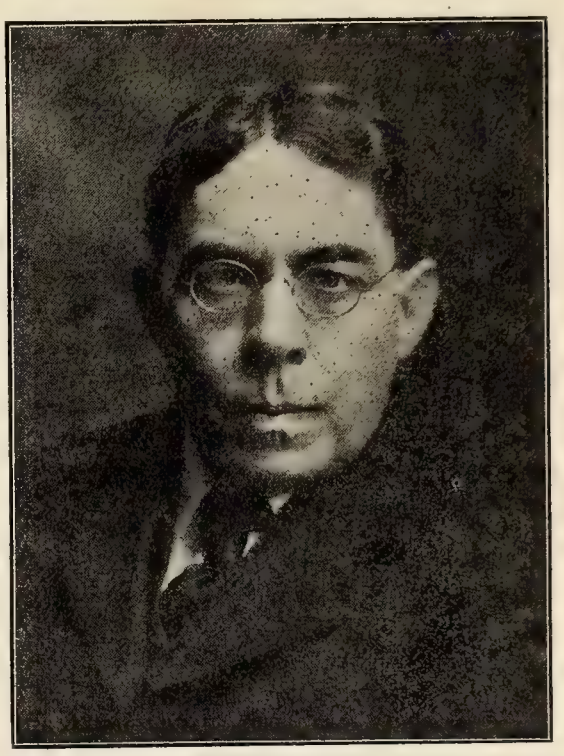
The last address made by Rev. C. Silvester Horne before his sudden and lamented death was at the Pierce Grammar School in Brooklyn, Mass., before six hundred bright boys and girls in their teens. It was on a rule which he said had been given him in early life, which he declared to be the one rule for living. It was, "Learn to ride the horse that threw you." He applied it to their sports, their studies and to their personal character; and then spoke of a great leader of old whose followers were once dispirited in their fishing expedition, and who might have been excused from going on with it; yet he told them to keep on doing what they had been doing, and then success came.

English Preachers in Suffrage War.

Leading ministers in England, such as Drs. R. J. Campbell, R. H. Horton and J. H. Shakespeare, have sent a letter to Premier Asquith vigorously protesting against forcible feeding of suffragette prisoners.

Church Peace Conference Fights War

[Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, D. D., secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, has just sent the following cable dispatch from London to the headquarters of the council in New York.—The Editor.]



Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, Secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, Who is Working for Peace in Europe.

The Church Peace Conference, which had been called to meet at Constance on the border between Germany and Switzerland August 2, met, notwithstanding war conditions, on that date. Thirteen nations and thirty-five different denominations were represented. Many delegates were not able to reach the seat of the conference. About fifty American delegates were present.

Dr. Frederick Lynch was elected secretary. Addresses were delivered by Mr. Edwin D. Mead, Professor Sidney L. Gulick, Dr. Frederick Lynch, Dr. Charles S. Macfarland and Bishop E. R. Hendrix, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Resolutions were adopted and sent to the European rulers and to President Wilson.

The American delegates left Constance on Monday, August 3, by the last train to Holland, under the special protection of the Emperor of Germany and of the Grand Duchess of Baden. They arrived in London on Tuesday night and reassembled there in conference.

Two of the delegates were arrested on the way from Constance to Holland by mistake (Doctors Laidlaw and Lord) but their release was secured the next day.

The conference is earnest and determined in its efforts for peace, and passed strong resolutions, making large plans for a future campaign for peace through the churches.

Americans attending the sessions in Constance and in London include: Bishop E. R. Hendrix, of the M. E. Church, South; Bishop Luther B. Wilson, of the M. E. Church; Rev. Frederick Lynch, D. D., secretary of the Church Peace Union; Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America; Rev. Sidney L. Gulick, D. D., of Japan; Rev. W. C. Bitting, D. D., corresponding secretary of the Northern Baptist Convention; Rev. George William Douglas, D. D., canon of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine; Rev. Henry M. McCracken, D. D., ex-chancellor of New York University; Rev. William P. Merrill, D. D., pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church, New York City; Rev. Philip S. Moxom, D. D., Springfield, Mass.; Rev. Charles L. Thompson, of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, New York City; Rev. E. S. Tipple, D. D., president of Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J.; Rev. Paul Revere Frothingham, D. D., of Boston, Mass.; Mr. Robert H. Gardiner, secretary of the Protestant Episcopal Commission on Church

The American delegates are sending strong resolutions to President Wilson. The conference believes that the present situation indicates that the old political order is breaking down, and that, as the outcome of the present war, it will crumble to pieces. The churches have the prophecy of a new order that will save the nations.

ANOTHER CABLEGRAM.

On Saturday, August 8, an additional cablegram was received from Dr. Macfarland from Liverpool, stating that Prof. Sidney L. Gulick and himself were sailing on the Laconia, and adding that the conference was continued in London. The American delegates have issued a strong report to the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, which was prepared by Bishop E. R. Hendrix, of the M. E. Church, South, George William Douglas, D. D., canon of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York City, William P. Merrill, D. D., pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church, New York City, Bishop Luther B. Wilson, of the M. E. Church, Frederick Lynch, D. D., secretary of the Church Peace Union, and Charles S. Macfarland, D. D., secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

Of Human Interest

"No Bad Children," says Lindsey.

Judge Ben M. Lindsey, of Denver, who won fame as the "children's judge," simply will not believe in bad children. And here is one of the best stories to prove that point:

It was that of a thirteen-year-old boy who was brought into the juvenile court on a charge of truancy. Tim was a bright-looking little chap, and the judge expected that his kindly admonition would bear immediate results, but he was disappointed, for at the end of the fortnight, when Tim was ordered to bring his teacher's report, in accordance with the system organized by Judge Lindsey, he presented a sad record of almost continual absence from school.

"You must do better than this," said the judge.

"Yes, sir," was the answer, but at the next report there was no improvement. "Tim will stay out of school to work," wrote the teacher.

"Tim," said Judge Lindsey, looking across the table where he always sits with cozy informality among the boys brought into his courts, "don't you know that if your mother was living she'd want you to go to school? Your aunt is good to you and gives you a home, and you don't have to work. Now's the time when you ought to be studying. You can work when you are a man."

"My father's a man, and he don't work!" blurted out Tim. "He went off and left mother an' me. I guess that's what killed her." The boy gulped down a sob, and the judge said kindly, "Your mother wished you to be a good man, and you must begin by obeying the law and going to school."

Tim's report still continued to show absences from school, and to one report the teacher added her opinion that it was hopeless to try to keep Tim at his studies. Still the judge was not discouraged, and he spoke again to the boy, urging him to mend his ways, and was answered only by an almost sudden stolidity of expression which did not seem to promise well. But at the end of the next two weeks Tim appeared with a happy face and a much improved report-card.

He pulled a soiled and crumpled paper from his pocket and handed it to the judge. "I'm goin' to remember all the things you told me, and I'm goin' to school regular, now I got that done," he said with some pride. Judge Lindsey examined the paper, which proved to be a receipted bill, and found that, little by little, Tim had paid $50 for a headstone at his mother's grave.

"My boy, is that what you've been doing all these months?"

"I wanted her to have a monument, judge." Tim furtively wiped away the moisture in his eyes. "She's done a lot for me; that's all I could do for her now."

He Knew What He Wanted.

Not long ago Bishop Hartzell was visiting the mission station at Old Umtali. His attention was attracted by the approach of a company of singing, shouting natives, led by their chief, Umtassa, head of a large number of villages or kraals, who had come to pay his respects to the "great white chief." During the interview, says the Christian Herald, conducted through an interpreter, the bishop explained the work which the missionaries were trying to do, and endeavored to convince Umtassa that he should be friendly. At the conclusion of the palava, and following the custom of that section, Bishop Hartzell told the chief that he wanted to show his kindly feeling by a present, and thinking that the black man would probably desire some trinket or gift of little value, as is usually the case, asked Umtassa what he would like. The chief said he would tell him the next day.

ABOUT PREACHERS AND OTHERS.

The Sermon Gripped Her.

A little girl in a Hudson River congregation was very attentive while the pastor preached what every one regarded as an unusually interesting sermon. When she was asked what she thought of the sermon she said that it was a fine one, that there were 242 motions in it. She then informed her parents that every Sunday she counts the gestures of the minister, and this sermon had more than any other up to date.

Repentance at Convenience.

An old negro parson in a Southern church was denouncing theft to his congregation, when he said:

"If there is any member of this congregation who is guilty of theft he had better repent at once and be saved."

On his way home he was stopped by old Rastus, who had listened to the sermon intently.

"Don't you think, parson, that next Sunday will do just as well as tonight to repent?" asked Rastus.

"But, Rastus, why not repent tonight and be saved, man?"

"Well, parson, it's this way," explained Rastus. "I want jist one mo' chicken fo' tomorrow's dinner, and I know wha I can get dat chicken widout bein' caught tonight."

"Well, Rastus, I don't know what to say, so I think I will take dinner with you tomorrow and then talk the matter over with you."

Scripture That "Fit."

Verses of scripture seem to fit in for every conceivable circumstance of life, as for instance, when a certain good Methodist parson was being informed by busy nurses that the probability was that he was about to be thrice blessed by the arrival of three little strangers, the poor man, momentarily dismayed at the thought of his scant income, cried out in the language of Rev. 9:12, and said, "One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter."

A Story Told by Ian Maclaren.

A story illustrating the reticence of the Scotch regarding their private affairs was once told by Ian Maclaren. A train was at a railroad station, when a porter put his head into a car and called out: "Any one in this car for Doun? Change for Doun! Any one for Doun?" No one moved; and in a few minutes the train was speeding along, not to stop again for nearly an hour. Then an old Scotch woman turned to a lady sitting near her and said, "I'm for Doun, but I'd no tell that man so."

Early the following morning the bishop was awakened by the missionary, who stood in the doorway with Umtassa.

"I thought it all over," said the latter, "and now I know that I want a white iron bed like white people have."

The bishop was unable to reply to the somewhat unusual request. Such articles are very expensive in that country. To refuse the chief, after having himself suggested the giving of a present, would be quite impossible: so the bishop told the missionary to see that a bedstead was brought out from Umtali, and then indicated that the interview was closed. But Umtassa had not finished.

"And you can send along with the bed a mattress, some sheets, and two pillows," he added.

Bishop Hartzell, in telling this story, never fails to remark upon the somewhat surprising effect often produced by the efforts of missionaries to Christianize and civilize the natives of Africa.

Who Wrote the Doxology?

How many times have you heard the Doxology sung in your church? This song has been called the Universal Hymn.

It might be of interest to know where the Doxology came from and who wrote it anyway. The Presbyterian Advance offers some interesting information concerning the author of the hymn.

The Doxology was written by Thomas Ken, who was born in 1637 and died in 1711. He was a graduate from New College, Oxford. His stepsister, Anne, was the wife of Isaac Walton, the gentle fisherman, a connection which brought Ken from his boyhood days under the influence of this gentle and devout man.

Ken possessed, among other talents, a wonderfully clear, sweet voice, and the most characteristic reminiscence of his university life is the mention made by Anthony Wood, that in the musical gathering of his time, "Thomas Ken, of New College, junior, would sometimes be among us and sing his part."

When he was twenty-five years old he was ordained, and some years later he was made prebentary of the cathedral at Winchester and chaplain to the Bishop. It was during this time that he wrote the hymn which begins with "Awake, my soul, and with the sun," and closes with the Doxology.

The Miner's Bath.

Mrs. Rose Pastor Phelps Stokes said at a recent sociological convention in New York: "The economies that some of the rich would force upon the poor! Why, they'd have the poor as impossibly economical as the miner's wife in Trinidad.

"This woman said to a missionary:

"'Talk about economy! Well, sir, every night when my Bill comes home I shove him in the bathtub, clothes and all, and after he gets out I sieve the water and make briquettes of it for the fire.'"

Late In the Day.

Orville Wright, apropos of his new safety appliance for aeroplanes, said at a dinner in Dayton:

"In a short time, now, there will be no more aeroplane accidents. In a short time there will be no more aeroplane jokes, either.

"I heard a new joke yesterday. A young woman rushed into an insurance office and cried:

"'One life policy, quick! My husband's biplane's falling!'"

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

"An Old Kentucky Darkey"

A CHARACTER SKETCH.

Her name was Aunt Mimy, and when she died a few weeks ago, the community was the poorer, because of the passing of a type that is fast disappearing from our midst. She had reached young womanhood when the war began, and had known something of "slave times," as she called them. She was proud of having belonged to the "quality," and often boasted that she was brought up by the Warfields and Wickliffes. I supposed, of course, that she was a house servant, from the intimate way in which she talked of her people, but I could not account for the brusque manners if that were the case—for negroes are the most imitative of beings, and generally reflect the deportment of those with whom they live. I have never seen more beautiful countesy anywhere, than in some of the old coachmen, and body servants, and black "mammies" of bygone days. In an unguarded moment, however, Aunt Mimy let drop the fact that she had been a "field hand" on old Marster's farm—and her lack of polish was explained.

But though she lacked the training given by those unequalled schools of domestic science, an old southern home with its ample hospitalities, yet she was a person of unusual intelligence, and in some way had learned to be an exquisite cook, an accomplished laundress, and (when she chose) an expert housemaid.

When she came to me to hire, I asked if she had a recommendation, and when she handed me the required paper, she remarked in an offhand manner, "Thomas Ann, your las' cook, gives you a good name."

She was especially expert in bread-making, and her waffles, her batter cakes, her muffins, her beaten biscuit, her yeast bread were all perfect after their kind. Her rolls were works of art, and when she brought in a plateful, tender, light, and golden brown, one was always expected to say, "Aunt Mimy, these rolls are perfectly delicious."

If by some mischance, both master and mistress should fail in the expected tribute, she would immediately demand, "What's the matter with them rolls?"

* * *

When asked one day how old she was, she replied, "I'm gittin' to be an ole 'oman; I speck I'm near fifty year old."

As the mistress of the house was full fifty herself, and felt she was still in her prime, she insisted that Aunt Mimy must have passed her half century. That set her to musing on her age, and that night at supper she asked the head of the family, "What year wuz it, when Mr. Henry Clay wuz buried?"

When she was told, she said, "I wuz a gal ten or twelve year ole then—how ole am I now, boss?"

When informed that she must be about seventy, she was much impressed, and observed. "I sholy is gittin to be an ole 'oman!"

She had an irritable temper, and when anything, either real or fancied, troubled her, she always lifted her voice (lifted it pretty high, too,) and sang loud and long; not your gospel songs, or old-fashioned hymns, but one of those plantation chants, that must have been brought over by the negroes from Africa where the men would start on a low, monotonous key, and the women would strike in on a high, wavering strain, that blended in perfect rhythm and harmony with the male voices. Wash day was always a trial to her, and she sang steadily through the whole performance, beginning with the men's level chant and then soaring into the sweet, shrill recitation of the woman—keeping time with her work, whether she was scrubbing on the washboard, or wringing out the wet garments; sometimes, as she hung the clothes on the line, she would take stately steps, or make measured gestures, and never stopped singing until the last piece fluttered in the morning air. These musical performances were a trial when visitors came in, and a member of the family once asked why I didn't make Aunt Mimy stop. "Because I don't dare to, lest a worse thing might befall me," I confessed candidly. "You must remember it's the habit of a lifetime, and seems to be a necessary vent for her irritation and ill temper."

She was devoted to children, and the little boy of the family was always a welcome visitor to the kitchen. She would entertain him with songs and stories, as though he had been a person (or several persons) of her own age, and often concluded an animated narration with "An gentlemen, I jess laughed"—and the little listener always laughed, too.

She was very fond of dressing him in his best, and taking him to visit some friend or relative. She had a little grandson, who was the apple of her eye, and sometimes would surreptitiously take him along on these excursions. After one of them, she remarked in an agreeable manner, "Miss Idy, Jeems is an intrustin' chile. When I goes long the streets, people stops me to ask his name, an' say how smart an' purty he is."

While the proud mother was hugging the "intrustin' chile," Aunt Mimy looked meditatively at the little grandson, who was standing by, and said in an insinuating manner:

"Yas'h, an' black as Wickliffe is, people does jess the same by him."

She was a great church member, and was always around with a card, on which people were supposed to write their names and contribute to some religious enterprise. It was a source of mortification, that she did not confine herself to members of the family, but would levy tribute on visitors and guests; remonstrance was in vain, and she would retort, "It never done nobody no harm to give to the Lord; an' they don' have to give—this is a free country now, praise de Lord!"

But in spite of her ardor for her church, Aunt Mimy had no compunction about replenishing her larder with things from the storeroom and kitchen. She could be trusted absolutely, as far as money and other household goods were concerned, but regarded all articles of food as fair prey. The mistress of the house knowing this infirmity, would try and protect herself by keeping the storeroom locked, and maintaining a vigilant eye on remnants of fowl, or roast, or cake, and when she would note their disappearance, the old darkey would deny vociferously that she had stolen anything. Finally, after an unusually heavy raid on the pantry, she plucked up courage to exhort Aunt Mimy to give up stealing, lest some punishment might overtake her.

"I's a honest 'oman—I ain' never been in no calaboose or pentenchry yit," said Aunt Mimy, highly indignant. "You talks to me like I wuz a thief; I don' steal nothin'—I jest takes something to eat when I'm hongry."

"Aunt Mimy," said her mistress, "you may call it taking if you choose, but carrying off things that belong to me is stealing all the same. You may escape the jail or the penitentiary in this world, but you are a member of the church, and know that there will be punishment hereafter for those who break the commandments of God."

As "ole Satan and hell fire" played a large part in her theology, she was much impressed for a while but she never overcame her old habit; as far as food was concerned, she evidently felt there was a distinct difference between "takin' somethin' to eat," and stealing.

* * *

But Aunt Mimy's most valuable trait was a certain loyalty and reliability, that is getting to be all too rare in the younger generation of negroes. One of the frequent tragedies of the household now is to wake in the morning and find no cook in the kitchen—and this without either warning before, or apology after. Though Aunt Mimy lived some distance off—in order to be hard by the beloved church—yet there was never any uncertainty about her daily appearance. No rain was too hard, no cold was too severe to keep her from being in her place on time. Even when the infirmities of age began to bear more heavily on her, she would still come on. At times, she was a sufferer from rheumatism, and I always urged her to stay at home and in bed, when one of her attacks siezed her. One morning, I noticed her limping as she waited on the table, and I said to her reproachfully, "There, Aunt Mimy, you have the rheumatism again—why didn't you stay at home and take care of yourself?"

"Lord, Miss Idy," she said, "you can't indulge the rumatiz."

She did not "indulge" any of her increasing ailments, but put them aside with a determination that was little short of heroic. When I think of Aunt Mimy, and Uncle Peter, an old gardener who has also gone to his reward, I feel that the world is poorer for the passing away of these sturdy old types, of many failings, yet of many virtues, and we shall not soon look upon their like again.

CHIVALRY.

By Alice Duer Miller.

It's treating a woman politely,
Provided she isn't a fright:
It's guarding the girls who act rightly,
If you can be judge of what's right:
It's being—not just, but so pleasant:
It's tipping while wages are low:
It's making a beautiful present,
And failing to pay what you owe.

Disciples Table Talk

Evangelist to Run for Congress.

Evangelist Frank B. Thomas, former pastor of the church at Mattoon, Ill., officially announces himself as a candidate for congress from the nineteenth district in the filing of his petition in the office of the secretary of state in Springfield. Mr. Thomas claims Mattoon as his legal residence and seeks the nomination on the Progressive ticket. Mr. Thomas went before the convention in Decatur two years ago as a candidate for congress, but as he had not previously announced himself he was defeated for the nomination in a rather close fight by John H. Chadwick of Tuscola, who made the race against William B. McKinley and Charles M. Borchers. Since quitting the pastorate of the Mattoon church Mr. Thomas has not been much in Mattoon, although he has occasionally returned to visit friends. He has been conducting revival meetings the greater portion of the time and has become a resident of Danville, which is in the eighteenth congressional district.

Western Pennsylvania Convention.

The Western Pennsylvania Convention is to be held in Connellsville, Sept. 22-24. It was to have been held in Turtle Creek, but owing to the Westinghouse strike the church there is not in condition to entertain. Thirty-seven years ago Robert Latimer was elected president of the Western Pennsylvania Board, in Connellsville. He has served in that capacity ever since. By reason of its fine railroad facilities Connellsville is one of the most accessible cities in the western part of the state. There are 15,000 people in the city and the Disciples have a church of 500 members. The Connellsville church is one of the oldest in the brotherhood, being about eighty years old. The program of the convention is in charge of a committee the chairman of which is W. Scott Cook, of Wilkinsburg, Pittsburg. It will be ready for publication very soon.

Temperance Sunday Supplies.

Have the free supplies for the observance of World's Temperance Sunday, November 8 (in most states November 1—in Ohio September 20), been ordered for your Sunday-school? Make sure by cutting out and handing to your Sunday-school superintendent the blank below. Millions of pieces of literature must be printed and all orders must be sent to us early, if they are to be filled. Last year over a thousand schools sent in their orders for supplies too late to be filled before the day. Every school should have its supplies three weeks before its Temperance day in order to properly prepare the program. PLEASE SEE THAT THE REQUEST FOR YOUR SCHOOL IS SENT IN TODAY.

"Christian Church Club" in Wisconsin's University.

Early in the summer a group of the students of the University of Wisconsin, who are affiliated with the Christian church met in the home of Mrs. L. E. Stevens, at Madison, and organized "The Christian Church Club of Madison, Wisconsin." John P. Frazee, of Rushville, Indiana, was elected president, and Miss Marie C. Holman, of Milwaukee, secretary. Last year there were in all about 80 members of the Christian church enrolled as students of the University of Wisconsin; 40 in the regular session, and about the same number in the summer school. These students represented 12 states, Indiana and Missouri leading, with 16 from each state, while Wisconsin contributed only 3 of the number.

Rev. John R. Golden, who resigns at Angola, Ind., to accept the state secretaryship of Illinois.

The major portion of these young people were graduate students, attracted by the growing reputation of the University of Wisconsin. The five leading Protestant bodies of this section—the Baptist, Congregationalist, Lutheran, Methodist, and Presbyterian—seek to conserve the religious interests and loyalty of their students by employing "University Pastors" to work directly with the student body. The Episcopalians are soon to locate a pastor to have charge of the students interests, and the Catholic church already has a priest and church for the Catholic students. The Christian church, which is weak in this state, has no church in Madison, for which reason especially it is thought the new club will be of great service.

J. R. Golden to Return to Illinois.

John R. Golden, pastor at Angola, Ind., has resigned to accept the state secretaryship of Illinois. He returns to the state in which his entire ministry, previous to his present pastorate, has been carried on. Mr. Golden was pastor at Gibson City and West Side, Springfield. He will succeed J. Fred Jones in the secretaryship of Illinois churches.

Missionary Moving Pictures.

The Oriental Mission Commission, led by S. J. Corey, which reached its destination last week, expects to bring from the fields some fine moving picture films of the work in China, Japan and the Philippines. These pictures will be helpful in presenting the missionary work to the churches.

Every Member Canvass at Santa Monica, Cal.

The church at Santa Monica, California, recently demonstrated the wisdom of the every member canvass by men of the the church, both for general expenses and for missionary purposes. Careful plans of preparation were laid by the pastor, J. Leslie Lobingier, together with his official board, and ten men going two by two made the canvass on a single day. The number of members pledging to current expenses was increased 51 per cent. The number making regular weekly pledges to missions and benevolences was increased 185 per cent, and the amount of money pledged for this purpose was about doubled. Almost 90 per cent of the resident membership now have their names on the treasurer's books as regular contributors to current expenses; and almost 85 per cent as regular givers to missions and benevolences. And the church is aiming to increase even these percentages and thus realize the aim printed on its pledge card: "Every member of the congregation, either rich or poor, young or old, making a contribution of something each week, according to ability, both to current expenses and to missionary purposes."

L. S. Cupp Goes to Eugene, Ore.

Louis S. Cupp of Kansas City, has resigned the Chancellorship of Christian University, Canton, Missouri, to take effect early in September. He has been with the school for four and one-half years and has succeeded in raising over $325,000 for endowment and buildings. He will immediately become pastor of the church at Eugene, Oregon, which has a membership of about 1,000 and $85,000 church property, considered one of the finest on the Pacific Coast. Mr. Cupp is a native Missourian and this is his first move out of the State. His former pastorates have been at Huntsville, Platte City and Hyde Park, Kansas City.

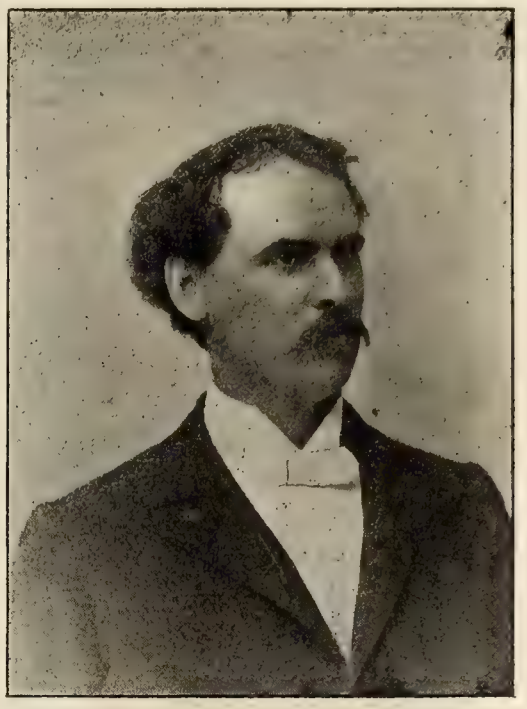
Disciple Pastors Discuss War

Causes and Probable Results of the Present Conflict Estimated.

The fact that the world has suddenly been thrown into a calamitous war has given sermon topics to many a pastor in the past three weeks. Disciple pastors have not been slow to take advantage of the opportunity to "point their moral with a tale."

MILITARISM THE CAUSE, SAYS S. T. WILLIS.

"A rampant spirit of warfare fostered by the growing armaments of European nations and the lack of genuine sentiments of peace in the hearts of national leaders are the primal causes for the struggle now ravaging Europe," S. T. Willis, pastor of First church, St. Paul, Minn., asserted in a recent sermon. "These nations professed friendship but they continued to build bigger battleships and increase the strength of their armies. Militarism crushes Europe in times of peace and it is death and destruction in time of war."



Rev. S. R. Hawkins, of Portland, Ore., Who Thinks That Infidelity in Europe is the Underlying Cause of the War.

DEMOCRACY TO GAIN, SAYS AUSTIN HUNTER.

At Jackson Boulevard Church, Chicago, Rev. Austin Hunter said: "While the militarist dubs his critics as 'peace at any price men' he is really the one to whom the epithet should be applied, for the price is national bankruptcy. The whole puppet system of monarchs and brass-buttoned patriots is an absurdity. If this terrible war shall result in such a shaking up of European life that democracy shall gain the ascendency over autocracy in Europe it may be the beginning of a new era, wherein 'thrones have crumbled and kings are dust.'"

INFIDELITY A CAUSE, SAYS S. R. HAWKINS.

"I believe that God will overrule the passions of men and that the eventual outcome of the war will be for the good of the world," said Samuel R. Hawkins, pastor of Central Church, Portland, Ore. "The infidelity that has weakened the standing of the Christian religion in Europe during the last quarter of a century has helped to bring about this great impending struggle. There can never be peace where the faith in the Bible and God has been undermined. Then, too, the selfishness of the ruling houses in Europe has been a contributing cause. This great war is not a war of the people, it was inspired by the heads of the governments."

WORLD WILL LOSE BY WAR.—O. F. JORDAN.

"The war which seems to have broken out in Europe will contribute nothing to the civilization of the world, but rather will prove to be a brake on the wheels of progress. It will be a war of race hatred, a struggle for territory and commercial advantage. After it is over there will be more hatred, more greed and more misery. From such a war every Christian should pray that the world be delivered. The death of hundreds of thousands or even millions of human beings may result if war is not averted. Savage and brutal instinct in the races now covered somewhat by civilized life will be laid bare. The ideals of the gospel will be forgotten in a frightful mob movement back to paganism. Nations who claim to honor the Prince of Peace apostatize from their faith when they choose force instead of reason to settle issues such as the present one."

NATIONS NOT CHRISTIAN, SAYS FINIS IDLEMAN.

"We need to observe that our civilization and socalled Christian nations are not so in fact. The law of the survival of the fittest is yet largely supreme. The chance for the revival of the unfit is largely a Utopian dream," declared Finis Idleman of Central Church, Des Moines, Ia. The Christian attitude must essentially be one of deep and profound concern. But if all pleas of mediation fail and Europe will actualize what seems to be an impending calamity for a quarter of a century then let us pray that there may appear at the end of the dreadful day some clearer cause of the new order with its basis of universal brotherhood, its ideal of essential greatness inherent in great service and its defense in the inner righteousness of the individuals who compose the holy order."

DR. BRANDT ON CAUSES OF WAR.

European war new will be interpreted to the congregation every Sunday night by Dr. John L. Brandt, pastor of First Church, St. Louis, Mo. Dr. Brandt has travelled rather widely and devoted a recent Sunday evening to the causes leading up to the war. Dr. Brandt upheld the Servians in their stand against Austria-Hungary. We would not want Austria-Hungary or any other foreign power to police us any more than did the Servians, and they did right in refusing to permit Austro-Hungarian police amidst them," said Dr. Brandt. In describing the Servians as he saw them in Servia and elsewhere, Dr. Brandt said: "The Servian is a man who never shrinks from a hard task and never looks for an easy job. Indeed, no one would be more astonished than he if he got one. He is a worker, not an overseer; a worker, not a master. He knows nothing but authority. The Servians are prolific, averaging eight children to the family. Servia was a tempting morsel for Austria, and there is no doubt whatever that Archduke Francis Ferdinand had planned to annex Servia on taking the throne. Servia was robbed of the fruits of her gallant victories in the recent Balkan wars. Servia was on the verge of finally losing her national entity and independence. Among the influences at the bottom of this war has been the work of an American college, known as Roberts College, in Constantinople. I had the privilege of visiting that college when I was there a few years ago. I could not help noticing the splendid young Slavs in whose minds and hearts constitutional ideals were being instilled." Doctor Brandt said he believes that after the great war is over, after millions have been slain and billions in property destroyed, the dream of universal peace perhaps will come true. The nations then may be willing to come to a convention forever abolishing war, he said.

The First Christian Church, Nashville, Tenn., is planning the erection of a skyscraper upon the site of its present structure within the next twelve months. The completion of the building will give the members the distinction of being the first church in the country to have their home in a skyscraper. The contemplated structure will be ten stories in height, the first two of which will be used for church purposes. The building will cost approximately $260,000, and will bring a net revenue of $20,000 per annum. It will be located opposite the court house.

Entertainment at Atlanta

Those wishing a location near the auditorium will do well to secure rooms at the hotels. The down-town homes are almost altogether used for boarding houses. Almost all of our best Christian families live out on the car-lines about ten or fifteen minutes from the auditorium. Hence, only a few of those who secure rooms in homes near the auditorium will have the privacy of the average home.

Atlanta has come to be a convention city and as a result a city of hotels. Two of the largest hotels in the South have been erected in the city within the last three years. These with several other large establishments are equipped with every modern convenience. In addition to these, there are a large number of smaller and intermediate hotels, the great majority of which have been erected within the last five years.

These hotels contain 4,000 rooms; and our committee has reserved all not used for regular guests. As during the Shriners convention, traveling salesmen will be requested by hotel managers to secure entertainment during convention week in surrounding towns. And since these rooms are ours from October 7th to 14th, all correspondence with regard to entertainment will need to be addressed to our committee. This will be an advantage to our visitors. We have contracted for a reasonable scale of rates and will take personal pride in securing the best service and in granting small favors.

We are ready right now to place you in a room that you will like and one that will suit your price.

Here is the whole story as to rates: Each hotel is conducted on the European plan, the meals can be secured at a reasonable price in the hotels. There are also a number of restaurants in the hotel section that serve meals from twenty-five cents up.

Here are some of the rates scheduled: 150 rooms without bath—$1 for one and $2 for two. 125 rooms without bath—$1.50 for one and $1 for each additional person. 20 rooms without bath—fifty and seventy-five cents for one and $1 and $1.50 for two. 50 rooms without bath—$2 for one and $3 for two. 45 rooms with bath—$1.50 for one and $1 for each additional person. 290 rooms with bath — $2 for one and $3, $3.50 and $4 for two. 20 rooms with bath—$2.25 for one and $3.50 for two. 280 rooms with bath—$2.50 for one and $4 and $5 for two. Other rooms are $3 and $3.50 for one and $4 and $5 for two. All the rates quoted at $1.50 or above apply to hotel headquarters as well as other hotels.

From present indications it would seem that within the next few weeks the best of these rooms will be taken. The convention is almost upon us; and you will secure better service and save us a great deal of worry if you will make your reservations early. Do not wait until September and be compelled to look up this copy of your paper or spend a lot of time in correspondence about rates; but while the information is before you, send me your reservation fee of fifty cents each so I will know that you really mean to come. Write now, telling me just what price you wish, and I will assign you.

ATLANTA'S PLAY GROUNDS AND PARKS.

Piedmont Park is on the North side, and at the present time Atlantians are having a gay time swimming in the lake at Piedmont. In this park is the "Peace Monument" commemorating the cementing of the North and South. It was erected by the Old Guard of the Gate City Guards, a couple years ago, and the crack military companies of the United States came and helped unveil it. It is a beautiful monument.

Ponce de Leon Ball Park has a seating capacity of 7,000. It is the home of the Atlanta Base Ball Club, pennant winners in 1913 and who are now battling for the 1914 pennant. Atlanta is a great ball city and when the games are ending for the season, business houses close and everybody goes to the ball game to shout for Atlanta. The ball grounds are said by professional ball players to be the best in the South.

There are quite a number of small parks over the city, where tired babies, with negro nurses while away their time; you do not have to "Keep Off The Grass" and the flowers are beautifully arranged in beds. One of these parks—"Howell Park"—is in the West End, very near to "The Sign of the Wren's Nest"—the home of Uncle Remus— and many a tired child is lulled to sleep by negro nurses either telling them some story of "Brer Rabbit," and "Little Miss Wren," or a negro ditty peculiar only to that race—such as "Oh, you Miss Dinia." This is the everyday life of the Southerner, and he or she does not notice it so much—but you will.

But the real play ground of both young and old is Grant Park, containing 144 acres and presented to the city a number of years ago by L. P. Grant, who at that time was president of the Atlanta and West Point R.

Rev. R. Graham Frank, Secretary of the General Convention.

Let us enter at the Cherokee Ave entrance; passing a beautiful fountain we come to the Cyclorama of the Battle of Atlanta; we enter—and there spread before us is the days of the Rebellion—it is accurate—veterans of the Confederate army are there to explain the great painting; then down to the lake; seats around it for the weary; boats on it for the romantic; swans and ducks always looking for popcorn or cake. Then up to the Zoo; then just before we reach the old Fort Walker—you gaze upon the old war engine "The Texas," No. 212; this is the famous Confederate engine which played such an important part in the Andrews Raid during the rebellion. You who come through Chattanooga will see the other engine in the depot there; then to Fort Walker, just about as it was during the war; the old cannon are still there; you look out over it and the country spreads before you just as it was in those days, and across its expanse brothers fought unto death; then we turn and wander through the park; fine gravel walks over to the picnic grounds, and the grounds where the "youngsters" spend their idle moments; squirrels, very tame, are here and there, and the song birds know their life is safe. When you come, take Grant Park car at Five Points, or at Broad and Alabama Streets, and spend a few hours in a southern park. Neither the air nor the people you meet will be chilly, but delightful—both.

A. M. Beatty,
Chairman Publicity.

R. W. Gentry as Chautauqua Manager.

R. W. Gentry, pastor at Winfield, Kans., is serving as platform manager of the Winfield Chautauqua this year. Mr. Gentry delivered special addresses at Burden and Wilmot, Kans., on July 4 and gave a memorial address for the Odd Fellows there, June 31.

LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The fourth conference of the Laymen's Missionary Movement for the middle section was held at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, July 29 to Aug. 2. About 250 men were present, representing 18 states and countries. Of these 112 were laymen. The Disciples had 19 men present.

The five days of the conference were crowded with Bible study, mission study, conferences, prayer meetings, missionary and devotional addresses. Seven great subjects of mission study formed the topics for daily study and discussion by as many groups. Three of these were of home missions, three of foreign missions and one general.

The Laymen's Movement, devoted exclusively to foreign missions at first, has found that the missionary enterprise is one and is now giving itself to the whole task.

Two notes were sounded constantly in the recent gathering. First was the absolute confidence of victory. So strong was this assurance that it was never asserted. It was assumed. Whatever the problem—whether Mexican, Mohammedan, racial, industrial, mattered not—there was the positive assurance that the gospel of the Son of God is the solvent.

The other note was the need of deeper spiritual life, of fuller consecration, of more earnest and constant prayer.

The final meeting of consecration brought to light the fact that scores of men who had spent the days in considering the larger problems of the world's evangelization, home and foreign, were going home with strong resolutions and definite plans to evangelize their own communities. After all that is the heart of missions. Not the romance of the remote, not the thrill of the novel, not anything but a passion for the preaching of the gospel will ever incite the church to the accomplishment of her task.

Next year's conference will be held at Lake Geneva July 28 to August 1. The Disciples should have 50 men there.

I. J. Cahill.

CHURCH EXTENSION OPPORTUNITIES.

The First Opportunity is the one immediately at our door. Since last September, 176 church organizations have appealed for aid and 113 are still unanswered. The board made only five promises at the last meeting, Aug 4th. The remaining 113 congregations will be greatly embarrassed by liens and unpaid bills unless we can answer their appeals. These missions are the children of our great brotherhood. Do good unto all men, particularly unto those that are of the household of faith. This is Paul's charge to us. The board pleads for these homeless ones because they are our brothers. They are trying to restore the New Testament church. They are striving for the union of all God's people on the one foundation.

The Second Opportunity is to help decide the social and religious character of thousands of new Western communities. Millions of acres are being irrigated and hundreds of towns are springing up. The streams of emigration do not all flow to the cities. Hundreds are being now diverted westward. From, and including, New Mexico, Colorado and Montana, to the Pacific Ocean, the increase in population has been fifty per cent or more in ten years. 29,000 new farms were taken in Montana last year. 100,000 new people came in. The church building and the life it includes should be the social center of these communities.

The Third Opportunity is to shape the thought of these new communities, religiously. If we are first on the ground we can save communities from being over churched. There are too many sects. This is the sorrow of Christ, who prayed for a unity of His people. So long as there is a division of God's people, so long must we continue to make the Christian union plea upon the basis of the teachings of the New Testament. Let us be sure to start these new communities right religiously. We were called into existence as a people for just this thing. If we build up-to-date churches and equip them with modern Sunday-school facilities, we shall command wholly these new communities.

The Fourth Opportunity is to take care of the immigrants at our doors. We must handle this problem or it will handle us. After the opening of the Panama Canal, immigrants from Europe will be landed on the Pacific coast from Europe, for only $5 more than it costs to land on the Atlantic coast. They are finding here political and religious liberty. May God give us grace to take care of this opportunity by erecting mission buildings.

Will not every church order supplies at once for the September offering. They will be sent free.

NEWS FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

In the future the church at King City, Mo., E. C. Baird, minister, will support Alexander Paul at Wuhu, China.

The church at Pomona, Cal., has sent $1,005, and it will send more before Sept. 30th. This provides the salary of two missionaries on the foreign field.

The Pico Heights Church, Los Angeles, Cal., claims the distinction of having contributed to every department of organized mission work since Feb. 1, 1914, and to two outside missions besides. S. M. Bernard, formerly of Kentucky, is the minister.

Dr. W. N. Lemmon of the Mary Chiles Hospital, Manila, P. I. says that he has ten, twenty, and even more in the wards each day, and in the clinic and hospital, 100 treatments per day. The first thing the patient gets on entering the hospital is a bath, and then a Bible. All of the nurses are members of the Christian churc'. They are now in the new hospital, and every bed is full with six on the floor. He says they cannot keep enough beds for all who need them.

The First Church, Akron, Ohio, L. N. D. Wells, pastor, has sent the Foreign Society $2,287, since October 1st. This is the largest cash contribution we have received from any one church so far in the year. Cleveland, Ohio, (Euclid Ave.) J. H. Goldner, minister, comes next with $1,720. These are advance steps.

The Independence Boulevard Sunday-school, Kansas City, Mo., will in the future support Mrs. Arthur Bowman, as their living-link.

Pres. Yuan of China has issued a decree for the establishment of an educational fund of twelve millions of dollars to provide 1,200 scholarships for students at home and abroad of $400 each. This is one of the hopeful signs in China. The mission schools are helping to provoke the government to establish its own schools. The mission hospitals will provoke and inspire the nation to found and support their own hospitals. What has been done in other countries will be repeated in China.

A. F. Hensey, Bolenge, Africa, writes as follows: "Last Sunday (June 28th) we had a glad day; 134 were baptized and over 600 were at the communion service. Seventy-two of these baptized were from the Ibinza, and so Bolenge is getting to be more and more the melting-pot of the tribe."

After a year spent in the language school in Tokyo, Miss Gretchen Garst returns to Akita. She has had a good year and returns to her work in the very best of spirits.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. B. Baird of Luchowfu, China, reached Vancouver July 30th on their return home on furlough. Mr. Baird found his father at the point of death. For a little time his father recognized him and then sank back into unconsciousness.

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

THE FIRST REVIEW

Before the reviews of Mr. Morrison's new book have begun to come in from the religious press there comes this appreciation from a prominent Disciple layman who received one of the first copies of the book. The letter is addressed to the author:

"I finished yesterday your 'Baptism.' It is very readable, and, as far as I am able to detect, flawless in its argument. It is a weapon wherewith the Lord could enable one to put a thousand to rout. It seems to me to be the most significant book put out by the Disciples in years. It reveals scholarship, religious insight, interpretative ability, tolerance and vision. I cannot see how it will fail to be widely read both among our people and others. I will watch for the reviews with much interest, and am glad I have read the book before the reviews appear."

This reader is not the only one who has already finished this stimulating work. Messages coming from thoughtful men over the country justify the prediction that "The Meaning of Baptism" will prove to be the most discussed book that has appeared among the Disciples for many years. Not only that: the discussion it will provoke bids fair to carry the Disciples' Restoration Movement many leagues forward in fulfilling its mission.

THE GREAT COMMANDMENTS.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 6, 1914.

Read Matt. 22:23-46. Memory Verses, 29-31.

Golden Text.—Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself.—Luke 10:27.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(28) And one of the scribes came, and heard them questioning together, and knowing that he had answered them well, asked him, What commandment is the first of all. (29) Jesus answered, The first is, Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God, the Lord is one; (30) and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. (31) The second is this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these. (32) And the scribe said unto him, Of a truth, Teacher, thou hast well said that he is one; and there is none other but he: (33) and to love him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbor as himself, is much more than all whole burnt-offerings and sacrifices. (34) And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, he said unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God. And no man after that durst ask him any question.

(41) And he sat down over against the treasury, and beheld how the multitude cast money into the treasury; and many that were rich cast in much. (42) And there came a poor widow, and she cast in two mites, which make a farthing. (43) And he called unto him his disciples, and said unto them, Verily I say unto you, This poor widow cast in more than all they that are casting into the treasury; (44) for they all did cast in of their superfluity; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living.

Verse by Verse.

BY CLARK BUCKNER.

v. 28. One of the scribes: The scribes were the doctors of the law; by reason of their constant copying of the laws they became far more familiar with them than did the ordinary Jew. Came, and heard them questioning together: Some think that this scribe was honest in his desire to test the character of Jesus. He had heard the Master's reply to Herodians and Sadducees, and proposed his question in all good faith. What commandment is the first of all? This was not an uncommon question. The doctor of the law had discussed it for many years, but there was little agreement upon the subject. Now this man proposes this, one of the most disputed questions among the Jewish teachers, as the test question for the new teacher.

v. 29. Hear, oh, Israel: See Duet. 6:4-5.

v. 30. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy, etc.": In these terms some interpreters have recognized the language of a primitive psychology, and attempt of a threefold or fourfold division of human nature, "soul" referring to emotion, "mind" to intellect, and "strength" to will. But whatever may be thought of this suggestion, it is manifest that the words are intended to claim for God the affection of human nature in all of its extent and all of its intensity. (Stalker.)

v. 31. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. See Lev. 19:18. This commandment is the first of the second table which has to do with man's duties toward his brother man. Every Jew was recognized as a neighbor by every other Jew.

v. 32. Teacher, thou hast well said: the scribe is greatly charmed by the keen words of the teacher. His spontaneous expression of his appreciation, in the presence of his fellow-scribes, is evidence of his sincerity.

v. 34. When Jesus saw that he answered discreetly: the man's speaking with such unusual understanding greatly pleased the Master.

v. 41. He sat down over against the treasury: the treasury was in the court of the women. And behold the multitudes came: it was the custom for everyone to give. Many that were rich cast in much: no doubt they did this with great pomp.

v. 42. And she cast in two mites: A farthing, amounting to about four-fifths of a cent.

v. 43. This poor widow cast in more: for the reason that her two mites represented more sacrifice than did the large sums given by the rich.

At the Heart of the Lesson.

Doctor Jowett in one of his Birmingham sermons tells us: "When I want to think of the love of God to thee and me, I do not reject the helpful suggestions of human motherhood, and fatherhood, and wifehood, and husbandhood, and childhood. Nay, rather do I listen to their music all the more eagerly, and in their love-strains I hear 'sweet snatches of the songs above,' faint echoes of the wonderful love of God. No, the love of our Father in heaven is not altogether unlike the love of all good fathers on earth. It is very like and yet very unlike; so like as to be akin, so unlike that it fills us with adoring wonder and praise; so like, as the vast organ and the harmonium are akin, and can express the same tune; so unlike that, as with the organ and the harmonium, one overwhelms the other in range and capacity, in height and depth, in length and breadth of musical glory. 'God loves you, and you have heard a bit of the tune in your mother's love, in your father's love, in the love of your husband, in the love of your wife, in the love of your little child. Human love may be only as a child's earliest broken song in comparison with the Hallelujah Chorus, but it is akin."

The greatest thing in any person is his supreme love to God. It brings us nearest to God in sympathy, friendship, and character. We cannot love him supremely and not grow like him. It opens our souls to the best influences. It helps us to become coworkers with God. It brings to us the greatest motives, the greatest possibilities, the noblest character, the highest ideal, the largest usefulness, which we are capable of receiving.—Peloubet's Notes.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR SEPT. 2.

The Christian Life and the Church Home. Ps. 84; Heb. 10:11-25.

The temple at Jerusalem was for the Jew the home of religion. Jerusalem was a place made a delight by the presence of the temple. The elaborate service stirred the imagination of the devotee. Though scattered abroad upon the face of the earth, pious Jews found a center for their deepest emotions in the sanctuary of their fathers. And Jehovah was the glory of the temple. He was the light and the salvation of the faithful.

WHAT MAKES A CHURCH HOME?

Why should a may lay aside his Sunday paper and go to church? A teacher of music aske dthis question and presented an answer. He said the man probably would not go to church unless he thought he was able to get something he could get nowhere else. If the appeal of the church is to superficial feeling, that appeal comes to one in many other places. The playhouse and the dance hall are efficient in awakening emotions of a certain kind. The church cannot hope to compete with them in their chosen field. The tunes of the church that suggest the rhythm of the dance are enjoyed for other than religious reasons. The critic of church music then went on to say that the singing of the church should make its appeal to the deepest emotions of the soul. What does the church say to the man who has lost his dearest friend? What is its message to him who has lost his self-respect? What word does it speak in the presence of the mystery of existence? The church becomes a home to us when it faces honestly our serious problems and helps us to feel that God is with us. Before we call upon people to assist us in securing church homes for ourselves and for others we ought to examine with care our ideas of what the church is to do for men.

A PLACE OF BEAUTY.

We pass by the unpainted house built on a spot where trees and grass and flowers seem never to have been, and we wonder whether human beings can live in such a house and retain their distinctly human characteristics. We have come to the place where great importance is attached to surroundings. We demand that the schood house and grounds be attractive. Achurch house that offends good taste hinders the development of the religious life. A simple chapel that represents the ability of the congregation, that is kept clean, gives the worshiper a sense of independence. He does not think it necessary to apologize to himself or others for the place in which he prays. It has its own kind of beauty which sensible men admire. Congregations, like families and individuals, need to learn how to rejoice in wnat can be acquired honestly. We are sometimes tempted to judge a building's power by its cost. Yet the best things are difficult to acquire. If we would have a church home in which we have a right to rejoice, we must sacrifice for it.

A MEETING-HOUSE.

There is more meaning in the term "meeting-house" than we of the present generation realize. The term is going out of use. We think of it as a term used in days when people were less discriminating in tneir language than we are. It may have served its day. But the idea contained in it is a part of Christianity. The church is a place where people meet, where social life is cultivated. In the cnurch we gatner for the consideration of all the interests of life in the light of faith in the eternal purpose. We do not separate the life of one man from that of others. Individualism has its place in religion. Solitude is indispensable for the growth of independence. But the individualism of religion is that of mutual helpfulness. Does the church promote helpful ministries? 1I Chron. 2:5-9; Isa. 64:11; Ps. 102:14; 122:1, 6, 9; 128: 5; I Chron. 29:3; II Chron. 3:8; Ps. 9:11; 20:2; 46:4, 5; 48:1, 2; 133:1-3; 134:1-3.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

How Did Jesus Preach?

He varied the method of his sermonizing.

Jesus changed His style of preaching four times. The first preaching of Jesus was that which joined His ministry to that of John the Baptist. From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say: "Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." That had been John's text.

The second kind of preaching began when He gathered and organized His disciples, and established a constructive method of teaching. This type began with the sermon on the mount, and that is the longest example we have of this type. The third was the parabolic, or illusrtative type. We know the very day when it began. Jesus uttered not less than a dozen parables on the very first day—the day when He sat in Peter's boat with the multitude on the shore.

The fourth was the stern type of denunciation which began when He left Galilee. "Then began He to upbraid the cities wherein most of His mighty works had been wrought." This type culminated in the terrible discourse against Jerusalem. The fifth was the address of comfort and inspiration when the crowds had deserted Him and He gathered His disciples close about Him. "From that time"—that is, from the time of Peter's confession—"Jesus began to show His disciples how He must go to Jerusalem and suffer." There were seven wonderful lessons of the cross, culminating in the upper room.

But the central characteristic type of preaching was the parabolic. "Without a parable spake He not to them." God never has spoken to us except in parables. Life is full of them. Every word that speaks to us of spiritual things is a parable. I do not know any word in any language that is primarily a word of the mind or soul. The word "soul" is a word of the deep, the ocean. "Spirit" means wind, or breath. "Character" is a dry ravine or bed of a torrent down which the water will flow when there is water. The "depth of sorrow" and "weight of care" and "height of joy" are all parables. Your "attention" is "leaning forward." If you know any single word in any language whatever that is first of all a word of the mind or soul, I wish you would drop me a postal, for I do not know any such word.

How, then, could God speak to us except in parables, since the very words that refer to the things of the soul are parables? The whole Bible is a parable. The incarnation is the greatest of parables. The cross of Calvary is not merely a fact of history, or a dogma of theology; it is a parable of love that suffers that it may redeem.

The reason we must use parables is because life's experiences and hopes baffle all our attempts at accurate and adequate statement. We can describe life and reality adequately only when we describe it suggestively, only when our words excite imagery and feeling. This is what parables do and which cold factual statements do not do.

Whenever scientific men get their noses above the grindstone of mere sordid fact, they speak in parables. Observed facts are of little value till related by hypotheses, and all hypotheses are parables. What is this "inter-stellar ether" of which we are told? Has any scientist seen it, weighed it, found its chemical reaction or determined its pressure? It is a parable necessary to enable us to understand a beautiful and wonderful theory of the transmission of light through a universe that is nowhere empty, nowhere inactive, nowhere void of purpose. It is a beautiful parable and I believe it, not because I know it, or any other man knows it, but because it helps me to make real one of the lessons of God.

Spiritual things are the real things. Philosophers still debate the problem of things in themselves. Are there any such things in themselves? The mind is creative. Things are all parables of spiritual realities. The deeper philosophers get into the problem of ultimate reality the farther they get from mere dirt and the deeper into the mind as the indisputable fact.

All our lessons of heaven are in terms of parables. The pearly gates, the golden streets, the glittering crowns and the endless song are all parables of the things which eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man.

And I believe in heaven. I believe in the immortality of the soul. Do you doubt it because it seems so wonderful? The fact is less wonderful than the faith. I am less surprised that God should have prepared so wonderful a gift for His children than I am that we should be capable of even imagining so wonderful a possbility. This present life of struggle and love and hope is a parable of God—parable, yes, and a promise.

An Official Visit in Palestine

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT, JR.

THE recent visit of United States Ambassador Morganthau to Palestine was of double interest. It brought into new prominence the ever-absorbing question of the place of the Jew in Palestine, and it opened to scholars and photographers the venerated Mosque at Hebron. Of the first I shall write more at length at a later time, while of the latter detailed and expert accounts will be given by Dr. F. E. Hoskins and others of the party. For the present I am concerned only to give a general narrative of the trip through the country and the visit in Beirut.

The party, including Mr. Morganthau and his wife and daughter, Lord Bryce, ex-ambassador of England to the United States, Lady Bryce, Dr. Hoskins of the Presbyterian Mission in Syria, President Bliss of the Syrian Protestant College, and a number of others, made a total of twenty-two. Special permission to visit the Mosque had been given by the Sultan, and so that historic site was the first stage in the journey.

IN HEBRON.

Hebron shares with Jerusalem, Mecca and Medina the distinction of being one of the four sacred spots in the Mohammedan world. It is therefore "harem," or inviolate, not to be entered by any of non-Moslem sort, without particular orders. This custom applies only to the venerated portions of Jerusalem and Hebron, the temple enclosure of the former and the burial place of Abraham in the latter. But no unbeliever is ever permitted even to approach the sacred cities of Arabia, the scenes of the prophet's life.

The Mosque at Hebron, originally a Crusader church, built in the twelfth century, is a shrine held in the utmost veneration by the Moslems for the reason that it is built over the reputed Cave of Machpelah. Of the two entrances, only one is ever profaned by the feet of unbelievers. And even then, unless there is shown a special license, only seven steps of the entrance stairway may be mounted. Thus the Mosque itself is protected from desecration.

Above the fifth step is a hole through the left hand side wall into which the faithful may drop written petitions to the patriarchs lying beneath. This sort of prayer is supposed to be of special value in securing the aid of the holy ones in cases of sickness or other misfortune. But as visitors sometimes reach in and abstract some of the bits of crude writing, it is certain that not all of the prayers reach their destination. The sanctity of the place does not suffer in the least from such breaches of etiquette in a land so much given over to superstition.

Inside the Mosque are six cenotaphs, or imitation tombs. They are said to stand directly above the spots in the chamber below where the bodies of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Sarah, Rebekah and Leah repose. These cenotaphs are huge stone tombs covered, after the Mohammedan custom, with heavy embroidered green silk draperies, and are felt to be nearly as sacred, and capable of bringing blessing to the faithful, as are the spirits of those to whom they do honor.

AT THE CAVE OF MACHPELAH.

The party was conducted with great ceremony through all parts of the Mosque except the cave itself, which is never opened. Some say this is because it is quite empty. But the keepers of the place say it is because of its sanctity. Only twice before, in modern times at least, has the Mosque been entered by non-Moselms. The first time was in honor of the Prince of Wales, later King Edward VII, who was accompanied by Dean Stanley and a small party. The second occasion was the visit of the present king of England, before his accession, when he was attended by Gen. Kitchener. It is significant that Kaiser Wilhelm, whose visit to Palestine in 1891 was attended by so many marks of the Sultan's favor, did not secure entrance to this closely guarded place.

On the recent visit the guide was the old sheikh of the tribe which has jurisdiction over the Mosque and guards it. There is small doubt of his absolute belief in the authenticity of the popular traditions he relates. As he pointed with pride to the cenotaphs of Abraham and Sarah he exclaimed: "This is Savidna (our prophet) Ibrahim and Madade," which somewhat unbiblical announcement the party found it difficult to receive with becoming gravity and decorum. But therein it shares the character of much of the information furnished by guides in Palestine.

THE PEOPLE IN JERUSALEM.

In Jerusalem the time of Mr. Morganthau was largely taken up in visiting the Jewish quarters, and in receiving Jewish deputations. Modern Jerusalem is increasingly a Jewish city. For centuries it has held a large population of Jewish pensioners, the indolent and unprepossessing beneficiaries of the sustentation funds of European and American Jews. In recent years considerable numbers of Jews have come to Palestine to form colonies under the direction of Zionist and other promoters. These make up the industrial groups, some of which have augmented in considerable degree the Jewish population of Jerusalem. And still a third element is the real estate speculators. A large and increasing proportion of the property of Jerusalem is in the hands of Jews, who are hoping not so much for the coming of their own people, from whom little is to be gained, but are looking to the development of railroads, farm interests and industry as the guarantee of that commercial advantage of which the Jew knows so well how to avail himself to his own profit.

It cannot be said that there is any common bond between these classes of Jews. Each has its own reasons for being in Palestine. But they come from different parts of the world, the first type mostly from Spain, Russia and Germany, the lands of persecution; the second from the lands of thrift but of small opportunities for industrial progress; and the third from Germany, England and the United States, where the Jew has learned the arts of commercial promotion, and hopes to put them to good use in the new East.

THE REMNANT OF THE SAMARITANS.

In Nablous, the ancient Shechem, Mr. Morganthau was fortunate in being able to visit the Samaritans, the historic rivals of his race, just at the time they were celebrating their Feast of the Passover. According to their usual custom, this little community, poverty-stricken and reduced to hardly more than a hundred persons, had gone up to their ancestral place of sacrifice on Mt. Gerizim. There they pass an entire week, of which the sacrifice is the climax. They believe that this mountain is the scene of Abraham's sacrifice, the place from which the law was given, and the proper site for the temple. It was to that sanctuary that the Samaritan woman pointed as she said to Jesus, "Our fathers worshiped God in this mountain."

Late in the afternoon the visitors rode up the narrow winding path which leads up the side of Gerizim, and about seven o'clock reached the scene of the ritual. Jacob, son of Aaron, the old sheikh of the Samaritans, clad in white robes, stood before a rude altar, chanting verses from the sacred books of Moses, the Samaritan Pentateuch, which constitutes their scriptures, and which they claim is the veritable copy written by the great leader. That it is an old volume no one doubts. Of the two they possess, only the later one of which they show, it is probable that the more ancient copy goes back as far as the Christian era.

A choir of boys responded to the chanting of the old priest, while his sons and other young men now and then took up the refrain. After some moments the lambs selected for sacrifice were brought to the altar and with many invocations killed just at sunset. Samaritan tradition affirms that the knife used is the very one employed of old by the first Aaron. Helpers then took the carcasses aside and dressed them, pouring out the blood and discarding all but the edible parts. In the meantime a pit had been dug and in it a great fire kindled. When the coals were ready, the seven sacrificial bodies were laid in, and the earth piled over them. While they roasted, the chanting went on, and the visitors seized a few moments for rest.

THE PIT OPENED

Toward midnight the pit was opened and long sticks were thrust in to draw out the meat. Apparently no effort was made to prevent the dirt from getting mixed with the flesh. And though the smell was appetizing, the sight of the shrivelled, burnt or half-cooked, dirty and ill-prepared meat was not pleasant. One carcass could not be gotten out in the usual way and so a young man was lowered into the hole, and while others held him by the arms, he groped around with his feet, and finally was pulled up holding the meat with his toes.

As non-believers, the visiting party could not share the sacred food. But they were generously provided with unleavened bread, and watched the rest. The worshipers devoured the flesh and bread, gathered in groups about the carcasses, with a relish born of an entire year's fast from meat. The chants became loud shouts. The motive of the gathering seemed to be to turn the occation into a noisy demonstration. There was every indication that the clamor would continue till morning. So having seen and heard enough to initiate them into the mysteries of the ritual, and having used up all their films and powder in taking flash-light pictures, the visitors left the Samaritans to finish their annual feast in the very same place and manner made sacred by their ancestors long before the days of Jesus. This is one of the oldest religious ceremonies in the world; certainly the oldest carried on in an unaltered form by any Semitic people.

PRESENCE OF AMBASSADOR A BENEFIT

In a previous letter I spoke of the timely arrival of the ambassador in Tiberias, when it was necessary to stimulate the local authorities to action in the case of the robbery of our staffites. His coming to other places brought equal benefit and pleasure. Received all along the way with the respect due a representative of the United States, and the enthusiasm among the large Jewish population consequent on his being of that race, Mr. Morganthau came to Beirut and won the hearts of all who met him, by his simplicity of manner and his deep interest in all he saw. He spoke at the college, and we are still comparing the plain, short, worth-while address he gave us with the much longer and not very interesting one later delivered by Lord Bryce. And yet everyone knows that the latter is an orator of note.

INSPECTING THE GUNBOAT

While the party was in Beirut the ambassador's gunboat, the "Scorpion," was in the harbor, and we were invited out to take tea and inspect the ship. It is probably a strong, speedy vessel. But it seemed to me that the United States would gain by having a more impressive looking type of craft in the ports of foreign nations. Our sister nations may be too prone to judge by external appearances in the matter of gold lace and guns. But I am impressed with the fact that our extreme simplicity is sometimes misinterpreted as discourtesy and lack of savoir-faire.

We enjoyed Ambassador Morganthau's visit, and hope that he may come again. It is well to keep the people of the Levant alive to the fact that America is not only a place of ready money, as they all seem to think this side of the Atlantic, or the place from which the missionaries come, but also that it is a land with power to make itself felt among the nations in times when that power needs expression for world-ends.

Loyalty to the Loyal

An Interpretation of the Human Side of Church Extension

BY CHARLES S. MEDBURY.

THE very logic of our brotherhood's world work pleads for funds for Church Extension. There can be no gainsaying the following propositions:

We have a great plea; its presentation is fruitful in converts to Christ who must be housed—therefore Church Extension.

Permanent results of evangelism alone bless the world; to house new congregations secures permanent results—therefore Church Extension.

Waste of resources is sin; this Board provides against waste—therefore Church Extension.

Money given should be given to a living cause and not to dying individuals; the funds for which we plead find no lodgment in individual hands, but return to bless unnumbered communities—therefore Church Extension.

Loyalty to the loyal is commended of God and man; those applying for these funds are loyal to the core—therefore Church Extension.

It is to the proving of the minor premise of the last statement that this article is devoted.

LOYAL IN COMMUNITY RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Those applying for Church Extension funds stand in the respect of their communities. Though away from their old moorings the light of their faith has not died out. They stand before men as the advocates of good things. False standards have not won them. The glitter of gold has not blinded them to the face of God. While often moving into new localities because of business advantage, they are not absorbed in the things of this life. They do not shrink from the burdens of truth and righteousness. That such is their character standard is revealed in the fact that in nearly all instances they obtain from the communities in which they live liberal support in their church-building enterprises. While of course they may have to face the opposition of little, narrow and bigoted lives to some extent, on the other hand God raises up friends for them from among those who are too great not to appreciate the glory of another's unyielding conviction. It is well worth while for the great brotherhood to lend the hand of help to those who have been able thus to win their way in character lines to the hearts of those about them.

LOYAL TO THE PLEA FOR UNITY.

Those for whom I am pleading in this address have never been appreciated as is their due as to their loyalty to the distinctive things of our people's teachings. It is so easy to surrender a peculiar position linking only with burdens, disappointments and sacrifices through a long series of years. At the right hand and at the left of these brethren of ours, there are great denominational establishments. Within the lines of such work they are urged to make for themselves "a church home." They are reminded, too, that in such relationships there will be almost no responsibility and very little financial obligation. But these loyal souls for whom it is mine to speak, crediting those about them with the love of God, discounting neither the piety nor sacrifices of others, yet have a birthright dearer to them than life itself, and this they cannot and will not surrender. They are willing to work with any man or any people with hands outreached to help the world, but they are not willing to have their identity lost nor their service credited to any other than the Head of the church. Often without means, yes, under mortgage for their faith. Not boasting of human wisdom, but calling upon Him who giveth liberally and upbraideth not, these royal spirits in lowly garb dare to be despised for truth's sake. As "Christians" they "suffer," but are not "ashamed" and they "glorify God in this name." In prayer upon their knees today in private houses, in rented halls, churches and store rooms, in services, in tents or open groves with only the sky above them, these scattered disciples turn to the great brotherhood and ask a helping hand.

Mexico From the Christian Standpoint

A Graphic and Sympathetic Description of Conditions and Events Lying Behind Mexican Revolutionary Disturbances.

BY ALICE J. McCLELLAND.

The Christian Century believes that President Wilson's Mexican policy has opened the eyes of American citizens to the possibility of a new method of dealing with a backward and troublous nation on the borders of a highly civilized nation. The tentative plans made by the missionaries and the representatives of the various missionary societies to adopt an ampler Christian program is the practical carrying out by the churches of the idealism implicit in President Wilson's policy. For an interpretation of this new missionary program the reader is referred to the editorial pages of this issue.

A SHORT while ago it seemed that our nation was on the verge of war. The army and navy were wild for it; the commercial interests demanded it; seemingly level-headed statesmen volunteered their services for it; even Christian people approved and seemed to desire it. For months before the whole nation apparently had wished to enter into a war, a so-called righteous war, to establish peace in Mexico. How many Christian people have ever considered the Mexican problem from the standpoint of a Christian, aside from its political aspect? It is the purpose of this writing to assist, if possible, that process.

Recently the writer heard a Mexican gentleman, educated in the United States, say it was a strange thing that a nation which spent millions on foreign missions and Christian education in foreign lands (Mexico included) would permit the spirit of commercialism to interfere with and undermine her influence in those countries. This gentleman did not distinguish between the kind of Americans who give the money to missions and the kind who oppress by commercial means the same people whom the others are trying to help. The American missionary in Mexico is constantly embarrassed and handicapped by this well-deserved reputation of the grasping "Gringo."

Since the interests of Christian people in Mexico are so different from those of the business world, isn't it logical that the American church members' position in regard to the duty of the United States to Mexico be different, also?

THE ATTITUDE OF THE PRESS.

We have been told by the newspapers that conditions in Mexico are intolerable; people are killing each other; they are destroying foreign property—American property; they are incapable of self-government; they are ruining the country. And therefore we deem it our duty to put a stop to such intolerable conditions by invasion and war, if necessary.

President Wilson, in a recent interview in the "Saturday Evening Post" made the following statement:

"To some extent, the situation in Mexico is similar to that in France at the time of the Revolution. There are wide differences in many ways but the basic situation has many resemblances."

Our great American thinker, Samuel L. Clemens, speaking of the same revolution said:

"There were two 'Reigns of Terror,' if we could but remember it and consider it; the one wrought murder in hot passion, the other in heartless cold blood; the one lasted mere months, the other had lasted a thousand years; the one inflicted death upon ten thousand persons, the other upon a hundred millions; but our shudders are all for the 'horrors' of that minor terror, the momentary terror, so to speak, whereas, what is the horror of swift death by the axe, compared with a life-long death from hunger, cold, insult, cruelty and heart-break?"

The former "Reign of Terror" in Mexico had existed for four hundred years. The latter lacks till the 20th of November of the present year of completing four years and a part of that time the larger portion of the Republic was at peace.

The fact that an artificial civilization, founded on foreign concession and capital, had grown up, did not change the pitiable estate of the common people, with whom all true civilization must have to do. The causes of these conditions are too well known to require discussion—the cupidity of the higher classes, and the power of the Roman Catholic Church. Let us quote Mark Twain again on the latter subject. It is the Connecticut Yankee who speaks. It is remarkable how the state of things in Mexico resembles Arthur's Kingdom, and the Yankee was the prototype of the Constitutionalist! "There you see the hand of that awful power, the Roman Catholic Church. In two or three little centuries it had converted a nation of men into a nation of worms. . . . She preached (to the commoner) humility, obedience to superiors, the beauty of self-sacrifice; she preached (to the commoner) meekness under insult; she preached (still to the commoner, always to the commoner) patience, meanness of spirit, nonresistance under oppression and she introduced heritable ranks and aristocracies, and taught all the Christian populations of the earth to bow down to them and worship them."

Those miserable and unjust conditions could not right themselves but by bloodshed. It was the only way. We Americans are in a large measure responsible. Young Mexicans have been educated in our land, absorbing, unconsciously perhaps, ideas of political and religious freedom. We American missionaries have been teaching the Bible to the lower classes for some thirty or forty years and we all know, human liberty is taught therein from flyleaf to flyleaf. Why then, should we be so horror-stricken at the results of our own teaching? Didn't we expect them to learn? Was our only purpose to save their souls without giving rise to any of these by-products of Christianity?

AN INJUSTICE TO MEXICO.

And why, if you please, should only the Mexican be denied the privilege of fighting for liberty? Did not we tear our own fair land in pieces for four long terrible years to settle an internal dispute? We certainly did and there are very few of the "old-timers" who really remember the struggle who can discuss the question with calmness yet. And most of our battles for liberty had been fought for us by our ancestors on the other side of the ocean. The History of England is a history of wars against tyranny of church and throne and only one of the many revolutions is called "bloodless." Why, then should we regard the situation as "intolerable" and try to stop it when we must admit it is a natural stage in the evolution of a nation? It is a hopeful and significant fact for Mexico that among these armed citizens of the lower class are the men who are the flower of the nation, men of classic education, with broad intelligent minds who have with noble, generous purpose, espoused the cause of the peon for the good of Mexico. The fact that we have progressed in our civilization till a civil war seems impossible should not make us try to prevent another nation less fortunate than us in her foundations from remodeling, in the time-honored bloody way, her institutions.

MEXICO AND THE UNITED STATES.

So far the United States has done everything in her power to support morally and materially the Constitutionalist party. We have, up to the present, gained their confidence and they believe the intentions of our administration are good. They even concede that there may be some explanation forthcoming later for the taking of Vera Cruz. Nevertheless this act caused enmity among the Federals, as was to be expected, and much unrest among the Constitutionalists. Since any act against the Federals reacts in favor of the Constitutionalists, we wonder, perhaps, why the latter should object. Why not accept the proffered friendly aid gratefully and give due credit to the giver? There are two good reasons. The first is the prefectly natural desire that there is in every human family to settle its own difficulties without outside interference. The Mexicans would resent a similar act on the part of England, Spain or Japan.

The second reason is one which is harder for an American to appreciate but which will have a wholesome effect on our nation whenever it is fully understood. It is the fact that the Mexican people distrust us and cannot conceive of us entering their territory from a disinterested motive. How unjust! How unkind! we naturally exclaim. But let us look into our past relations with Mexico and other nations and see if they have no reason for suspecting our motives. We will begin with the Mexican war. Our best historians tell us it was an unjust war, and justifiable only by its results. We took from them half their territory. We paid for it, but we forced them to sell and decided on the price ourselves. Perhaps we took by right of conquest—a thing which passed very well in the fifth century and later but would hardly do in the nineteenth. As to the only justification, the results, we cannot deny the results have been good for us. Americans live in this territory, improve it and enjoy it, but can any one, by any stretch of imagination, conceive that Mexico should take pleasure in these results? It is true the results are fine for us, but how about Mexico and the Mexicans? Is it wonderful that now, when we enter their territory, protesting our friendship for them and our disinterest, they should suspect us of looking for a grindstone and some patient, simple-minded laborer to turn it? When a man robs you of half your property and afterwards comes around and offers his assistance to you, isn't it natural that you say to him, "I thank you very much but, with your permission, I'll just worry along by myself?"

AMERICAN INJUSTICES.

Thus we can see how we, as a nation, have mistreated Mexico, depriving her of her territory. Look for a moment how Americans, as individuals, have despoiled the Mexicans of their land, here in our own country. Any business man on the American border, except, perhaps, a land-agent, will tell you that many of the recent developments in the way of town sites, irrigation projects, etc., have been built on land that was once the property of Mexican families—deeded to them by the various state governments. Their lands have passed into the hands of Americans and have been divided up and sold. The original owners did not sell. Neither did they receive of the profits when it was sold. It was taken from them by unfair and unjust means and they were powerless to protect themselves from the theft. It has been the writer's privilege to know intimately an American who is making an effort to recover for the original owners some of these lands of which they have been unjustly deprived. This person made the statement that many of these sharks in greed for land and the profit thereof had never even taken the trouble to establish a limitation title to the land they were selling so sure were they that the ignorant Mexicans they had robbed would make no resistance. This is just another proof that there are two kinds of Americans—those who commit injustices and those who endeavor to right them. Which class should the church people endorse and assist?

OUR INTERNATIONAL POLICY.

The realization of the fact that we, as a nation have not always played fairly with other nations and individuals is beginning to filter itself into the minds of some of our statesmen and other great thinkers. We are beginning to see that in our dealings with the world at large we have been provincial. Mr. Wilson is our first president who has been able to consider the good of another people at the same time that he considers our own. Our international acts have been fine for us, so what did it matter about the "other fellow?" The grabbing of the Canal Zone is another case in point. We thereby reaped the harvest of the hatred of all Latin-Americans and the reputation of having designs on the whole Western Hemisphere. President Wilson's fight on the Canal tolls question was a determination on his part to make us consider the other nations as well as our own internal interests. It is high time we, as a nation, developed an international conscience, and the Christian people, who are those of broadest vision, must help to cultivate it.

PRESIDENT WILSON QUOTED.

Returning to conditions in Mexico let us consider another quotation from President Wilson's interview:

"They say the Mexicans are not fitted for self-government; and to this I reply that, when properly directed, there is no people not fitted for self-government. . . . . Did you see that dispatch we gave out, from Consul-General Hanna, which detailed his experiences with the army at Monterey? . . . Well, if you read that dispatch, you learned that Mr. Hanna was most agreeably surprised and greatly gratified by the treatment Villa's men gave their prisoners; how they endeavored to live up to the rules of civilized warfare; how they were constantly on the lookout for new information that would relieve them of the stigma of being barbarians. This merely shows that these people, if they get a chance are capable of learning and are anxious to learn."

After having lived a year in a Mexican city which was under the control of the Constitutionalist army, it gives the writer great pleasure to affirm what the President noted in Consul-General Hanna's dispatch. The city has been so quiet and orderly that one would scarcely have known the war was still in progress.

INTERVENTION NOT NEEDED.

There are many good reasons why the United States should not intervene in Mexico, some of which should have particular weight with the Christian people of America. Many denominations have mission work in different parts of the republic. Several have invested much money in school buildings, hospitals, etc. Much of this money was the product of rigid self-sacrifice on the part of pious Christians. Many American missionaries have spent their years in a patient, arduous effort to establish Protestantism in that priest-ridden country. In the judgment of every missionary whose opinion the writer has had the opportunity to learn, intervention would not only ruin all the mission work already done in the Republic, but would prevent the resumption of labor there by American missionaries, for decades.

Another potent reason against intervention is that, in the judgment of most people familiar with the Mexicans, the results would not be humanitarian. In the first place, a victorious war would mean the extermination of all loyal, patriotic Mexicans. The hopelessness of the struggle would not deter them from fighting it "to the finish." We would then have the task of building a nation out of such riff-raff of time-servers and traitors as remained. We might colonize, as we did the land we took while in process of exterminating the American Indian and make the country over—Americanize it; but, could we, in this advanced age persuade ourselves or the world that we were doing it for the sake of humanity?

An indirect reason, and one which every patriotic American church member should consider, is this: the time, energy and money spent in conquering and regulating Mexico is needed here in our own land for combating the many evils in our own land, two of which are especially menacing, in the opinion of one who has lived across the Rio Grande. The first is the divorce, and the second, the encroachment on American politics of the Roman Catholic Church.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

In the eyes of a person who has labored among and for a people whose faults and imperfections are due almost entirely to the degrading influence of their spiritual guides, the steady increase of the power of that same system of religion in our own country, is an awful thing. Our southern border is in especial danger at the present time. Wherever the Constitutionalist army is victorious, one of their first acts is to close the Catholic churches, confiscate the convents and advise the nuns and priests to leave the country. Harsh treatment? Certainly. But these men know what they are about. They know from their national history and from their own personal experience that there can be no liberty where the Catholic Church is in power. The most accessible place of exit for these fleeing propagators of ignorance and immorality is our southern border. Most certainly the crossing of the border-line does not change their morals or lessen their zeal for the church. They are not sitting with folded hands in this free land of ours. Undoubtedly it is the desire of Rome that Mexico become a part of the United States, for with the added population who would eventually become voters, the balance of political power would then be in the hands of the Roman Catholic Church.

OTHER THAN BUSINESS INTERESTS.

What further argument is necessary to demonstrate the proposition stated in the beginning of this writing? Are not these sufficient to show that the American Protestant has interests at stake in Mexico that differ from those of the politician and the representative of what we term "Big Business." What then, are we to do? Let us do all in our power to assist our President in his present policy of peace. Not long ago, when our forces took Vera Cruz the President received a flood of telegrams and letters from private individuals, state officers, commercial clubs, etc., congratulating him and supporting his "policy" because they thought it was going to mean war. Now, if the American Protestants, great and small, through telegrams, letters and the religious press would let the administration know they are in sympathy with their policy of patience and peace, it doubtless would have a good effect. Up to the present, President Wilson has been showing the world how a Christian nation should deal with a neighbor in distress. Many powerful agents have been trying to force him to take advantage of the weakened conditions of that neighbor to profit thereby. If the great American Protestant Church declares firmly for the President's policy, by the grace of God, it must succeed!

The Prohibition Issue in Texas

How a Very Live Question Refused to be Killed in the Lone Star State.

BY PERRY J. RICE.

POLITICALLY, Texas is strongly Democratic. It is hardly worth while for the other parties to nominate candidates at all. But this does not mean that there is no issue for the voters to decide. In recent years the question of prohibition has been very prominent, and the Democratic party has been pretty evenly divided into "pros" and "antis." Four years ago the pre-primary campaign was a very strenuous one, and while the "antis" won, it is openly alleged that they stole their victory. It is almost an unwritten law in the state that the governor shall be given two terms, and therefore, at the next state election little effort was made to nominate a prohibitionist. This year, however, the question was again to the fore and the campaign, recently closed, was one of the bitterest the state has ever known.

The "pros" placed Thomas H. Ball, of Houston, in the field as their candidate. He is a lawyer of recognized ability and has served his state in various capacities, both at Austin and in Washington. He has been a strong supporter of the national party policies and leaders all his life. He has moreover, been pronounced advocate of state wide prohibition for a good many years, and is in every way worthy of the office of governor of the great Lone Star State.

AN "ANTI" PUT FORWARD.

The "antis" placed in the field James E. Ferguson, of Temple, a farmer-banker, who, up to the time he announced himself as a candidate for governor, was scarcely known outside the county in which he lived. He had made a success of business and is reputed to be worth several hundred thousand dollars and, in his first speech, announced that he would pay all his campaign expenses out of his own funds. He had back of him, of course, all the powerful liquor interests of the state and, it is freely alleged, of the nation as well. He was shrewd enough not to declare himself antagonistic to prohibition, though he freely said he was an "anti" so far as state wide prohibition is concerned. His platfrom was a declaration against any further agitation of the prohibition question and any further legislation, either for or against it. He promised to veto any measure dealing with the question that might be presented to him.

In order to divert the minds of the people from the prohibition issue, he advocated a measure for the relief of the tenant farmers of the state, of whom there are upwards of two hundred thousand. He proposed to have a law enacted making it impossible to charge more than a fixed crop rental, a law that his opponents say is strikingly socialistic in its tendency and unconstitutional. That it was a subterfuge on the part of himself is evident from the fact that he, himself, has been a party to schemes by which the farmers have been charged exorbitant rentals in money and crops.

In the campaign which followed bitter personalities were indulged in freely. Mr. Ball was accused of being in league with the "interests," of being a drinking man, and a member of clubs where liquor is sold. He was charged with being disloyal to the national administration, and when he met this with letters from President Wilson and Secretary Bryan endorsing his candidacy, the "antis" immediately raised the cry of states rights and severely criticized the president and secretary for federal interference in state affairs. A tirade of invective against "political preachers" was started which was intended to nullify the activities of the Anti-Saloon League and its leaders. Money was freely used—Mr. Ferguson himself spent $31,000 and, it is confidently believed, the whiskey interests spent large sums secretly. Men were sent, in one sort of disguise or another so as to hide their real purpose, to visit the farmers that could not be reached easily and the labor vote was strongly solicited.

Many of the supporters of Mr. Ball were lawyers and men of prominence who were drawn to him for other reasons than because he was a prohibitionist and, therefore, lent him only a half hearted support. Ex-Senator Joseph W. Bailey campaigned for him, and while he is a man of great power and has many friends, he has many enemies as well, and it is an open question whether he helped more than he hindered. Many other things contributed to darken the issue, and the result was the nomination of Mr. Ferguson by a majority of 38,397 over Mr. Ball. The question of submission for constitutional amendment was defeated by 22,366 votes.

The "antis" have been hilarious. They have been saying over and over through the press and in conversation that the prohibition issue is dead. But they are having a hard time to keep it dead. The state convention, held in El Paso has just closed its session. It was an "anti" convention through and through. The steam roller was used remorselessly and still the liveliest session of all was the one in which the convention was forced to face the prohibition issue. Mr. Bailey sprung it in the form of a plank submitted by the minority of the committee on platform and resolutions, declaring against national prohibition. The situation was interesting. Mr. Bailey, who had been a champion of state wide prohibiton, caused to be presented a resolution declaring against nation wide prohibition by federal enactment on the basis of states rights, and an "anti" convention refused to adopt it because of the promise of their nominee for governor that he would have nothing to do with the issue. Nearly three hours of debate followed the presentation of the resolution in which Mr. Bailey, with his really great powers of oratory, played the conspicuous part. Jake Wolters, the real leader of the "antis," and Mr. Ferguson, the nominee for governor both spoke against the adoption of the resolution in a vain effort to bury the issue that they have so vociferously declared was dead.

Thus it turned out that after a long and strenuous campaign to kill the prohibition issue in Texas, that same issue seems more live than ever before!

WAR

By Thomas Curtis Clark

A PROUD KING dreamed in his gilded chair;
He dreamed—and he sighed, for the lands were fair;
A king said, "Yea!"—it was but a breath;
And a million men marched toward the gates of death.

A million wives gasped as their husbands sped;
A million babes starved as their fathers bled.
A king sought gain in the north and south—
And a million men marched toward the cannon's mouth.

Lake Geneva Y.M.C.A. Encampment

Signs of the Coming of the Kingdom Seen in a Summer Conference.

BY I. E. BROWN.

ANYONE at all interested in Christian work for young men would need to have a heart of stone not to be stirred by the events which have been taking place at the Young Men's Christian Association encampment at Williams Bay on Lake Geneva during this summer. While the season is far from finished with at least four conferences yet to come, the events of the last few weeks are well worth record.

THE STUDENT SUMMER CONFERENCE.

First of all there came the Student's Summer School of the Middle West which convened on July 12 for a ten days' session. This brought together a body of students and professors numbering 830 men coming from the great universities of this region from the denominational colleges, from preparatory schools and academies, and from the professional schools, with a sprinkling of older boys from the high schools. Great gatherings for students have been held at Lake Geneva every year since 1890, but the experienced leaders agree that there never was a gathering like that of the present season.

Among the platform speakers were such men as Robert E. Speer, Bishop McDowell, Bishop Henderson, Fred B. Smith and Ethan T. Colton, every one a master of public address.

The platform meeting, however, was but one form of activity. The group conferences and the twilight talks on life work were of tremendous moment with such leaders and speakers as John Timothy Stone, L. Wilbur Messer and Ethan T. Colton, each man presenting some phase of religious work.

After all has been said, however, perhaps the marked feature of the whole conference was the plan of group Bible classes with approximately sixteen men in each class, under the leadership of some forty or fifty experienced Bible study teachers. These leaders were gathered from college and university life and from the ranks of the Young Men's Christian Association, local, state and international.

A striking feature of the Student Conference this year was the presence of students from foreign lands. More than one hundred men were present from India, China, Korea, Japan and from twelve of the Latin American countries. A large proportion of these were either non-Christian or those who had become indifferent to a nominal Christianity. The impact of influence upon these men which was made by the presence of such a great group of virile earnest Christian leaders was very marked. Perhaps it was not surprising, it certainly was encouraging, even exhilarating to know that man after man under these influences came definitely and decidedly into the Christian life. Within this group were included four Chinese and one Japanese who asked for immediate baptism and were accorded this rite under the hand of Bishop McDowell with the assisance of Bishop Henderson of Chattanooga, Tenn., and Dr. Cleland B. McAfee of McCormick Theological Seminary.

EMPLOYED OFFICERS CONFERENCE.

With the exodus of this large body of students and leaders, there began the incoming tide of the Employed Officers of Young Men's Christian Associations of the United States and Canada, with a sprinkling of those who came from other lands. Again the camp overflowed, more than eight hundred being fed at a single meal. It is difficult to enumerate the striking features of this conference. Time might be taken in dwelling upon the group conferences of physical directors, educational directors, or boys' work directors, employment and vocational directors, or of student secretaries, state secretaries, or general secretaries, and other groups, but the limits of space forbid.

There must not be omitted, however, the tremendous influence exerted by one of the Geneva preachers, Rev. Allen Stockdale in his series of inspirational addresses. Many a man was sent back to his difficult field with a new inspiration as he remembered his masterly address on "The Luxury of Struggle," even as many a student must return to his institution with a new vision caught from Bishop McDowell's great sermon on "Jesus, the Redeemer."

SUMMER TERM OF ASSOCIATION COLLEGE.

It may safely be taken for granted that many readers of THE CENTURY do not know that for twenty-five years the Young Men's Christian Association College of Chicago has conducted a summer term at the lake, or that the attendance of students has increased from 21 in 1890 to more than 500 in 1914. These students are gathered not only from every section of the United States and Canada, but also from foreign lands. Sitting in the class rooms during the month of July have been men from Australia, New Zealand, China and India.

The students have been grouped in a number of schools, as the School of Association Administration, the School of Physical Education, the School of Railroad Work, the School of County Work, the School of Educational Work, the School of Industrial Work. Each school has its own dean and group of instructors. The work of the class room is just as rigorous and exacting as that of any other first-class educational institution. The students bend over their text books or lecture notes, are called upon for recitations, attempt to pass their examinations and if successful secure their certificates of work done. With nearly a hundred instructors and special lecturers and with approximately a hundred courses offered, the institution presents a complex but well organized school of instruction.

Among the strong leaders and lecturers this year are President King of Oberlin, and Dean Charles R. Brown of Yale Divinity School, whose messages are always timely and helpful.

Aside and beyond all addresses, lectures, class room work, is the Christian fellowship which is very strongly marked, and beyond this the atmosphere of the place which has in it the strength of Christian inspiration, quieting selfishness in daily life and in objective, and leading each human heart under its influence to stretch itself to attain the best.

From commencement day, July 28, there go out from the institution three members of the graduating class to their work in Asia: Mr. C. G. Hoh (Chinese) to Shanghai, A. T. Morrill and H. R. Bunce to Manila. This simple fact only emphasizes the world-wide influence of the institution which now has its representative on every continent.

WATCH MADE FOR BLIND.

In order that the sightless may know the time accurately, a watch has been constructed with raised dots and dashes on the dial. The hands are so made that touching them does not injure the works. This watch does not have a crystal, but is of the hunting-case type, the cover being released upon pressing a spring, flying open, and permitting the hands and face of the dial to be fingered by the blind.

THE POPE.

POPE PIUS X is dead. He was not a great Pope but he was a good man, carrying into his high office the habits and mental vision of the humble station wherein he was born. He was a democratic soul. The poor and humble were ever near his heart. No Pope was more accessible than he. But whatever strength, whatever positiveness, inhered in his policies is believed to have reflected the coöperative intelligence of the college of cardinals whose powers hedge about and practically control the actions of the Pope unless he be a man of positive constructive genius.

Pius will be remembered for his relentless battle against modernism, a battle which has not by any means reached an issue yet. In France and the United States, and especially in Italy, the movement for liberalizing and democratizing the church goes on with sure progress like the tide.

CHRISTIAN UNITY IN MEXICAN MISSIONS

ONE of the most notable missionary agreements ever entered into has been made by Protestant missionaries concerning Mexico. The American missionaries are now all in this country. Recently they had a meeting at Cincinnati, and devised a tentative agreement concerning the re-entering of that mission field. The report of that meeting was given in The Christian Century of July 23 by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison.

With almost absolute unanimity it was decided to recommend to the various mission Boards:

1. A joint evangelical publishing plant in Mexico City, with a common depository and distributing agency and the union in a single publication of the half dozen and more church papers now published.

2. The establishment of one Evangelical Bible Institute and Theological Seminary to provide a complete course of theological instruction with courses in Bible, methods of church work, music, Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. secretaries' courses, as well as courses for deaconesses and lay workers; this school to be located at Coyoacan.

3. The establishment of a central Union College for men and women with connected normal, industrial and kindergarten training schools; that in each mission territory there be at least one high school for boys and one for girls, and that there be a consolidation of the higher grades of primary schools in places occupied by two or more denominations, and that plans be consummated through a permanent committee on education for unifying all educational work.

4. That all Protestant churches in Mexico bear the one name, "The Evangelical Church of Mexico," followed, if desired, by the name of the special denomination in brackets, and that there be universal transfer of members among the participating churches by means of a common form of credential used by all.

5. The re-districting of the entire country, assigning to each Board a clearly defined territory, thus preventing overlapping at some points while leaving elsewhere great populations entirely unreached. This will mean in many cases the withdrawal by some Boards from places long occupied. In this way the entire area of the country was assigned to some specific church or society as its exclusive responsibility. As, for instance, the field of the American Board (Congregational) will be the states of Chihuahua, Sonora and Sinaloa as far south as the Sinaloa River. Its old station at Guadalajara, in Jalisco, is assigned with adjacent territory to the Methodist Board. The assignment to the Disciples was entirely satisfactory to the representatives of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions which was given its present field of operation with sufficient neighboring territory for enlargement—with some probable future adjustments to be made with adjacent workers.

Secretary Barton, of the Congregational Board, says of this agreement, "For comprehension, sanity and boldness of plan, for thoroughness of consideration and unanimity of conclusions, this conference must, in the annals of the missionary propaganda, be recorded as one of the most, if not the most, significant ever held in the interests of interdenominational co-operation. While the various recommendations, in order to become effective, must yet have the indorsement of the various missionary boards, there is every reason to expect that many will meet with immediate approval. Another new precedent has been established for sane Christian co-operation in the interest of the speedy evangelization of the world."

Of course it is to be understood that this agreement must be approved by the various mission boards, which are the Congregationalists, the Presbyterians, North and South, the Methodists, North and South, the Northern Baptists, Friends, Disciples, the Y. M. C. A. and the American Bible Society. The Episcopalians were represented in the conference, and to their honor approved the plan, but were powerless to take action in the matter, as their plan of organization does not commit this power to a mission board. Only one denomination refused to attend, the Southern Baptists.

If this plan prevails, missionary work in Mexico will be performed on the most thoroughly Christian lines, so far as denominational comity is concerned, which modern knowledge and Christian charity can make possible.

AMERICAN FASHIONS FOR WOMEN

ONE good result of the war has already been announced. It is that American dressmakers are ready to declare their independence of Paris dressmakers, and strike out on new lines in fashions for American women. If this shall be and the result shall bring us sensible, attractive, hygienic and modest apparel, men will not have died in vain. For not a few men have killed themselves dressing their wives in abominable fashions from Paris. It has been killing the women, too; and destroying modesty and good taste. Give us American fashions for American women; and let them be pretty as the American woman is pretty, modest as the American woman is modest. Let them be designed with a view to utility, beauty, reasonable economy and simple good taste. Maybe in future the historian will look back and say, "The War of 1914 was a blessing to the world; for it liberated the women of Christendom from the tyranny and indecency of the Paris fashions."

Whether this shall be, or not, the American nation of men at least will watch developments in this movement for American-made fashions for women almost as closely as the newly opened markets for American trade opened up by the war.

THE OPPORTUNITY OF LABOR SUNDAY

IT IS gratifying that the Church in recent years has sensed the opportunity of Labor Sunday. This year on September 6 there will sound forth from thousands of pulpits an appeal for peaceful settlement of labor disputes and the better understanding of capital and labor.

Only a very few years ago, labor leaders were accustomed to say that the Church was in league with capital. It was openly charged that the wrongs suffered by laboring men were unheeded by the disciples of the Carpenter.

Now there is a very different note being struck. Last year there went out literature from labor headquarters to the ministers setting forth the aims of organized labor. There is a movement on to divorce organized labor from the saloon and hold meetings of the unions in halls not controlled by liquor-dealers. As soon as the Church showed herself sensitive to the conscientious convictions of laboring men, there was an immediate increase of sensibility in labor quarters to the conscience of the Church on certain matters.

The minister on Labor Sunday has opportunity to set forth the dignity of labor, for there is no place in our world for either idle rich or idle poor. The improvement of working conditions for women, and the abolition of child labor are subjects upon which every man of whatever economic school should be able to speak. The arbitration of labor disputes, the guarantee of one day in seven as rest for the laboring man, and the reduction of working hours to a schedule that gives opportunity for the higher life, are great living themes. The Social Creed of the Churches, put forth by the denominations represented in the Federation declares for the abolition of the "sweating" system. It insists upon a living wage, and for industrial insurance to protect against rapid changes in the economic situation. The improvement of safety devices to protect the worker from accident, the old age pension, and a more equitable division of the fruits of industry are also items of our present social creed. Those who are to speak on Labor Sunday cannot do better than to read Ward's Social Creed of the Churches which can be secured from the Disciples Publication Society or any other publisher.

The Commission on Social Service and the Rural Church of the Disciples of Christ is arranging for some notable service for the Disciples in the near future. A part of the plans calls for a social service bulletin and a more adequate lantern slide service on social matters. This commission is composed of J. H. Mohorter, O. F. Jordan, F. E. Lumley, H. H. Peters and A. W. Taylor. This commission urges that the churches of our fellowship everywhere observe Labor Sunday.

ILLINOIS' NEW SECRETARY.

THE selection of John R. Golden, of Angola, Ind., for state secretary of Illinois, will be gratifying to Disciples all over the state. With the exception of the past year, Mr. Golden has spent his entire life in Illinois. He is a graduate of Eureka College. He has served a term in the state legislature. He has had important pastorates at Gibson City and Springfield, where his ministry was eminently successful. He knows Illinois people and is equipped for leadership among them.

The function of the state missionary society is undergoing rapid change in these days. With over seven hundred churches in the state, an average of seven to a county, the new word in state missions must be conservation, especially since fifty churches were lost from our year-book in five years, and perhaps a careful accounting would wipe out many more. The state missionary society must now mother weak churches into efficiency and weld the Illinois Disciples into more conscious unity, and give them a greater esprit de corps.

Mr. Golden comes to the secretaryship aware of these new tendencies in state missions. We shall look for a completely revised program under his leadership. He is come to be the leader of Illinois churches. He will be welcome in all our pulpits. We shall await his declaration of policy in the state convention with great interest.

A Questionnaire on the California Convention's Recent Action

In Which Every Reader of the Christian Century is Invited to Participate.

FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH of Berkeley, Cal., was excommunicated from the state missionary convention of northern California in July for receiving into its membership unimmersed Christian people who brought credentials from various Protestant evangelical churches such as Presbyterian, Methodist and the rest.

This is the first time in the entire history of the Disciples of Christ that a church—a congregation of Christian believers—has been formally excommunicated from the fellowship of other Disciples' churches. It raises some of the most fundamental and serious questions which our people have had to face in the past fifty years, perhaps in their entire century of history. I wish with the most dispassionate purpose to secure a consensus of the opinion of our brotherhood, including both laymen and ministers. I have prepared this questionnaire for that purpose, and I will welcome from any reader of The Christian Century a frank expression on the issues involved. In order that the reader may have clearly before him the material facts of the situation let me state them, concisely, as I understand them:

BERKELEY'S PRACTICE AND POINT OF VIEW

Berkeley church insists that it is loyal to every fundamental ideal of the Disciples of Christ and that the step in question is nothing at all but a further logical and fraternal application of both the principle of Christian unity and that of loyalty to Jesus Christ.

It affirms that these persons whom it receives into its fellowship are Christians, members of the Church of Christ; that Christ has already received them into His Church, which being so, a church of Christ has no choice save to receive them also. To refuse to receive them, the Berkeley church says, is essentially a sectarian act and a violation both of the will of Christ and the Disciples' principle of Christian unity.

The church holds inviolate the practice of immersion only, in the administration of baptism to those who come into its membership by primary obedience.

In the dismissal of an unimmersed member the church gives back the letter he brought with him, together with a letter of its own commending the Christian character of the bearer and stating the fact as to his manner of being received into Berkeley Church. The purpose of this is to avoid confusion or embarrassment to other churches of Disciples which might not wish to receive an unimmersed person into their membership.

The Berkeley church and its pastor, H. J. Loken, hold, as I have no reason to doubt, the generally accepted evangelical views of the Bible and the Divinity of Christ and are in all respects faithful to the missionary imperative of our Lord, even to the point of extraordinary generosity. I do not know Mr. Loken personally, but he is described as a preacher of unusual power, and a humble and gracious Christian man.

QUESTIONS.

1. Do you hold that Berkeley church is doing wrong in receiving these Christian people? IF SO, PLEASE STATE WHY.

2. If you disapprove of Berkeley's practice do you consider it a grave and fundamental departure from the essential principles of the Disciples, or is it one of those things that lie naturally within the field of Christian liberty conceded by the genius of our movement to belong to the local congregation?

3. What is your opinion as to the action of the California convention in assuming to judge as to the orthodoxy of the church and to excommunicate it from their missionary co-operation? Does the convention's action, in your opinion, constitute a violation of any fundamental principle held dear by the Disciples of Christ and essential to our program for unity? Can you see any difference between ecclesiasticism and what this convention did?

4. If you disapprove of the action of the convention what do you suggest should be done by the brotherhood outside of California to induce the California brethren to remedy their error?

In answering the above question it is not necessary to re-write the questions. They may be referred to by number. Replies may be as brief as is consistent with clearness.

Peace Delegates Ask That Love Rule

Report and Declaration of the American Delegates at the International Conference of the Church Peace Union, Held At Constance, Germany, August 2, and at London August 5, 1914, to The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and its Commission on Peace and Arbitration.

In behalf of the delegates from the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, the undersigned were appointed as a Special Committee to prepare and publish to our brethren at home a Declaration and Summary concerning the recent momentous conference of the Church Peace Union,—which conference, begun at Constance on Sunday, August 2, was continued in London on Wednesday, August 5. In so doing we are following the example of the English delegates to the conference, whose terse and weighty utterance to the brethren in England was published in the London Times, Daily Chronicle, and other newspapers on August 5.

In making this report we are authorized to speak substantially for the entire body of American delegates to the Church Peace Conference.

AN HOUR FOR CALMNESS AND VISION.

It is significant that this first International Conference of the Churches for the promotion of friendship and peace between the nations of the world occurred at a moment when we were all obliged to witness an amazing development of the war fever, and the widespread misery caused on all sides by the mere preparations for battle; and we have had a unique opportunity to witness the sincere and profound reluctance with which the sober and serious element in every nation concerned has found itself involved in the imminent cataclysm. Whatever the immediate outcome may be, we are more than ever confident and convinced that this sober and serious element of every Christian nation is now, as always, moving under the guidance and blessing of Almighty God our Father. Our dismay is not despair. No note of pessimism has been heard at any of the four sessions of our conference. There is a general consciousness that now more than ever we are called to co-operate in the spirit of Jesus Christ, so that no self-will or bitterness or impatience on our part shall cloud our vision, or hinder us from seizing the opportunity which God is giving us to do his will in the world—waiting upon the Lord.

OUR CHRISTIAN IDEALISM IS CONFIRMED.

This war, so far from indicating the futility of our plans and endeavors, or the foolishness of Christian idealism, is demonstrating that the methods of brute force, and of inconsiderate egotism, are as unintelligent and inefficient as they are un-Christian. We are witnessing the reductio ad absurdum of un-Christian civilization; for peace is not to be secured by preparations for war (even if un-Christian men compel their brothers in self-defence, and for the sake of sacred treaties, to make ready for war). Not that it is in the interests of peace to belittle the spirit of patriotism, but to Christianize it. Like our laws and our culture, our education and commerce and industrialism, so, too, our very patriotism must be pervaded by the mind of Christ and be ready for the discipline of the cross—the sign and symbol, not merely of brotherly love, but of international love, over against the shortsightedness and selfishness of individuals and peoples. As we disperse to our homes and fatherland, that is the message we are bringing

Rev. Peter Ainslie, one of the delegates of the Federal Council of the churches of Christ in America to the International Conference of the Church Peace Union, which was compelled by the war to change its place of meeting early in August, from Constance, Germany, to London.

from this conference; and it is first and foremost a call to international humiliation and prayer in the name and confidence of Christ. The time for men to prevent war is not when events are culminating, but far, far back at the springs of human conduct, individual, national and international. Let us see to it that henceforth "all our fresh springs are in God."

THE HARDER TASK OF THE CHURCHES OF EUROPE.

This is not the moment to dwell on the practical steps which may be taken by us all in common to promote peace among the nations. Some such steps will appear in the four Resolutions which are to be published in due time by the International Committee of our conference. Others will be disclosed afterwards. Meanwhile we desire to emphasize the fact that has been borne in on us by contact with the workers for the Peace Movement in England and Europe generally—that more problems than we Americans were aware of are on the shoulders of those who, under God, are now leading the Churches of Europe; and we are grateful to our Heavenly Father for the skill and wisdom and self-control which, in this trying ordeal, have been vouchsafed to them. For five years previous to the formation of our Church Peace Union, these, our brethren, on this, the eastern side of the Atlantic, have been paving the way for what is now our common task, and it is their actual knowledge of men and means in the different nations of Europe which made it possible for our first International Church Conference for the promotion of peace to be so widely and thoroughly representative.

THE HOUR OF OUR OPPORTUNITY.

We in America have much to contribute henceforth to the common cause, and by our freedom from entangling alliances, and from some traditions which in Europe are an inheritance, we may, if we are properly considerate, be able to do and say some things which Europeans cannot; but after our present privilege of communion with the delegates over here, we know and feel that there is a vast deal for them to do which would be beyond our power. Therefore the determination of our conference to rely on the International Committee for guidance, and for ultimate decisions from time to time—the resolution to "move all together when we move at all"—is a determination which we are sure will commend itself to our brethren in the United States. In the very midst of this internecine conflict of the leading nations of Europe, there will be henceforth from each of them well-chosen and skilful delegates to our International Council, ready and able to contribute of their special experience and prayers to our common endeavors for the peace of the world and the Christianization of all mankind.

Submitted to the Federal Council of the churches of Christ in America and its Committee on Peace and Arbitration, by instruction of the American delegates.

Committee appointed by the delegates representing the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America:

E. R. Hendrix, Chairman.
George William Douglas,
William Pierson Merrill,
Luther B. Wilson,
Frederick Lynch,
Charles S. Macfarland, Secretary.

Dr. Clark to be Honored.

On September 12, Dr. "Father Endeavor" Clark will celebrate his sixty-third birthday, and Christian Endeavorers everywhere will celebrate in their leader's honor. Dr. Clark is not a leader of a lost cause. Figures tell us that this movement, the world over, was never so prosperous. Today there are more than 80,000 Christian Endeavor Societies in the world with more than 4,000,000 members. The first Christian Endeavor Society was formed February 2, 1881, by Dr. Clark in the Williston Congregational Church, Portland, Maine, of which he was pastor. For the past twenty-nine years Dr. Clark has devoted himself exclusively to the work of the Christian Endeavor Society. In this time he has traveled 825,000 miles or a distance equal to thirty-three journeys around the world. Of this distance he has traveled 325,000 miles by water, 433,000 miles by rail, and fully 25,000 miles by horse, camel and jinrikisha. Long may Dr. Clark live to continue his splendid work!

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

LADY COOK SAYS WOMEN MUST FIGHT FOR ENGLAND.

Lady Cook, of England, would enlist 150,000 Englishwomen in an army to defend England against invasion. She suggests the Duchess of Marlborough, Lady Jersey, Princess Louise, Mrs. John Ward and Lady Granard as women who should lead in the organization of such an army, and mentions the Duchess of Marlborough in particular as a woman who would be a good soldier.

The Chicago Herald comments as follows upon this suggestion, under the caption, "A Very Foolish Lady:"

"Lady Cook has launched a campaign to raise armies of Englishwomen, trained and armed like regular soldiers, ready to fight for their country. So says a London cable.

"Lady Cook should realize that the time for foolish chatter has passed and the time for action has arrived. Such suggestions do well enough, perhaps, in the silly season. But when a great nation is grappling with strong enemies they are entirely out of place. Women can do a great deal in war. They always do. They do much of the work that men previously did. They preserve what the men go forth in battle to protect. But as for their fighting or making an effective fighting force the idea could only come from a foolish mind saturated with childish Amazonian legends and blind to the simple facts of life. Even if women would make good soldiers there would be every reason in the world why they should not be called to the colors. It is a great thing for humanity that in time of world-wide war at least half of the human race in warring countries is set apart to bear witness to the ideals of love, peace and service. Woman's highest claim to equality with men, in politics and elsewhere, lies in the fact that she can do woman's work and not man's work.

"Let men war if they will and must! But let women ever remain the vestals who guard the sacred flame of peace and love and service on the high altars of home and country!"

A PAGEANT OF CHILDREN AT NORTHFIELD CONFERENCE.

Contrasts in Childhood was the theme of an interesting pageant presented at Northfield during the summer school of the Women's Foreign Missionary Societies, reports the Congregationalist. Based on the book called "The Child in the Midst," by Mary S. Labaree, the pageant followed its chapters and gave scenes showing successively, The Child in its Helplessness. The Child at Play and at Work, The Child at School, at Worship and at Work for Christ. In each of these scenes the contrast was shown between the lives of children of heathen lands and those of Christian countries. An interesting scene showed old-time Moslem and Brahman schools, with the children repeating their monotonous and meaningless lessons, while the Spirit of Ignorance, in somber black, presided over them in the background. Then came in contrast a pleasant Japanese mission kindergarten filled with joyous children. The climax was the big Christmas tree of the last act, when the Christian boys and girls who were enjoying it, reminded by the Spirit of Missions, a radiant figure in white, of their less fortunate brothers and sisters of other lands who had no Christmas, ran to bring them to share in the Christ-child's birthday celebration, and all dance merrily round the tree, hand in hand. The pageant was held on the lawn of the Hotel Northfield, and the sylvan setting added in no small degree to the charm of the performance. Music was given by an orchestra and a big volunteer chorus.

IS MARRIAGE A FAILURE? IT WOULD SEEM SO SOMETIMES.

At least, that is the opinion of the Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph. Here is the reasoning of this paper:

The emperor of Germany and the king of Great Britain and Ireland are cousins. The late Queen Victoria was their grandmother. The kaiser's mother was King George's aunt. George's father was Wilhelm's uncle. The only daughter of the kaiser was married in May, 1913, to Prince Ernest of Cumberland (now Duke of Brunswick), whose title was English, and who was descended from an uncle of Queen Victoria. It was a wedding worth remembering, for if memory serves it was attended by the czar of Russia and King George, in addition to a regiment or so of less important royalties. The czar of Russia is related to the kaiser by marriage, his wife being the kaiser's cousin, as well as cousin of King George. Her mother and the kaiser's mother were sisters of King George's father. A cousin of Kaiser William, like him one of the Hohenzollerns, is wife of his uncle, the Duke of Connaught, governor-general of Canada, who is a son of the late Queen Victoria, and whose oldest sister was the kaiser's mother. Victoria's husband, it will be recalled, was a Coburg prince, and one of her grandsons is now on the throne of the German sovereign dukedom of Saxe-Coburg. The king of Greece is married to a sister of the German emperor, and thus the latter is again linked with the royal family of Great Britain and that of Russia, for the mothers of King George and the czar (sisters) are, like the king of Greece, members of the royal house of Denmark. Alfonso of Spain is half Hapsburg. His wife is a princess of the British royal house. Spain is lined up against Austria and the Triple Alliance.

Life being short, it is hardly worth while to further trace the ramifications of the relationship of royal families of Europe to one another by birth and marriage. It is one of the fictions of European diplomacy that these intermarriages are in some manner a safeguard of the peace of Europe. How much of a fiction it is one may easily perceive by contemplating the condition of Europe at this moment.

WOMEN URGE FEDERAL REGULATION OF FOOD PRICES.

Regulation of food prices by the federal authorities was urged at a meeting of the Women's City Club, Chicago, last week. The standardization of restaurants and bakeries also was discussed.

Resolutions charging collusion of dealers to raise prices because of the European war, drawn up by the foods and markets committee of the organization, were presented by Mrs. Lucy B. Owen and adopted.

At the suffrage shop, conducted by the women, butter was sold at 31 cents a pound and eggs at 27 cents. A number of buyers were disappointed because of the limited supply.

JAPAN WOMEN IN INDUSTRY.

The women in Japan are taking the places of men as clerks in stores. They work in offices. They are becoming teachers, dentists, writers. As for industry the influx of women in factories has been phenomenal since the war with Russia. There is no field of activity that woman does not seek to penetrate. In Russia the same thing is happening. She is becoming a close second to man in the race for economic independence. What is taking place in Japan and Russia is also taking place in the Islam countries, in South Africa, and to some extent even in China.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE ENDORSED BY EDUCATION ASSOCIATION.

Woman's rights were recognized to the fullest extent by the National Educational Association, which recently met at St. Paul, Minn. It passed resolutions endorsing woman suffrage and equal pay for teachers, regardless of sex, and allotted five of its ten vice-presidencies to women. The delegation of active suffragists left the hall with broad smiles, it is reported.

"We were given everything we asked," they said.

The clause in the resolution dealing with suffrage read: "The association with suffrage read: the association regards efficiency and merit, rather than sex, as the principle on which appointment and selections should be made and therefore declares itself in favor of the political equality of the sexes, and equal pay for equal services."

MY MOTHER'S LIFE.

JOHN MASEFIELD, IN "THE STORY OF A ROUND HOUSE AND OTHER POEMS."

In the dark womb where I began
My mother's life made me a man.
Through all the months of human birth
Her beauty fed my common earth.
I cannot see, nor breathe, nor stir,
But through the death of some of her.

Down in the darkness of the grave
She can not see the life she gave.
For all her love, she can not tell
Whether I use it ill or well,
Nor knock at dusty doors to find
Her beauty dusty in the mind.

If the grave's gates could be undone,
She would not know her little son.
I am so grown. If we should meet
She would pass by me in the street,
Unless my soul's face let her see
My sense of what she did for me.

What have I done to keep in mind
My debt to her and womankind?
What woman's happier life repays
Her for those months of wretched days?
For all my mouthless body leeched
Ere birth's releasing hell was reached?

What have I done, or tried, or said
In thanks to that dear woman dead?
Men triumph over women still,
Men trample woman's rights at will,
And man's lust roves the world untamed.

O grave, keep shut lest I be shamed.

Of Human Interest

Noted Chinaman on Liquor.

Wu Ting Fang, who is characterized as the most popular Chinese diplomat ever sent to Washington, in an interview published in "Harper's Monthly" thus expresses the sympathy of his country with the cause of prohibition:

"China, waging war on opium, recognizes in this fact (America's prohibition reform) a kindred active moral force, . . . and, shaking hands with her sister republic across the seas, hopes that the latter will some day be as free from alcohol poisons as China hopes to be of opium. The facts and arguments adduced against strong drink . . . are set forth in such a clear, convincing manner in a book written by a talented American woman that soon after reading it I became a teetotaler."

Lincoln's Way of Putting It.

James G. Blaine used to tell a story showing the contrast between senatorial dignity and Presidential simplicity. He was a member of a joint committee to wait upon the president. Senator Foot of Vermont, one of the most dignified of men, was chairman. On being ushered into the presence of President Lincoln, Mr. Foot involuntarily struck an attitude, and said in his stateliest manner, "Mr. President, we have been appointed a committee on the part of the two Houses of Congress to apprise you that they have met and organized, and are ready to receive any communication which it may be your pleasure to make to them." Mr. Lincoln stepped up and, taking him familarly by one button, said "Now, look here, Foot, if it is a matter of life and death with you, I can send my message in today; but if it isn't, I should like to keep it till tomorrow to slick it up a little."

Mark Twain's Hard Luck.

The number of anecdotes foreign papers print about Mark Twain show how world-wide is the famous humorist's popularity. Here is an amusing story from a German paper, "Das Buch für Alle:"

In the course of one of his lecture trips Mark Twain arrived at a small town. Before dinner he went to a barber-shop to be shaved.

"You are a stranger?" asked the barber.

"Yes," Mark Twain replied. "This is the first time I've been here."

"You chose a good time to come," the barber continued. "Mark Twain is going to read and lecture to-night. You'll go, I suppose?".

"Oh, I guess so."

"Have you bought your ticket?"

"Not yet."

"But everything is sold out. You'll have to stand."

"How very annoying!" Mark Twain said, with a sigh. "I never saw such luck! I always have to stand when that fellow lectures."

An Editor's Rights.

The editor of the "Interior" was once criticised for his use of expletives; but he asserts his independence in the following choice sentence: "We are going to insist upon our copyright, and we warn whomsoever it may concern to let our expletive property alone. We will give a sample of it, so as to scare everybody: 'Oh, you old baldachino! you satyr-eyed gargoyle! you windy balcony! you crooked corbel! For a cent we would knock you into the middle of next week with the butt-end of a vestibule!'"

Memories of Dickens.

Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith, while in London, sought out and visited the various places made memorable by their connection with Charles Dickens' name. Mr Smith was especially impressed by the fact that memories of Dickens were still vivid in the minds of the people. A little printer boy showed him where Dickens earned six shillings a week, tying up and labeling pots of blacking.

ABOUT PREACHERS AND OTHERS.

Gladstone on the Rural Pastor.

Mr. S. R. Crockett tell us that Mr. Gladstone expressed something like envy of the minister's quiet rural life, and said his own ideal would be to end his life in such a place, for circumstances, not choice, had cast him into politics. Crockett spoke of the reverence and love which was felt for the veteran leader by humble folk in many a remote corner of Scotland. "I know, I know," said Mr. Gladstone, "I do not deserve it, but I never come to Scotland without the love of the common people coming to me like a song or prayer."

A Story from Ian Maclaren.

A story illustrating the reticence of the Scotch regarding their private affairs was once told by Ian Maclaren. A train was at a railroad station, when a porter put his head into a car, and called out: "Any one in this car for Doun? Change for Doun. Any one for Doun?" No one moved; and in a few minutes the train was speeding along, not to stop again for nearly an hour. Then an old Scotch woman turned to a lady sitting near her, and said, "I'm for Doun, but I'd no' tell that man so."

They Understood Him.

A Friend minister, who removed from Nantucket to Hudson, N. Y., was once attending a meeting where the people had been urged without avail to come forward and fill up the front seats. At last he arose and said, "Friends, fleet forward: There is too much weight aft to sail well;" and the people came.

Placing a Limit.

The Committee on the Revision of the Articles of Faith had recommended the adoption of a declaration to the effect that all infants are saved. The recommendation was adopted unanimously. "Now, Mr. Moderator," said a delegate from Pittsburg, Pa., with preternatural solemnity, "I move that this be declared retroactive." But the moderator did not seem to hear him.

She Was Pleased.

A Methodist preacher in Jacksonville, Ill., was taking his turn—preaching at the hospital for the insane at 3 p. m. While preaching he noticed a woman smiling, who seemed to be pleased and taking in the sermon. When services closed he said to her: "You seemed to be very much pleased. What part of the sermon pleased you?" She said: "That part where Pharaoh had them drowning the babies and I thought what a pity they did not chuck you under."

up and labeling pots of blacking.

"Oh, I knew him, gov'nor," was the usual answer of the older inhabitants to Mr Smith's inquiries. "Over there he used to live, and it ain't fur from here to Camden Town, where he lived when he was workin' in the blacking place." He was even able to find an urchin who could point out the spot where Dickens "dropped stealthily one evening, with fear and trembling, into a dark letter-box up a dark court in Fleet St.," the first of the "Sketches by Boz."

He was especially pleased with his visit to the house where Dickens went to board after his marriage. Of this, he says:

"The place is still a delightful, typically English boarding house, kept by two of the most charming old ladies you ever saw. Dickens and his wife occupied a little tucked-up room tacked on to the back of the house. I measured the place myself, and it was eight feet every way. It has one small window, looking out into the back yard. It was the mouldiest and stuffiest old place you can imagine, but it was there that Dickens wrote the most of the 'Pickwick Papers.'"

It Was Cruel of Mr. Howells.

When W. D. Howells was editing a magazine, so the story runs, a young man called on him at the office and offered him a poem. Mr. Howells read the poem and thought it was good, but somehow it seemed rather familiar. "Did you write this unaided?". he asked.

"I did," replied the youthful poet. "I wrote every line of it."

"Then I am very glad to meet you, Lord Byron," said Mr. Howells. "But I was under the impression that you had died some years ago!"

Was It a Compliment?

Irving Bacheller was introduced one day by a mutual friend to a western mountaineer, says the St. Paul Dispatch.

"Mr. Bacheller," exclaimed his friend to the mountaineer, "is an author of repute in the East."

"Oh, yes," drawled the mountaineer. "I know of him. I was locked up in my cabin here by the snow two winters ago and I only had two books to read the whole five months—your book, sir," he said, turning to Mr. Bacheller, "and the Bible, and I read them often."

"Indeed!" said the author, a smile of satisfaction wreathing his face.

"Yes, sir," continued the old mountaineer, "and I never knew before how interesting the Bible was."

Willing to Please.

Thackeray was once at loggerheads with a fellow bohemian of the press, the now-forgotten Angus B. Reach. Reach was touchy about the pronunciation of his name, claiming that it was properly Re-ack, with only two syllables, and the accent on the last.

To Thackeray's discomfort he found himself at dinner one evening with Reach, says the New York Sun. In the course of the meal the novelist had to ask:

"Mr. Reach, shall I send you some mutton?"

"Mr. Thackeray," returned the other, "I must request, sir, that you will not call me out of my name. My name is Re-ack, sir, Re-ack."

"I beg pardon," said Thackeray. But he watched for his opportunity, which came at dessert. A dish of fruit being placed before him, he again addressed himself to Augus B.

"Mr. Re-ack," he said, "may I send you a pe-ack?"

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

It is the purpose of The Christian Century, as occasion affords and space may allow, to present reviews, or excerpts from reviews, of the editor's book on "The Meaning of Baptism." As to the fairness of the criticisms, or even as to their accuracy in representing what the book teaches, it is not necessary to make any comment. Some of these representations the author absolutely repudiates. But the book must stand for itself. We believe our readers will be interested in knowing what others think of it, and the reviews are reprinted simply for their news value.

EDITORIAL IN THE BAPTIST STANDARD (DALLAS, TEXAS.)

A NEW BOOK ON BAPTISM

We have just received "The Meaning of Baptism," by Editor C. C. Morrison, a Disciple minister of Chicago. He repudiates some of the doctrines of Alexander Campbell but holds to the place of baptism in conversion. It is the most ingenious defense of sprinkling we have ever read. Dr. Morrison takes the position that the physical act itself, counts for nothing; that baptism is the initial or inductive rite when one comes into the church and that it has no significance apart from that. Therefore, it makes little difference as to the act itself. He says that "initiate" or "induct" are the best English equivalents of baptizo. Baptist is the rite of induction into the church. "The essential significance of the ceremony, its function and meaning, as near as our English terms can state it, may be expressed as initiation or induction into a religious order, carrying with it also the ideas of consecration and moral cleansing. Baptism is validly solemnized by other forms than immersion. Not all who have been initiated into the church have been immersed." Hence one can get into the church by sprinkling as well as by immersion.

His contention is that since sprinkling or affusion was substituted for immersion within two or three centuries after Christ, that such a meaning must have been inherent in the Greek word baptizo, even in the time of Christ. By the very same argument, the deity of Christ may be disproved. For within a very short time after Christ's ascension, men were attacking this doctrine, just as, later on, they perverted the ordinance of baptism.

In considering the text found in John 3:5, he admits "that the passage means to say that emersion from water (with the implied immersion) is an essential and necessary condition of admittance into the kingdom of God." Here he resorts to a weapon borrowed from destructive critics. He questions the genuineness of the text in the original and refers to Justin Martyr, who, in quoting this expression of Christ, omitted "of water." Justin also omits "of Spirit," and no argument can be built on this without involving a denial of the doctrine of regeneration by the Spirit. Then he attacks the Commission, given in Matthew 28:19-20. Undeniably the Commission emphasizes the importance of baptism while Dr. Morrison depreciates it. He argues, therefore, that this text is not genuine, notwithstanding it is found in the oldest manuscripts. Baptism, he says, has no place in the Commission because Luke and John say nothing about it. He might have denied the doctrine of Incarnation of Christ because Mark didn't say anything about it. He follows Harnack in saying that the Trinitarian formula in the mouth of Jesus was inexplicable. Why will men presume to put into the mouths of Jesus and Paul what they think ought to have been said and deny the things that are unreasonable from a modern viewpoint? It is absurd to gauge their thoughts by our subjective impressions.

In speaking of the Commission, he says that if Christ had given the Commission, that Peter would never have hesitated to go to the home of Cornelius. He might, with equal assurance, have argued that Jesus really said nothing to his disciples about his death before his crucifixion, else, they would have understood the significance of it. Jesus had much to say to them about His death. but we are told that they did not understand His resurrection. Neither did they interpret the full meaning of the Commission until they were thrust out by persecutions and were taught of God in visions and in fruitful missionary service.

Paul stands in the way of this writer as he does in the way of all other destructive critics. In explaining Rom. 6:4, he has much to say about the poetic and mystical mind of Paul. "We must not deny Paul the right of normal, poetic expression." Paul was simply using poetic license in speaking of baptism in terms of burial. "Paul did not allow his poetry, his mysticism, to lead him into any such magic or legalism, and we must not change Paul's statement that we are buried by baptism. Those who have been baptized without immersion, have missed something. They have missed something valuable, something important, but they have missed nothing essential."

But he holds to the doctrine of baptismal regeneration, whatever the meaning of baptism. We quote: "For in actual, historical Christianity, baptism seems to have been regarded as pre-requisite to salvation. No conceivable objections can be made to baptism as a means to salvation that can not be made to it as a means of grace. It is no less repugnant to our moral sense to think of baptism as an act of obedience to Christ after salvation than an act of obedience to him before salvation. Baptism, as a condition of attaining the Christian life, is surely no worse than baptism as a condition of maintaining the Christian life. As truly as faith effects something, baptism effects something. It is a positive factor in salvation. Baptism belongs in the conversion experience. It is a prerequisite to the kind of salvation that Christianity seeks to give. * * * No conversion is complete until faith and repentance have become socialized by baptism. . . . With the Disciples, baptism is no after thought but an integral factor in the conversion of the soul."

In the closing chapter, he exempifies the magnanimous spirit which he enjoins upon other Christian bodies by characterizing the action of congregations that refuse alien immersion or sprinkling: "Such a procedure is the very essence of sectarianism. Indeed, it may properly be called congregational pharisecism and is rightly resented by affusion-practicing churches who know that its 'holier than thou' implications are totally unfounded."

The author of this book takes, practically, the same position as pedo-baptist scholars who do not deny that in the time of Christ, baptizo meant immersion, but who claim that it had little significance apart from its use as an initiatory rite, and that it really makes no difference whether a person is baptized or sprinkled. As the author says, "Every consideration of Christian fraternity demands that he be received as a brother in the Lord, whether his baptism, his initiation into the Church, happen to have been performed by immersion or some other mode. The important and only vital inquiry to make in his case is not 'How did he get into the church,' but 'Is he in?'" He is a little bolder, however, than others in revealing the processes by which he arrives at this conclusion. Before he can deny that immersion only is baptism, he questions the inspiration of certain Scriptures and endeavors to cut out the Commission altogether. He brushes Paul aside with the remark that he is a poet and a mystic and did not mean anything much by referring to baptism as a burial.

We must not lose sight of the symbolism of the ordinance of baptism. It was established by Christ Himself, and, with the Supper, preserves the doctrines of His death and His burial and resurrection. This is a very interesting book, as much so as any volume of fiction we have read this summer. It may be ordered from the Disciples Publication Society, Chicago. Price, $1.25, plus the postage.

FROM THE LIVING CHURCH. (EPISCOPAL, MILWAUKEE.)

The Meaning of Baptism. By Charles Clayton Morrison, editor The Christian Century. (Disciples Publication Society, Chicago, Ill. Price $1.25; by mail $1.35.)

A notable factor in this book is that the author, a leading minister of the Disciples of Christ and editor of their leading paper, essays to show his fellow-members of that religious body the un-wisdom at least of insisting absolutely upon the "immersion dogma," as he calls it, and his successful showing that immersion has been pressed out of all perspective in the system which the Disciples, with other Baptists, have established. Beyond that, it cannot be said that his treatment of the subject is such as to afford hope that it will lead materially toward unity with the historic Church. He does not see in Baptism the instrument of regeneration. He rejects Infant Baptism, though he believes that it would be well to establish some ceremony in connection with infants and the Church. In short, rejecting one of the extremes in Protestant sectarianism relating to the subject of Baptism, he has not gone on to recognize the Churchly position with respect to the sacrament, which is thoroughly embedded in Catholic theology, and the acceptance of which must probably be a sine qua non in Christian reunion.

Disciples Table Talk

Berkeley Church Thriving.

A very heartening report comes from the First Church, Berkeley, California. The church is constantly growing numerically, a remarkable spirit of unity prevails, a deep and growing enthusiasm pervades the whole congregation, and the prospects are that this is the beginning of the greatest year in the history of the church. In the last three Sundays there were eighteen additions.

James M. Rudy Resigns.

When Mr. Rudy, pastor of First Church, Quincy, Ill., entered the race for the legislature he arranged with the board of officers to have his resignation take place about Oct. 1. The campaign has opened up with such strenuosity, however, that he has asked the church to relieve him of all pastoral duties at once so that he may be entirely free to fight his political battles. This action has been taken by the congregation and in order to forestall misrepresentation the church announces that at no time was Mr. Rudy asked to resign.

Burris A. Jenkins in Hospital Again.

Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, pastor of the Linwood Boulevard church at Kansas City, Mo., is having more than his share of experiences with the surgeon. Last spring he went to New York and was operated on for a knee trouole by a specialist in that city. After some weeks Dr. Jenkins returned to his pastoral duties in Kansas City and it was thought that he had been entirely cured. Report now comes that the chronic ailment returned and it has been necessary for him to submit to another operation. The attending physicians at the Kansas City hospital where Dr. Jenkins is being treated report that his condition is not at all dangerous and that an early recovery may be confidently expected.

Seven Years in Evanston.

O. F. Jordan, who recently declined the presidency of Christian University at Canton, Mo., is entering upon the eighth year of a successful ministry in Evanston, one of Chicago's most aristocratic and cultured suburban communities. The membership gain has been steady from year to year, the church now having the largest active membership of any time in its history. Mr. Jordan's annual report says that the gain in cooperation and initiative on the part of the membership has been marked. The people plan more work and execute it without the pastor's immediate supervision as never before. This is the ideal for a working church organization. The details of Mr. Jordan's seventh annual report show that the longer pastorates pay. Both the Evanston church and its pastor are to be congratulated upon the fact that they are to continue the work together.

Chicago Minister in the East.

Wm. C. Hull, pastor of the Douglas Park Church, Chicago, is spending the month of August in the east. His itinerary includes preaching and lecture engagements at Rochester, New York, Westfield, Mass., and Hartford, Conn. Mr. Hull's old home is in Westfield, Mass. Those who knew him might have surmised as much because he has imbibed so much from the New England poets. It is a rare combination when a minister has the ability to reveal the deep things of the spirit with a poet's visualizing power and in terms of the mystic's experience. Mr. Hull is such a preacher.

W. A. Shullenberger at Mexico, Mo.

Inadvertently an item in the Disciples' Table Talk recently spoke of W. A. Shullenberger as located at Trenton, Mo. Everybody knows he is at Mexico, Mo., where he is just completing his fourth year of successful ministry. The fifth year of his pastorate with this church begins October first with a material increase in salary for the pastor. Mr. Shullenberger expects to take the last Sunday night in each month until the end of the calendar year for the review of some one of the powerful and worthy modern books. This series will begin the last Sunday evening in September, and the order of the books will be this: The last Sunday night in September, "The Inside of the Cup." This is perhaps the most talked-of book of recent years. The last Sunday night in October, "The Price of Place," by Blythe. This is held to be one of the greatest of modern books having a national and patriotic significance. The last Sunday night in November, "Lay Down Your Arms," by Baronness von Suttner. This book is held to be the most popular and striking volume in favor of peace published. In view of the present struggle in Europe it will have its own sermon. The last Sunday night in December, "John Barleycorn," by Jack London. Here the author gives his own life's history and the story of his struggle with drink.

Harold Bell Wright, former Disciple minister, whose new book, "The Eyes of the World," is just from the press.

New Home for Bible Chair.

The Bloomington Bible Chair directors, together with a good representation of leading ministers from over the state of Indiana, recently held a meeting at Indianapolis and after mature deliberations purchased a home for the Bible Chair at the State University. The purchase price was $9,000. The property is now occupied by the Delta Zeta sorority but will be vacated before the fall term of school opens. By action of the board of directors Joseph C. Todd, who has been acting as financial secretary and university pastor during the past was designated as dean of the Bloomington Bible Chair. The following resolutions were passed: "Resolved, That we express appreciation of the services of Rev. J. C. Todd in his successful effort in finding funds for the purchase of a permanent site, and that we give him our unqualified endorsement for the work he has done and for the way he has conducted the Bible Chair in all its relations and that he has the full confidence and backing of this board in the plans now proposed for the work of the Bible Chair."

Send Names at Once.

The state convention of the Illinois churches meets in Decatur, Sept. 7-10, with the First Church. With the cooperation of our other congregations we are preparing to entertain the delegates and visitors at reasonable rates, but to avoid confusion it is important that names be sent in so that assignment can be made in advance.

It will be impossible to meet all trains at all stations, but the church is easily located, being in the 400 block on Church street, one block west of postoffie. It is five blocks from the Interurban and nine blocks from railway stations. The depot car goes within a block of the church. Don't forget to send your name to E. M. Smith, 345 W. Packard St., Decatur, Ill.

Disciples of Christ, Colored, Meet.

An annual meeting of the Disciples of Christ, colored, was held at the Lea Avenue Christian Church at Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 11-13. Educational and missionary problems were discussed. From the reports of the sessions of this gathering one would judge that the colored Disciples are developing efficient leaders. The topics of their program indicate an encouraging awareness of their own problems as a people in this country. This is as it should be. All peoples must educate and save themselves.

Matejka, Patmont's Successor.

The following news story taken from the Danville (Ill.) Daily Press will be of interest not merely because of the notoriety attaching to the name of Mr. Patmont, but because it gives an insight into the work which the Foreign Christian Missionary Society is inaugurating among the foreigners who have recently come to our country:

"Michael Matejka, employed by the American Christian Missionary Society, who is now in charge of the First Church of Christ mission in Westville, in a recent report to the local church, shows that he is making rapid progress in his work in the little mining town to the southward. Matejka's work is among all children of the foreign element in Westville.

"He was born in northern Austria and has been doing missionary work among his own people and the people of other European countries in this nation for a number of years and First Church members consider themselves very fortunate in being able to secure so prominent a worker in Danville and Vermilion county.

"He has organized a Sunday-school. On the opening day, three children comprised his "school." Last Sunday after several weeks of labor among the foreigners, there were sixty present, among them several parents who seem to be taking as much interest in the work as their children. His work has not been without its difficulties but he is doing much to increase interest in religion among the foreign classes of Westville and is meeting with hearty co-operation from many sources.

"His Sunday-school is held weekly in the basement of the Westville Congregational church and if the increase in membership continues in the future as it does in the past, he will soon have to seek new quarters. Matejka is, in a way, carrying out the work which Mr. Patmont started several months ago. He speaks eight languages fluently. In addition to teaching the Westville Sunday-school which is under the supervision of the First Church of Christ here, he is teaching a school in Georgetown Heights each Sunday, carrying on this work under the charge of the Georgetown Church of Christ. Every member of the local church is interested in his work and is doing all possible to help him, both financial and moral support."

Ohio Pastor Retained.

George L. Ferguson is just closing the first year of his work as pastor of the church at East Liverpool, Ohio. At a congregational meeting of the church it was heartily and unanimously decided to call him for the second year. Within the space of a few months Mr. Ferguson has become well and favorably known in the community and is having good success in the church for which he labors.

Life Call to S. E. Brewster.

For some time S. E. Brewster, pastor of the First Church in Colorado Springs, Colo., has been considering the position of first assistant in the William A. Sunday evangelistic company. He has declined this offer greatly to the satisfaction of the Colorado Springs Church. Immediately upon the announcement of this decision the church board extended to Mr. Brewster a life call to the pastorate of the local church. During his past three years' pastorate the church has experienced a remarkable growth. The membership has been increased by about 700, making the total membership now about 2,000 and the resident membership about 1,500. The pastor also has succeeded in clearing the church of all indebtedness. For the future Mr. Brewster has many plans, the most important of which is the construction as soon as possible of a new church building. The need is so great that the church is unable to do its best work under present conditions. The Bible-school is so crowded that the men now hold their class meetings in the Y. M. C. A. building.

New Missionary Society.

A new missionary society has been perfected. The National Evangelistic Association of the Disciples at its annual meeting three weeks ago at Bethany Park, organized the Evangelistic Missionary Society of the Disciples of Christ. The daily papers of Indianapolis give the new organization's plans of raising missionary funds and carrying on missionary work through strictly evangelistic channels. The society is reported to be casting about among the cities of the central west for permanent headquarters. Indianapolis seems to be in strong favor. Chicago is urged by some.

Muncie Sunday-school Wins.

Jackson St. Sunday-school at Muncie, Ind., won the contest among the local Sunday-schools of all the churches in that city. This contest participated in by all the schools of the community bids fair to produce permanent good. All the schools have immediately entered upon another friendly contest to see which school can maintain the highest percentage of efficiency for a year.

East Columbus Church Rededicated.

The church at East Columbus, Indiana, has repainted, redecorated, and rededicated its building. All indebtedness was wiped out and the congregation has received an impulse to do greater work than ever before.

Shreveport Camp Meeting.

Summer is the time for big meetings in the south. The Shreveport, La., Church, under the leadership of Claude L. Jones, the pastor, and evangelists D. A. Leak, and J. C. Mason, is holding an annual camp meeting just now. A large tabernacle seating 2,000 has been built for the use of this annual meeting.

Young Church to Celebrate.

East End Church of Quincy, Ill., has prepared to celebrate its third anniversary on Sept. 6. During the three years this church has quadrupled its membership and gained rapidly in both material strength and spiritual growth. Plans have been approved for remodeling the church and the contract has been let to a local firm. The pastor of this new and thriving congregation is J. F. McMahan.

St. Louis Church Sued.

Alleging that the pastor of the First Church of St. Louis intimidated their late brother, R. R. Gordon, a bachelor, into leaving a substantial sum to the church, Isham Gordon, W. R. Gordon, and J. A. Gordon of Moweaqua, Ill., have filed suit at Taylorville, Ill., contesting the will by which the church receives $70,000. Two other brothers, John and Thomas Gordon, who receive $180,000, are named with the church as defendants. It is authoritatively stated, however, that the will was a surprise to J. L. Brandt, the pastor of the church, and to the members of the congregation as well. The deceased Mr. Gordon attended the First Church several months before his death a year ago, and the two brothers named as defendants have been supporters of the church. The outcome of this suit will of course affect greatly the projected plans of the church. The $70,000 was not given outright but the income from that amount was to be used in sustaining the missionary activities of First Church.

E. F. Daugherty in Chautauqua Work.

E. F. Daugherty, the able and popular minister at Vincennes, Ind., is finding time and strength during the summer to fill a number of Chautauqua engagements in the east under the direction of the Redpath Lyceum bureau. His lectures are interpretations of latter day fiction. He discusses such books as "The Inside of the Cup," "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," "John Barleycorn," and "Hagar." Mr. Daugherty's many friends will be glad to know that his efforts on the lecture platform are meeting with popularity and marked success.

Ingersoll an Aid to Christianicy.

In an address at Bethany Park, Claude E. Hill, pastor at Valparaiso, Ind., asserted that the net result of Robert Ingersoll's work had been of assistance in promoting the interests of Christianity in this country. The crudeness of Mr. Ingersoll's criticisms of Christianity and the failures of his prophecies concerning the church were pointed to as serving an aid to the real interests of Christianity. Mr. Hill contends that infidelity in the church can do much more harm than infidelity outside the church.

Galesburg Church Lets Contract.

This is an era of substantial church building projects for the Disciples everywhere. The church at Galesburg has let the contract for a handsome new edifice and work on the building will begin at once. The contract price for the building was not made public but it is understood that the church complete will cost approximately $70,000. Immediate operations will be commenced on the excavating and work on the first story and foundation will start as soon as possible. The building committee of the church does not anticipate that the entire building will be finished before bad weather sets in and it is probable that the first story will be completed and possibly made ready for occupancy this fall. Plans on this feature of the work are not yet complete and ready for announcement. The building committee has conducted a very strenuous campaign for funds for the new structure and the beginning of active work marks a red letter day in the history of the church here. H. A. Denton, pastor of the church and the members of the parish are enthusiastic over the prospect of a new church building.

Ministers Exchange Pastorates.

Thomas Penn Ullom has resigned the pastorate of the First Church, at Lynn Mass., to accept the work at Bristol, Va., and in like manner J. Walker Reynolds, pastor of the Bristol church, is concluding his work to accept the call to Lynn, Mass. A fair exchange like this is no robbery even among churches..

Poplar Bluff, Mo., Loses Pastor.

W. M. Baker has resigned at Poplar Bluff, Mo., to accept the work at Keokuk, Ia. During a six years' pastorate at Poplar Bluff there were more than 400 additions to the church.

Grand Rapids Church Loses Leader.

The Sunday-school work in Grand Rapids, Michigan, has suffered a great loss in the death of Miss Mary E. Ballard, whose life upon this earth was ended July 18. She was a skilled public-school teacher, dealing especially with pupils who were backward in their studies. She was a valued member of the Lyons St. Church of Christ and had been for a number of years superintendent in the Bible-school. At the time of her death she was a teacher of a class of young women.

Peoria Church Plans Institutional Work.

Howett Street Church at Peoria, Ill., is planning to build a church with provision for institutional features. Dr. C. U. Collins on a Sunday evening this month outlined in detail to the congregation the plans that are being projected to erect a building that will meet many urgent needs in the community and be of use every day in the week.

Atchison Church Celebrates.

August 16 was made a high day at Atchison, Kansas. It was the occasion of the first anniversary of the dedication of their new house of worship. The work of the church has greatly prospered during the year. It is a great thing to dedicate a building to the worship of God, but it is a greater thing to be found using the equipment for the purposes dedicated. It is a good custom for churches to observe the anniversary of the dedication of their building and gather together the whole congregation for a renewal of vows to work in the service of God.

J. L. Lobingier Leaves Santa Monica, Cal.

J. Leslie Lobingier has resigned his work in the pastorate at Santa Monica, Cal. Mr. Lobingier is planning to take a post-graduate course at Yale University. His resignation takes effect September 6.

What They Did at Santa Cruz

The Excommunication of Berkeley Church by the California Missionary Convention.

BY MRS. H. V. WHITE.

This article should have reached us in time for publication two weeks ago, but was delayed in transmission. So much has been said already both in report of and in comment upon the California convention's action that it may seem superfluous to some to publish this account at this late day. But the event is so unprecedented, and so evidently fated to become epoch-making, that for the sake of completing the record we believe our readers will be glad to possess this connected account.—THE EDITOR.

GARFIELD PARK, in Santa Cruz is the time honored meeting place for the state convention of the Christian churches of Northern California. There is the spacious tabernacle and about it ever widening circles of cottages which accommodate from year to year the delegates who come from the hot valleys to plan for the missionary interests of the church and incidentally to enjoy the cool sea breezes and to take an occasional dip in the surf. There, in the past, many a problem has been faced and many a battle fought. The weary laborers in the Master's vineyard, scattered far apart during the year, have gained fresh courage and inspiration to carry out their lonely tasks. The fellowship of kindred souls has been sweet indeed, and it has been doubly precious since the little band of preachers and church workers gathered there have felt the enormous burden of work to be done in the state by so few.

The convention that began to assemble July 13, 1914, promised fair to be one of the largest ever held. Santa Cruz climate was never better, cool and invigorating, but not chill. It was evident, however, from the beginning that something unusual was in the air and even the beach failed to hold the attention of delegates. Nature wooed them in vain with blue skies and ocean, with sunny beach and roaring surf. In the midst of all these attractions knots of preachers held earnest conferences, absorbed in the discussion of the great question. But it wasn't a secret. Everyone seemed to be informed. The probable and finally the certain presence of delegates from the church at Berkeley and the way to dispose of them was the issue.

DR. BREEDEN'S PAPER.

On Wednesday, July 15, the day began profitably. A paper by Dr. H. O. Breeden, of Fresno, on the "Inspiration of the Bible," filled the first hour with genuine instruction. Couched in careful and persuasive terms the paper repudiated mechanical inspiration of the letter and spoke for the richer inspiration of men finding the revelation of divine truth in their own religious experience.

Following the paper the convention was called to order for business, Geo. W. Brewster, Jr., president of the state board, in the chair. A credentials committee was appointed and certified lists of delegates called for. The report of the credentials committee was read by the chairman, J. H. McCartney, of Modesto. He reported a total of two hundred and nine delegates, giving the number from each church, and moved the adoption of the report.

There was a moment of suspense and then what everyone expected happened. That was the trouble. It seemed to be accepted calmly, as the next step in a well made program should be accepted.

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED.

But no, it was not expected by everyone. Some of us, even though we had been told to look for it had been unable to believe it possible, in the enlightened twentieth century, by a liberty loving, democratic people. But it happened. E. B. Ware, editor of the "Christian Church News," arose and read the resolution unseating the Berkeley delegates and declaring the Berkeley church excommunicate for the heresy of receiving into full fellowship unimmersed Christians from other evangelical churches. Mr Ware followed up his resolution, which he offered as an amendment to the report of the credentials committee with a talk filled with reminiscences and an attempt at justification for his resolution.

Mr. W. F. Meyer, a layman and an elder in the Ukiah Church arose and with deep earnestness pleaded with the people to realize the seriousness of the proposed action and warned them that if it was taken it would be a thing long to be regretted. There was no response to this appeal except a motion made by Judge McCoy, of Red Bluff to refer the matter to a committee which should hear all sides of the case, and report the substance of its findings to the convention at a later session with recommendation as to the action to be taken. This was objected to by a delegate from Berkeley because it would leave the status of delegates from that church in question until perhaps the end of the convention. The general feeling seemed to be that the convention itself ought to hear whatever discussion there was and to decide upon the basis of its own findings. The motion failed by a vote of sixty-six to sixty-eight.

At this point a delegate from Vacaville raised the question of the Vacaville Church, asking if it, too, was to be rejected, and stating that it, too, was an open-membership church. This question failed to create any interest.

MR. LOKEN CALLED UPON.

In opening the main discussion, H. J. Loken, pastor of the Berkeley church, was called upon for a statement of the position and practice of his congregation. As he arose and quietly stepped upon the platform, it was easy to understand the remarkable ministry which he has carried on in the Berkeley church and especially the feat of preserving a united and harmonious work in that church through the trying conditions of the past two years. Mr. Loken—Hjalmar Jorgenson Loken, to be exact—is a native of Norway. There is still in his eyes the reflection of the clear blue of Norwegian skies and in those eyes there is no guile, yet they can flash like the northern lights of his native land in defence of truth and right. A man of boundless energy, exuberant spirits, and irrepressible enthusiasm. His faith in the essential goodness of men and in the sincerity of the Disciples of Christ has not been destroyed by over two years of a struggle in which he has been subject to endless misrepresentation and abuse. Through it all he has kept sweet and has refused to answer reviling with reviling. And herein lies the secret of his success in Berkeley. Knowing his ground, he patiently taught the people and answered the objections of all honest doubters. His magnificent powers of analysis, argument and persuasion, and his thorough mastery of the whole question at issue, have left but few who could not see their way clear to receive the principle of Christian union. He has answered bitter opposition with silence. But H. J. Loken is not a martyr. His problems do not "get on his nerves." He trusts the Lord and laughs off the blues. In Berkeley his people love him and I fancy some of the delegates at Santa Cruz were surprised to see a man so simple mannered and gracious arise when H. J. Loken was called upon to speak. He was more at ease, perhaps, than any other man in the room. Very calmly and yet with distressing clearness he stated the position of the Berkeley church as follows: "The church is orthodox on baptism, practicing and teaching only immersion. Its open membership plan does not deal with the form of baptism but with Christian fellowship. All Christians, coming from other churches of Christ with credentials of good standing in those churches are received into full fellowship, regardless of the manner in which they have been baptized. Such members, on leaving the church are given their original letters together with a recommendation from the Berkeley Church." Mr. Loken stated also that the delegates from Berkeley had come by invitation, having received the regular credential blank, and that the proposed action would be a serious blow at democracy and injurious to the cause of the Disciples if carried out.

After Mr. Loken had finished his remarks H. W. Brunk, a former member of First Church, Berkeley, asked for permission to reply to him. The burden of Mr. Brunk's remarks was that Mr. Loken had been hired to preach "sound Disciple doctrine" and without asking permission of the official board had begun to preach this new doctrine of fellowshipping other Christians. Mr. Brunk is one of the few who withdrew from First Church at the time it was decided to practice Christian union.

DAVID LIVINGSTONE OUT OF PLACE.

Suggestions were now made that the convention adjourn for the noon hour. J. H. McCartney, of Modesto, asked permission to speak. He waived the discussion of the doctrinal point and in a few words reminded the people that no decree of pope or church council had ever settled anything, and affirmed that a vote on the amendment proposed would not settle anything either. "If you pass this resolution," said Mr. McCartney, "I want some one to take down the picture of David Livingstone from the wall and carry it out of this room for it will have no place here." The deep earnestness with which these words were spoken had a profound effect upon all the delegates and when the convention adjourned it was a thoughtful and disturbed throng that left the doors of the tabernacle. A deeper sentiment had been appealed to than that of denominational pride or ambition. A vote at this point would have gone hard with the resolutions of Mr. Ware. Delegates would have voted somewhat after the manner of a man deciding a great question on his knees.

When the opening prayer of the afternoon session had been concluded Judge McCoy remained standing and secured the floor for the first move of the afternoon. He suggested that the managing editor of the Christian Evangelist was present and although he affected not to know how Mr. Smither stood on the issue before the convention yet he was confident that he would be able to give some helpful advice.

MR. SMITHER'S POSITION.

Mr. Smither took the floor and very quickly set the judge's mind at rest as to his position on the question of seating the Berkeley delegates. He admitted having written the article in the Christian Evangelist in which he had justified the Bay District Convention for excommunicating the Berkeley Church some two or three weeks before this. After stating that there were some matters about the Berkeley program he did not understand, such as whether the church would receive a Jew or Unitarian, he suggested that the thing for the Berkeley delegates to do was to withdraw from the convention in order to preserve peace and harmony. He followed this admonition with a warning that if the Disciples were to begin the practice of receiving the unimmersed from other churches it would mean their disintegration. He had nothing to say about the way such a practice would affect the union problem, or about whether the thing would be right or wrong, his one concern appeared to be how such a plan would affect the future numbers and denominational standing of the Disciples.

This suggestion and warning from Mr. Smither revealed the fact that he, with many others among us, believes the time has come for the Disciples to have much less concern about practicing Christian unity and a great deal more for building up a big denomination. The Berkeley delegates have been taught an altogether different view of religion and also of the mission of the Disciples of Christ. They have been taught that church success is a desirable thing only when it is attained on the high ground of Christian fellowship and union with Christ. They believe that it is the prophetic mission of the Disciples' Movement to plead for and to practice Christian union and not to become competitors in a sectarian race.

Mr. Smither advised the convention that it would be acting altogether within its rights if it unseated the delegates. In spite of the sectarian grounds he had taken to support his position a very large number of delegates seemed to be influenced by his speech in favor of excommunication.

Mr. Loken arose to answer Mr. Smither and told the convention that the Berkeley delegates were there on invitation, having been called on to make the annual church report and having been sent the credentials blank for the delegates. He stated that the church had been co-operating in the state work and was desirous of continuing to co-operate and that it was for the convention to decide whether it wanted the Berkeley church, for the church had, of course, already decided.

DR. BREEDEN SPEAKS.

It was at this juncture that Dr. Breeden secured the floor and in earnest and impressive tones asked the question, "Is this a missionary convention or an ecclesiastical court?" The heavy applause which followed indicated that Doctor Breeden might yet be able to handle the situation. But the Doctor followed this bombshell with a compromise measure which seemed to take all the force out of what he had said, so far as one could judge from appearances. He proposed to seat the delegates and at the same time repudiate the position of the Berkeley church. Mr. Russell arose to point out the fact that the convention would have to act as an ecclesiastical court in order to repudiate the position of the Berkeley church. When the vote was taken on this compromise measure it was lost by a large majority.

An unqualified stand for seating the delegates by Dr. Breeden would no doubt have carried many more votes, but the ranks of reaction were cemented together in a way that made any great inroad at this late hour in the debate next to impossible.

R. L. McHatton took the floor a little later and spoke in favor of the resolutions. Mr. McHatton represents the ultra-reactionary viewpoint of the Disciples. He has established many churches in Northern California and has become endeared to many people through his personal touch with them.

JUDGE BRIDGEFORD'S SUPPOSITIONS.

One of the closing arguments in opposition to open membership was made by Judge Bridgeford. It is representative of the sort of arguments which were advanced by many of those who spoke. He was frightened over what might happen if several other things happened. With an imagination which would have done credit to a boy of four this man of many winters projected the following: "Suppose a congregation should adopt the open membership plan; then suppose the immersed members should decrease in numbers through death and removal while the unimmersed increased until they were in the majority; and then suppose the congregation should adopt sprinkling as the form of baptism."

Soon after the judge had concluded his illuminating speech the calls for the question became so strong that further debate was impossible. A large section of the people arose in answer to the call for those in favor of the Ware amendment to the report of the committee on credentials. When the negative vote was called for few felt brave enough to be seen on the floor. Among those who stood against the measure were Dr. H. O. Breeden of Fresno, Lewis Scott of Hollister, Chas. Forster of Sanger and J. H. McCartney of Modesto. When these were seated again a moment of solemn silence followed and then the Berkeley delegates arose and quietly left the room.

Secretary Daniels is not alone in issuing an order prohibiting drinking among the officers of the navy. According to the London Graphic, drinking is prohibited in the navies of Russia and Japan. And there is a decided trend towards temperance in both the army and navy of Great Britain.

Golden Text.—Watch therefore, for ye know not the day nor the hour.—Matt. 25:13.

American Standard Bible.

(Used by permission.)

(1) Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto the virgins, who took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. (2) And five of them were foolish, and five were wise. (3) For the foolish, when they took their lamps, took no oil with them: (4) but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps. (5) Now while the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. (6) But at midnight there is a cry, Behold, the bridegroom! Come ye forth to meet him. (7) Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps. (8) And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil for our lamps are going out. (9) But the wise aanswered, saying, Peradventure there will not be enough for us and you: go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves. (10) And while they went away to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage feast; and the door was shut. (11) Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us. (12) But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not. (13) Watch therefore, for ye know not the day nor the hour.

BY CLARK BUCKNER.

v. 1. Then: This connects this parable with the reference of the last chapter, found in verses 36, 42, 44, 50. The kingdom of heaven: It is interesting and profitable to study the uses made of this term in the words of our Lord. In this reference he refers to his Church. Took their lamps: The lamps were not as our modern lamps but more like our torches. Went forth to meet the bridegroom: Jesus uses the bridegroom as representing himself.

v. 2. Five of them were foolish: They were not prudent.

v. 3. For the foolish when they took their lamps, took no oil with them: These lamps were constructed with small oil containers. There was ordinarily only sufficient space for a two hours' supply. So, when it was expected that there would be need of burning the lamps for a longer period, an extra containing vessel was taken along. These foolish virgins had failed to carry with them this extra vessel of oil, and thus came their plight.

v. 5. They all slumbered and slept: Became drowsy and took, what we sometimes call, cat-naps.

v. 6. And at midnight there is a cry, Behold the bridegroom. Come ye forth to meet him: "The bride and her attendants were in her own home awaiting the coming of the bridegroom from his home, or they had already gone to the bridegroom's home there to await his return from the house of a relative, whither he had gone to celebrate with his friends. In either case, the bride's friends must go out to meet the procession, and sing a hymn of welcome. The lightest lamps were most essential for they symbolized joy and welcome: extinguished lamps were symbolical of mourning and death." Hence the consternation of the foolish virgins.

v. 9. There will not be enough for us and you: Had they divided their oil, all would have been short. This was a case when each must "Bear his own burden."

Buy for yourselves: See Prov. 23:23; Is. 55:1; Rev. 3:18.

v. 10. And while they went away to buy, the bridegroom came: Having waited a considerable time they reckoned that they would probably have time to supply themselves with the oil. But the time of his coming was unknown to them and, on returning, they found the doors closed. We are taught to be prepared for life's great events at all times.

v. 11. I know you not: See John 10:14.

At the Heart of the Lesson.

I suppose that it would not be possible to get a better idea of what Jesus meant by the watchfulness that would become the character of one who was always looking for his undated coming, than we should have if we could understand perfectly the strange and subtle influence which the uncertainty and apparent infiniteness of the life before him has upon a child. The alertness, the receptivity, the modesty, the eagerness, and easy enlargement or readiness for great things, which belong to the best childhood, seem to me to be the very qualities which the Gospel is always trying to make in Christians, and all these qualities belong eventually to the uncertainty with which a child's future hovers before his eyes.

There are old men whom living has disenchanted with life. And if they look into it they will see that what has gone out of life is simply its uncertainty. Once, when they got up in the morning, they wondered what they would do that day; they thought of a hundred things that might happen before the sun went down. Now, they know just what they will do at every hour of the day. Life is certain to become dull and uninteresting and weary to an old man, to every man as he grows old, unless some future beyond life opens before him, which shall be to his old age all that the yet untried life was to his boyish dreams. Is there any possible thing that can replace it for you? Only that opening of another future, with new uncertainties, which has turned many an old man into a child again as he stood at the gateway of the Everlasting Life. When this life is exhausted, when its crooked streets have all been trodden to the end, still the interest need not have gone out of living if only from the hilltop of experience new and untrodden ways open themselves before us, rolling on into the mystery of eternity. Then one may die with as true vitality, as eager curiosity, as he has ever lived. To him the interest of life is still preserved, as alone it can be preserved, by the power of an uncertain future. Phillips Brooks in "The Law of Growth."

WHY The Bethany System of Sunday School Literature Demands Your Attention!

1. It is the product, not simply of the talent of our own brotherhood, but of the expert workers and writers of the ENTIRE SUNDAY SCHOOL WORLD.
2. Mechanically it is the most nearly perfect of all the systems of graded literature produced to date.
3. Because the use of the Bethany lessons will make it possible for your school to co-operate in graded union activities. With other literatures, you will be handicapped in such co-operation.
4. It represents a notable achievement in Christian unity, for which principle the Disciples as a people stand. The Bethany literature is the joint product of five Protestant bodies.

We do not ask you to use the "Bethany." We do ask you to compare it with other systems. If it does not prove to be the Best, after a careful examination, use the system that IS the best.

The Mid-Week Service

BY SILAS JONES.

TOPIC FOR SEPT. 9.

Pioneer Studies—Thomas Campbell, John 17:20-27.

The Centennial Edition of the Declaration and Address is probably the most widely distributed document relative to the views of Thomas Campbell. Those who study this will be prepared to discuss profitably the place of Thomas Campbell in the history of the Disciples. It is a source of the highest importance in the study of the churches of the United States.

Thomas Campbell was born in County Down, Ireland, Feb. 1, 1763. He was educated in the University of Glasgow and in the Divinity School at Whitburn. He became a minister of the anti-Burgher Seceder Presbyterians. His ministry in Ireland continued until 1807 when he came to America. In America, as in Ireland, the bitterness of sectarianism sorely troubled him. For admitting to the communion other Presbyterians than Seceders, he was censured by his Presbytery. This censure was removed by the synod but he was charged to beware of further offense. He then decided to preach independently. The Declaration and Address, issued in September 1809, in an important sense, marks the beginnings of the Disciples of Christ.

THINKING AND ACTING FOR OURSELVES.

"From the series of events which have taken place in the church for many years past, especially in this western country, as well as from what we know in general of the present state of things in the Christian world; we are persuaded that it is high time for us not only to think, but also to act, for ourselves; to see with our own eyes, and to take all our measures directly and immediately from the Divine Standard." With these words the Declaration begins. They offer a principle which is easily obscured by the tendency of each of us to make his opinions the measure of truth for everybody. We fear experience.

MAJOR AND MINOR DIFFERENCES.

Thomas Campbell said there were things about which men ought to agree and things about which they should be at liberty to differ. Men have always recognized this division of beliefs. If we work together, we have need of common beliefs. This is true of human relations in business, politics, play, and religion. A debate is impossible unless there is some sort of agreement. Nevertheless, it was a real contribution to thought to put into plain language the necessity of unity in essentials and liberty in non-essentials. Essentials vary with time and circumstances. Our practice affirms this even when in theory we deny it. Good sense and sound feeling are at work constantly to modify dogma. The example of Thomas Campbell bids us to examine with care his opinion as to what is essential and what is non-essential. He was a free man and he aimed to help others to freedom.

THE WORD OF GOD.

It was to the Divine Word that Thomas Campbell made his appeal. "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where they are silent, we are silent." He asked for a "Thus saith the Lord, either in express terms or by approved precedent, for every article of faith, and item of religious practice." Certainly the religious man wants to know what the Eternal speaks. He wishes to have comradeship with that which is enduring "within and underneath the drift and waste of earthly existence," and this comradeship will be impossible without some word of God to guide the soul. Here again, the example of the pioneer whom we are studying is instructive. It warns us against presumptuous decisions as to what is the word of God. Hard, honest thinking is the price we must pay for knowledge of God. We may mistake idle gossip for the Eternal Word.

There is No Time to Lose!

On October 1 thousands of schools will abandon the old-time uniform lessons, and adopt the modern Graded Lesson System. Hundreds of schools will turn from hastily-prepared denominational materials, which have not given satisfaction, to the System prepared by the world's leading experts in religious education. The Disciples were fortunate in having part in this great coöperative task, and the Bethany Graded Lessons stand as the superb creation of this Christian union enterprise. This System embraces 132 texts, and contains fully one-third more help for teachers than any other series. October 1 will soon be here. Do not delay. DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PROPRIETORS, : 700 EAST 40th ST., CHICAGO

The Disciples Publication Society

The Disciples Publication Society is an organization through which churches of the Disciples of Christ seek to promote undenominational and constructive Christianity.

The relationship it sustains to the Disciples is intimate and organic, though not official. The Society is not a private institution. It has no capital stock. No individuals profit by its earnings. The churches and Sunday-schools own and directly operate it. It is their contribution to the advocacy and practice of the ideals of Christian unity and religious education.

The charter under which the Society exists determines that whatever profits are earned shall be applied to agencies which foster the cause of religious education, although it is clearly conceived that its main task is not to make profits but to produce literature for building up character and for advancing the cause of religion.

* * *

The Disciples Publication Society regards itself as a thoroughly undenominational institution. It is organized and constituted by individuals and churches who interpret the Disciples' religious reformation as ideally an unsectarian and unecclesiastical fraternity, whose common tie and original impuse are fundamentally the desire to practice Christian unity with all Christians.

The Society therefore claims fellowship with all who belong to the living Church of Christ, and desires to co-operate with the Christian people of all communions as well as with the congregations of Disciples, and to serve all.

* * *

In publishing literature for religious education the Society believes a body of such literature prepared by the co-operative effort of many communions reaches a much higher level of catholicity and truth than can be attained by writers limited by the point of view of a single communion.

* * *

The Sunday-school literature (The Bethany System) published by this house, has been prepared through the Society's association with the writers, editors and official publishing houses of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and other communions. In its mechanical and artistic quality, its low selling-price, its pedagogical adequacy, and, still more, in its happy solution of doctrinal differences it is a striking illustration of the possibilities of the new day of unity into which the church is now being ushered.

* * *

The Christian Century, the chief publication of the Society, desire nothing so much as to be the worthy organ of the Disciples' movement. It has no ambition at all to be regarded as an organ of the Disciples' denomination. It is a free interpreter of the wider fellowship in religious faith and service which it believes every church of Disciples should embody. It strives to interpret all communions, as well as the Disciples, in such terms and with such sympathetic insight as may reveal to all their essential unity in spite of denominational isolation. Unlike the typical denominational paper, The Christian Century, though published by the Disciples, is not published for the Disciples alone. It is published for the Christian world. It desires definitely to occupy a catholic point of view and it seeks readers in all communions.

WHY USE THE GRADED LESSONS?

Because they present Scriptural and moral truths in such form that they can be understood by those who are to receive them. Children are in their very nature GRADED; therefore the instruction given them must be graded according to their varying powers to receive. A teacher would not last long in the public schools who would ask first graders to master the works of Plato. Neither should a system of Bible lesson study continue that offers to Primary pupils such difficult problems as are presented in the books of Leviticus, Isaiah and Romans. It is a principle as old as modern education that knowledge should be ADAPTED TO THE PUPIL. Shall Religious Education alone be exempted from observing this fundamental principle?

Have you examined the Bethany Graded Lessons—the finest in teaching materials, in pedagogical adaptation, in mechanical make-up?

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The Larger Righteousness.

"For I say unto you, that except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven." This is one of the most discouraging texts in the Bible. How can anybody's righteousness exceed that of the scribes and Pharisees? Whoever undertakes to be more righteous than the scribes and Pharisees has on hand a task of no small magnitude. One would not wish to say that no one could be any more righteous than they were, but it is quite unlikely that anyone attempting it would have reasonable prospects of success. Indeed, we might as well give it up as to attempt it on the same basis. Yet, here we have the undeniable word of Jesus that except our righteousness exceed that of the scribes and Pharisees we cannot enter the kingdom of heaven.

Who were the Pharisees? In a way, they were the men who prepared Judaism for the coming of the Lord. They were the men who stood for the spiritualizing of the messianic ideal. As contrasted with the priesthood, which was a hereditary close corporation, they stood for a noble democracy in religion. They were the men who made essential monotheism the permanent religious heritage of Judaism. They taught Israel and the world faith in immortality.

Who were the scribes? They were the men who preserved and expounded the sacred books. They were at once the lawyers and teachers of Israel. In any community organized on the basis of written legislation the administration of law becomes a foremost and most honorable task and duty. The scribes assumed this duty. They took no fees. They were possessed of a certain nobility of ideal and practice. They were the men who, when the living voice of prophecy ceased, kept alive the noblest voices of the past, and held Israel faithful to its hereditary trust.

Yet the pathetic thing about it is that both these two classes which prepared the world for Christ were unfitted to receive Him by the very processes by which they prepared the world for Him.

They developed legalism into bondage. They made the Sabbath a burden. They became the exponents of a proud and arrogant orthodoxy that strangled free spirituality. They fixed their eyes so intently on the nobility of the past that they were disqualified to become the guides to the future. They closed their minds against all truth that did not come to them sanctified by the tradition of the past. They rejected and scorned and hated and murdered the Son of God.

The scribes and Pharisees were the church members. They were the people who represented traditional religion. It may well make us tremble when we recall that it was the supposedly good people against whom Jesus uttered His most searching words of condemnation.

The scribes and Pharisees made the fatal mistake of assuming that religion was a thing of outward form. They supposed that religion could be expressed in terms of mere rules for conduct.

Here again, let us be careful lest we condemn them unjustly, and let us be still more careful lest we condemn ourselves. Rules are necessary, rules are desirable, but no man understands the truth of the Christian religion who regards it simply as a matter of rule.

No nation yet has ever succeeded in codifying its whole system of laws. European countries point to the United States as the awful example of what befalls a nation that attempts it. Our theory would seem to be that a system of laws can be so complete that there shall be a law for every course of conduct, good or bad. The Bible has never attempted anything of this sort. The middle books of the Old Testament do indeed show the successive approaches the priests and scribes continued to employ till duty was measured by a yardstick and every form and ceremony was rigidly prescribed.

Christ said this was not the way, and human experience justifies His declaration.

* * *

The righteousness which is to exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees must have its course along a radically different line. It must begin at the heart; it must work out its system from within; it must cultivate a spirit which loves God and righteousness and obeys the truth for the sake of God and duty. Only as religion rises to this level can our righteousness exceed that of the scribes. It is better for a man to live decently for fear of hell than to live indecently and to have no fear. But no man ever got very far into the Christian life on the motive of fear. It is better for a man to do right for the hope of heaven than not to do right at all. But the hope of heaven may be a mere bribe. It can never reach the profounder depths of human life nor stir the springs of the noblest human endeavor. Only he who loves the right and does it with his whole heart can be in any highest sense a follower of Jesus.

Militarism at the Judgment Bar

BY PROF. GEORGE BURMAN FOSTER

"He shall judge among the nations, and shall reprove many peoples; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

ALAS, FOR the prophet and for all prophets whose lives vibrate between hope and heart-break! Twenty-five hundred years later it is the other way around. We are beating plow-shares into swords, pruninghooks into spears, nations are still learning war and lifting up the sword against nation. In Europe, for a generation, army has been added to army, dreadnought to dreadnought; murderous invention to murderous invention. What is it that has awakened more interest and enthusiasm than some new device for mass murder? And today a pan-European cataclysm!

TWO DISCREPANT CIVILIZATIONS.

Two discrepant civilizations; race hatred; confessional bitterness and fanaticism; the greed of conquest; royal vanity and egotism; hereditary absolutism and medievalism, chauvinism—these, and such things as these, have kindled a conflagration that threatens to consume the boasted civilization of Europe with its sacred orthodoxies and its pagan ethics.

For a long time this brutal and bloody complication has been under way—in Germany, especially, where her great thinker, old Kant, wrote his world-historical tractate of warning that the greatest evil which could oppress any civilized people sprang from the never-ceasing, ever-increasing equipment for future wars; where warlike Fichte joined Körner, Arndt and Schleiermacher in condemning war as the real curse of humanity, and in seeing little justification for war save as a means of putting an end to war.

Yet today? War seems to have a demoniac power over peoples. For decades the delight of the populace has been in sham battles—in the clink of sabers, military marches and maneuvers and parades, the thunder of cannons, festivals of war and warriors. Only patriotic Sundays and sermons for such exhibitions could attract all the German people to religious gatherings. Yet not the Germans alone. Chauvinism is the religion of peoples—fanaticism for national greatness and power, for Teutonism, or Americanism, or something. Christian ideals are extinguished. A humanity-state, instead of a nation-state, who thinks of that? Christianity is expressly denied and pagan ideals proclaimed. The politics of Christian peoples are as heathen as heathen politics are. Its principle is force and violence, not love and ideality.

But this "Welt-politik" is the politics of militaristic officialdom. It is my firm conviction that the war-lust among the masses of the people is superficial, that the popular soul knows little of this enthusiasm for war today, that the thought of peace is deeper than the thought of war. Even now the hour is striking when nations shall learn war no more.

INDUSTRIALISM VERSUS MILITARISM.

Why do I say this? Not from a vague and extravagant hope. Not even on the basis of our fine text, much as I should be sorry to lose such a glorious word from my Bible. I say it because I tie up the question of war with the social struggles of our new century, and realize the changes which the social struggles are producing in the ideas and beliefs of our time. The social development has brought about a complete revolution in our views concerning man and has placed life itself on an entirely new basis.

Formerly, man was evaluated only as warrior, as bearer of arms. Today, man is the bearer of the industrial process. Using the gifts of nature indeed, he is the sole creator and distributor of industrial goods. The entire ancient and medieval humanity was militaristic. The basis of their acquisitive life was war. Their possessions and property were booty, the spoils of war. But our modern humanity is industrial. Its acquisition is based on work. Its possessions are wares of commerce, articles of trade. And this means a new evaluation of man, an industrial evaluation. Think that once in the old world instruments and machines were almost entirely for purposes of war, but that today they are preponderatingly for peaceable industries, and you can see what great progress has been made. What nation in Christendom would build a walled city today?

Acquisition by booty is possible only by destroying men. Industrial acquisition presupposes the preservation of man. We seek to keep the well strong so that they can work, to heal the sick so that they may not be disabled, to keep all in health that they may be an asset to the world's weal. We no longer believe the hoary militaristic lie that there are too many people in the world. Beginning with the nineteenth century, legislative and voluntary measures have been set on foot to make and keep men creative of goods, as against the old destruction of the many that there might be more spoils for the few.

A NEW TYPE OF CIVILIZATION.

And so the military character and type of life has been overcome in principle and the industrial type has taken its place. The industrial war of man for dominion over nature has taken the place of the old militaristic war of man for dominion over man.

Now, the importance of this revolution from militarism to industrialism is very great. At last war is seen to be anti-economic. Our economists and statisticians, men with free and broad survey of life in its total phenomena, were the first to point this out. War is irrational from the point of view of industry. Aside from moral and religious considerations against war, the modern industrial development is opposed to the slaughter of potential laborers on the field of battle. If men are so stupid and inhuman and raw that they cannot see the moral ruin of war, they can at least see the industrial ruin of war. For the matter of that, what is the cause of our industrial ills but the survival or atavism of militarism therein, as evidenced by the exploitation of labor and the warfare between labor and capital?

You see my first point, then,—namely, recognition of the help our new industrial appreciation of man can give in ending militarism. Man is not for war upon man but for work upon nature, by which he earns the goods of life from the gifts of earth and sea and sky.

A NEW MORAL APPRECIATION OF MAN

Add, now, our new moral appreciation of man. He who knows the experience of human love, who feels the gaps loved ones leave unfilled when they go hence—gaps which can be filled only by taking up their lives in his life, only by preserving their transfigured images forever in the deep of his heart—knows also what to think of war. It is hard enough to lose those near and dear to us when death comes in the order of nature, without our sending our sons to be shot down on the firing line. "Five hundred miles of tears," says a good woman traveling from one point on the Continent to the other a day or two ago.

But I am not one of those who believe in peace at any price. May we never dedicate ourselves and our sons to death on the field of carnage? Is war ever justifiable? I think that it is—for the freedom and honor of one's fatherland, for the protection of the domestic hearth against insolent intruders, for the protection of civilization and culture against the assault and devastation of barbarian hordes. Yet it might be well at this time to read Tolstoy's "Ivan the Fool!"

SOME THINGS WORTH MORE THAN LIFE.

But because men are willing to die for these things, all the more care should be taken, as a nation's most serious and sacred duty, that no impure and base motive, no politics of ambition, no lust of power and no lust of conquest, should shed a drop of human blood. Life should be sacrificed only for what is worth more than life!

Men are brothers. Nations should be bound together by bonds of brotherly unity, not by force. Not force, but love is the principle of life, the principle of the universe. Force is the servant of love, not love a by-product or epi-phenomenon of force. If this be true, the moral evaluation of men must replace the militaristic of force, and supplement, perhaps replace even, the industrial. For work is for the sake of man rather than man for work. In the higher moralism, our competitive industrialism may yet be condemned as atavistic and militaristic.

THE NECESSITY OF RELIGION.

But I am one of those—not so many in these days, yet not so few—who do not believe in the attainability of this higher moralism without religion. Man is not simply a son of man, he is a son of God. As such, from the point of view of our natural human society, man is a super-social being. He is more than a member of society, he is a citizen in the kingdom of God. But in the kingdom of God, we love our enemies, and war shall be no more.

Along with this industrial, moral and religious evaluation of man there is another movement in the modern world which is making war upon war. I refer to our realism. Our sense for reality has revealed to us the night side of life. It has shown us the misery of poverty. The church used to cure symptoms, the state hide misery and vice out of sight, but we have dragged them out of their hiding places into the full light of day. Such realism has made a powerful appeal to conscience, and we have gone to work to put poverty and misery and vice out of the world.

A NEW SCHOOL OF COURAGE.

This realism is pointing to war, not as it is in picture and poetry and song and romance, but as it is in fact. War is what such an artist as Vereshchagin paints it to be, what the brave woman said it was the other day when she cried: "Europe, lay down your arms!" War is indescribably horrible. And despite the Red Cross, its evils are not at an end when its dead are buried and its wounded bandaged. The worst thing about war is, it blunts human sensibilities. To be sure, military orators glorify the virtues of war—virtues awakened and strengthened by war. But if war were really such a school of virtue, how incomparably more virtuous men must once have been when they waged war all the time than they are today! And yet you see in the midst of peace the great quiet courage of men and women, fulfilling their commonplace and homely tasks without the stimulus and support of martial music and the mob consciousness. You see men in their daily conflict with the over-power of nature—the war of the physician upon disease and epidemic, of the nurse amid the perils of fevers—you see the scientist and explorer calmly risking their lives to add an item to human knowledge; you see the sacred courage of maternity. You see enough to satisfy you that the new school of courage is nobler than the old.

No, militarism is discredited. God is judging among the peoples. Nation will yet not lift sword against nation. The might of ideals is mightier than the might of force. Meantime, let us Americans be sure that we wage no war on the basis of our might that we would not wage on the basis of our right in the absence of our might!

British Christian Opinion of the War

The Editor of the British Weekly Interprets Anglo-Saxon Sentiment of the Mother Country.

BY SIR W. ROBERTSON NICOL

THIS WAR HAS not come from the motley and jarring empire of Austria. It has not come from the difficult and angry Balkan communities. It has not come, we verily believe, from the German people. We would not say even that it has come from the German emperor, who has on many occasions shown a love of peace. It has come from the military and ruling caste of Germany. They have kept the world in turmoil during these long years, and this is the end of it. We desire to avoid studiously the language of calumnious virulence, but we must look facts in the face. If a desire to increase your own strength and to advance your own position is a sufficient warrant for rapine, there is an end of human rights. The object of official Germany seems to be not only to secure the hegemony of Europe, but its absolute prostration. Most of us have reason to love Germany for many things. We owe much to her great literatures, to the vast erudition of her scholars, to the high character, strict friendship, and generous hospitality of her people. It is but too plain, however, that Germany has been changing and is consumed and wasted with material ambitions. It is said that when Germany was in the springtime of hope pressing forward to the national unity, Schopenhauer preached pessimism without winning a single disciple. Now his disciples form no small part of thinking Germany. In fact, while it would be in the highest degree unjust to compare the German emperor with Napoleon, both appear to be abandoned to the same craving. They are both apparently determined to master and control Europe.

KAISER, THOUGH DIFFERENT, MAY RIVAL NAPOLEON.

We know what came of Napoleon's fierce desire. He turned Europe into an Aceldama, and France into a house of weeping. He gave the world ten years of carnage, spoliation, and havoc, and a misery the extent of which is known only to professional students, and hardly known to these. To him we owe the fearful pressure of the military system, and what has come upon Europe now. When the Column in the Place Vendome was erected, on the foot of it there was found written, perhaps by a bereaved parent: "Monster, if all the blood that thou hast shed could be collected in this square, thou mightest drink without stooping." The German emperor is a man of quite another type, but ere all is done he may rival Napoleon as the author of a carnage as hideous and enormous as his. We remember how impervious Napoleon was to all remorse and all shame. The first bulletin issued after the hideous catastrophe of the retreat from Russia showed that he thought of none but himself. The announcement that his ambition had made widows and orphans by hundreds of thousands ends with the gratifying assurance that "the emperor was never in better health." The German emperor, we say, is a man of another temper, and his ultimate reflections will be of another kind.

FIGHTING AN ANCIENT TYRANNY.

What we are fighting for if we have to fight is against a tyranny which our fathers rightly thought they should combat to the death. We are not fighting for Russian ascendancy, though Russia is our ally. Russia has terrible crimes to answer for, but she was our firmest friend in the war with Napoleon and long after that. We say, however, that she has sinned above many. Poland, says an eminent Liberal historian, was a scandalous and pestilent relic of all that was worst in feudal barbarism. That might be true, but it does not exempt the spoiler from the curse that waits on rapine.

In a word, what we are fighting against, if we have to fight, is a repetition of the sway of the saber.

The situation is serious beyond compare, but there are considerable alleviations. In the first place, we rejoice in the unity of the nation. In ordinary times we must pensively bow to party as a necessity, for the contending masses are divided by a real line. But faction is another matter. Out of faction we must fight our way if we are to avoid national ruin. Politicians of both parties have been apt to look upon foreign politics as the horse that would carry them into power. There is no sign of any attempt to mount that steed. There is every sign that faction has disappeared, and will keep away till the end of the conflict arrives. Men who yesterday fancied themselves severed by an impassable gulf are today in each other's arms.

Most gratifying of all, the brightest spot of these dark days, is the conduct of the Irish. Mr. Redmond electrified the house by his pledge of Irish support from Catholics and Protestants alike. The Nationalists, we cannot but think, have been attacked by weapons which are not in the hand of honor or in the armory of civilization. We wish to make no political capital of what has happened, but we do say that the Liberals have been rewarded for their long and costly struggle to secure home rule by Mr. Redmond's statement that "What has occurred in recent years has altered the situation completely. . . Today I honestly believe that the democracy of Ireland will turn with the utmost sincerity and sympathy to this country in every trial and every danger that

An Open Questionnaire on the Recent Action of California's Convention

In Which Every Reader of The Christian Century is Invited to Participate.

FIRST CHURCH of Berkeley, Cal., was excommunicated from the state missionary convention of Northern California in July for receiving into its membership unimmersed Christian people who brought credentials from various Protestant evangelical churches such as Presbyterian, Methodist and the rest.

This is the first time in the entire history of the Disciples of Christ that a church—a congregation of Christian believers—has been formally excommunicated from the fellowship of other Disciples' churches. It raises some of the most fundamental and serious questions which our people have had to face in the past fifty years, perhaps in their entire century of history. I wish with the most dispassionate purpose to secure a consensus of the opinion of our brotherhood, including both laymen and ministers. I have prepared this questionnaire for that purpose, and I will welcome from any reader of The Christian Century a frank expression on the issues involved. In order that the reader may have clearly before him the material facts of the situation let me state them, concisely, as I understand them:

BERKELEY'S PRACTICE AND POINT OF VIEW.

Berkeley church insists that it is loyal to every fundamental ideal of the Disciples of Christ and that the step in question is nothing at all but a further logical and fraternal application of both the principle of Christian unity and that of loyalty to Jesus Christ.

It affirms that these persons whom it receives into its fellowship are Christians, members of the Church of Christ; that Christ has already received them into his Church, which being so, a church of Christ has no choice save to receive them also. To refuse to receive them, the Berkeley church says, is essentially a sectarian act and a violation both of the will of Christ and the Disciples' principle of Christian unity.

The church holds inviolate the practice of immersion only, in the administration of baptism to those who come into its membership by primary obedience.

In the dismissal of an unimmersed member the church gives back the letter he brought with him, together with a letter of its own, commending the Christian character of the bearer and stating the fact as to his manner of being received into Berkeley church. The purpose of this is to avoid confusion or embarrassment to other churches of Disciples which might not wish to receive an unimmersed person into their membership.

The Berkeley church and its pastor, H. J. Loken, hold, as I have no reason to doubt, the generally accepted evangelical views of the Bible and the Divinity of Christ and are in all respects faithful to the missionary imperative of our Lord, even to the point of extraordinary generosity. I do not know Mr. Loken personally, but he is described as a preacher of unusual power, and a humble and gracious Christian man.

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

THE QUESTIONS.

1. Do you hold that Berkeley church is doing wrong in receiving these Christian people? If so, please state why.

2. If you disapprove of Berkeley's practice do you consider it a grave and fundamental departure from the essential principles of the Disciples, or is it one of those things that lie naturally within the field of Christian liberty conceded by the genius of our movement to belong to the local congregation?

3. What is your opinion as to the action of the California convention in assuming to judge as to the orthodoxy of the church and to excommunicate it from their missionary coöperation? Does the convention's action, in your opinion, constitute a violation of any fundamental principle held dear by the Disciples of Christ and essential to our program for unity? Can you see any difference between ecclesiasticism and what this convention did?

4. If you disapprove of the action of the convention what do you suggest should be done by the brotherhood outside of California to induce the California brethren to remedy their error?

In answering the above questions it is not necessary to re-write the questions. They may be referred to by number. Replies may be as brief as is consistent with clearness. Following are some replies that have already been received:

Mr. Richard Dickinson.

1. No.
2. This is a question to be settled by the local congregation.
3. The convention exceeded its rights. It should have no authority to regulate the action of individual or local churches so long as their action does not embarrass or interfere with other congregations. The only difference I can see between this convention action and the ecclesiasticism of some of the denominations is that the latter are better organized, and I think a little more consistent in their action.
4. Publish the facts. Crystalize sentiment by public addresses. Follow the practice of the Berkeley church.

Eureka, Ill.

Mr. John B. White.

1. I do not think that the Berkeley church is doing wrong in receiving into its fellowship any Christians.
2. While I do not disapprove of Berkeley's practice, I think that its practice is a departure from the practice of most of our churches during their history.
3. I think that the action of the California convention was narrow and sectarian and was as much the adoption of a creed as if it had been formally written and published. It was essentially a violation of our insistence that we have no creed, and are not creed-bound, and was essentially in violation of our honest insistence upon Christian unity. I must say, however, that I regard our insistence upon Christian unity, in so far as it has demanded conformance to our doctrine and practice as a condition of such unity, as essentially insincere and dishonest and I think the masses of our people are getting ashamed of it.
4. While I disapprove of the action of the California convention, I suggest that the best way to deal with it is to let the California corporation severely alone, pursue an undisturbed and serene mind and trust to Providence to rid us completely of sectarian narrowness and bigotry, such as was illustrated by the action referred to. I approve altogether of the action of the Berkeley church and unless all our churches come to the same basis and practice, I trust that we will be honest enough to abandon our pretense of belief in and practice of Christian unity. The unity of the lion and the lamb lying down together, the lamb inside of the lion, was never particularly edifying. Let the good work of protest against this sort of thing which I have herein condemned, go on. The truth must prevail.

Adel, Iowa.

Mr. John T. Lillard.

From the standpoint of true Christian spirit and doing as Christ himself would do, I think the Berkeley church is doing right.. From the standpoint of consistency to the teachings and views as to form of baptism of Alexander Campbell and his pioneer associates, it is untactical and surrendering—in part—a strategic position occupied for more than half a century by one of the greatest denominational Christian churches of modern times.

The action of the Berkeley church will give other denominations a splendid opportunity of criticism and attack, viz., if Mr. Campbell's interpretation of what is the only true form of baptism may be amended in part, may it not as a whole?

Then Mr. Campbell was not infallible in his exegesis upon the form of baptism, and if not infallible in that canon of his new pronouncement, he is not necessarily infallible in other parts of his exegetical scriptural formulae.

We all know neither Mr. Campbell, nor Martin Luther, nor John Knox, nor any other mere man has ever been infallible, but followers of Campbell and other great religious or political leaders always, for the time, regard the leader as infallible, whether in constructive work—as framing our national constitution—or in interpretative work as that of Mr. Campbell in stating the essentials of Christ's teachings in a form so compact it may be written on a visiting card. Non constat, Mr. Campbell, if living, might agree with the Berkeley church. He might or he might not, but the masses of Mr. Campbell's followers are not sufficiently endowed with his brains and bigness to amend the words of Mr. Campbell, even though he might.

It is evident that the time has come when an interpretation of Mr. Campbell's interpretation is attempted by some of his followers. Who shall deny their right?

Let me say that I consider Mr. Campbell the greatest of teachers and interpreters. I could not wish to be affiliated with any other denomination. The Christian or Disciples church meets my views and beliefs in all ways. As a member of that denomination I see no flaw in the attitude of the Berkeley church as a Christly and religious proposition; but I do see in it an entering wedge which might possibly go far to creating schism and disaster to the denomination.

Personally I think baptism essentially is a matter of intent, and from within, and not external. The external form being merely declaratory of an invisible internal heart change and good purposes. I think too much stress is placed on the outward proclamation of the change within. The change or rightness of heart being the real essential.

Bloomington, Ill.

Mr. W. H. Cowdery.

We are not at all in sympathy with the course pursued by the Berkeley church, and the pastor, H. J. Loken; neither can we approve fully of the action taken by the California brethren at their convention. We believe in treating those who would like to worship with us in the most courteous and kindly manner, recognizing their devotion and Christian qualities, but do not believe it necessary to ask that they become members of our congregations unless they are in full accord with those ordinances which we consider essential to the full obedience of the gospel.

Cleveland, Ohio.

Rev. O. F. Jordan

1. For some years I have believed it was wrong not to have fellowship with Christians who had conscientious differences with us on the subject of baptism, for union and world-wide brotherhood are conceptions more fundamental to Christianity than its ordinances. At the same time, I have felt the necessity of providing that followship in such a way as may not unnecessarily antagonize Disciples who still view baptism in a legalistic way. Without criticising in any way the Berkeley church, I express the judgment that it is better to receive these unimmersed Christians as "members of the congregation."

2. I regard this question as one which lies entirely within the province of the local congregation to settle. Our motto for a hundred years has been "In matters of faith, unity; in matters of opinion, liberty; in all things, charity." We have insisted that the unifying faith was a faith in Jesus as the Son of God. "Faith in an ordinance" was farthest from the thought of the fathers of our movement.

3. Were the action of the Berkeley church as great a departure from the traditions of the Disciples as its critics say it is, it would still not be as great a departure from our ideals as a heresy trial and the excommunication of a whole church, the conservative members with the progressive. At various times the fathers of the movement tolerated with more or less hospitality the notion of fellowshiping all Christians with whatever baptism, but no leader of our movement ever tolerated the conception of our becoming a dogmatic and heresy-hunting machine. Once we boasted we had never had a heresy trial. Are we now to become the narrowest of ecclesiastical institutions? We will if we do not repudiate the conception held by the California convention.

4. I feel that liberty-loving Disciples everywhere should protest through our papers, and by letter to the California leaders, against the convention's departure from our ideals. The state convention is on trial for heresy before the conscience of the brotherhood. We have no desire to deal with this heretic other than in Christian love and forbearance but we should not leave our erring brethren to interpret our silence as approval.

Evanston, Ill.

Rev. Joseph C. Todd.

Personally my interest has always been practical and not doctrinal. I have given very little attention to doctrinal matters even in our own church and my opinions are worth little on such matters. However, I will try and express the general position I hold on the questions you raise.

1. I feel the Berkeley church is doing wrong in receiving these Christian people because the present status of the Christian union movement and the conscience of our own people make such a practice productive of more harm than good to the kingdom of our Lord.

2. I believe it a grave and fundamental departure from the essential principles of the Disciples as set forth by the Campbells and their associates and as now conscientiously believed by 90 per cent of our church members. I think also it is a departure from the form of a New Testament ordinance and while in harmony with the irenic genius of our movement violates our position on authority, that is our attitude to the New Testament.

3. I regret that the California convention took such action but believe they were acting with entire consistency. I do not believe their action violates any fundamental principle essential to our program of unity. I believe there is a decided difference between ecclesiasticism and what they did. However, it was a step toward the methods of ecclesiasticism and I feel the correction of the error of the Berkeley church could have been made better by methods of discussion and conference rather than the use of the rights of an association.

4. We have no means of influencing the California brethren other than those of trying to convince them it was a poor policy and failed to accomplish even that which it was intended to do. I think we should discourage such steps. However, I believe the Berkeley church was in error, but the Christian spirit is tolerant of honest error until it can be changed by more light.

Bloomington, Ind.

Judge Frederick A. Henry.

Answering your questions very generally, I would not assume to pass judgment on the church at Berkeley that it is doing wrong; but, inasmuch as the course there pursued offends the conscience of a considerable number of our brethren, I do not commend it to any other church. Without either commending or condemning the action of the California convention, I regard contention on the subject as unprofitable. Any forcing of the issue on either side is bound to be divisive. Temperate discussion, without radical action by either churches or conventions, seems to be the desirable course to follow.

Cleveland, O.

Mr. Joab H. Banton.

It seems to me that we will have a clearer understanding if we remember that the California convention is a religious corporation, organized to promote religious and missionary activities in California, and, no doubt, the certificate of incorporation provides that certain kinds of congregations only shall be members of the religious corporation. If that is the case, then the action of the convention, if the Berkeley congregation violated the terms of its membership in the corporation, is not only legal, but proper. It becomes a matter for the California brethren to consider whether they wish to amend their certificate of incorporation so as to include all religious bodies or not. It seems to me that it is not a matter of our concern, but is purely a local matter and the unfortunate injection of partisanship discussion into the situation will not help the solution of the problem.

If, as I have assumed, this action is purely a corporate action, there is little to answer in the questions submitted.

It is impossible to "excommunicate" a congregation of Disciples of Christ. Ours is a congregational government and there is no power superior to the congregation. That has been illustrated time and again to our detriment when one congregation has expelled a minister for immoral acts and another congregation has employed him to preach.

Whether or not the action of the Berkeley church is wise is a matter which is purely local. In some communities, the reception of all believers on an equal basis would be wise and in some others, it would be unwise. In some communities (such as New York), the laws of the state provide that all persons regularly worshiping with, and regularly contributing to the financial support of, the congregation, become members of the corporation owning the property and are entitled to vote on all business matters affecting the corporation, but are not considered members of the spiritual body. It will be seen, therefore, that by the laws of this state, certain persons may become associate members of the congregation and even hold official positions in the corporation.

If we let these matters work themselves out without becoming excited or losing our tempers, we shall do more towards maintaining a unity of faith than we would by violent discussion.

New York City.

Mr. F. L. Oliphant.

1. No.

2. The latter.

3. The convention made a mistake. It violated a fundamental principle of our movement. I can see no difference between ecclesiasticism and what the convention did.

4. Any effort to remedy might precipitate more trouble than now exists. It is a delicate problem.

Vincennes, Ind.

Rev. Wm. Dunn Ryan.

1 and 2. While personally I do not approve of the method adopted by the Berkeley church, I concede that they were within their rights as a local congregation.

3. So far as I am able to judge, the convention arrogated to itself authority it could not by any possibility rightfully possess, and by its action violated the principles of individual liberty and congregational autonomy which Disciples have always held dear. To my mind it was ecclesiasticism of a peculiarly flagrant type.

4. The brotherhood may express its approval or disapproval, but to undertake any authoritative action would be as unwarranted as the action of the Northern California convention, itself.

Youngstown, O.

Rev. S. G. Fisher.

1. Inexpedient therefore wrong. If we are to try to set before the world an example of congregations united in Christ on the apostolic model, we must, as nearly as possible, in form and spirit be true to our understanding of it. To weaken in our insistence on this point is to weaken the whole ideal. There is nothing to prevent under the Berkeley plan that congregation or any congregation from becoming a congregation of unimmersed. And unimmersed majorities will not always yield to immersed minorities. The time will inevitably come when nothing will stop these majorities from changing the congregational constitution to suit their own convictions.

2. I consider it a very serious question, a very dangerous thing, but not an absolute violation of all our cherished ideals, so would advise tolerance and long-suffering. I think in almost every case such men as Bro. Loken and the members of his church who agree with him, are essentially Disciples. Hence their congregation at present, at least, is a Disciple congregation.

3. I think it their right but think they did wrong in exercising their right. No, as a missionary convention or society is not a church, or denomination and its action is not equivalent to an ecclesiastical action. However, to me the spirit manifested (unconsciously I am sure) is decidedly an ecclesiastical spirit I'd rather let alone. If the error cannot be met and overcome by reason and the Scripture, as Luther puts it, no amount of opposition of other kinds will avail.

4. Do as we would be done by. Labor with the California brethren. Take common ground and keep to it just as far as possible. All denunciation and uncharitable statements should be eliminated. The brethren must be assumed to be actuated by as pure motives as the Berkeley people. Any other ground is untenable. If Christian love and exhortation and reason will not work nothing else will. Keep sweet.

What Some Disciples Read

A Scientific Analysis of a Religious Newspaper.

BY O. J. COHEE.

The following article was prepared by the author and is here given publicity in a purely disinterested spirit. There is no journalistic animus in it whatever, but the facts are set down for whatever importance they may in themselves possess. A newspaper is a mirror held up to society. A church newspaper mirrors the state of mind and types of interest of its particular constituency. As giving a line on the quality of mind of a considerable group of Disciples we believe the method followed by Mr. Cohee is valid and revealing. Because it is so, we have decided to publish his painstaking article, in the belief that our intelligent readers will distinguish between a calm and systematic analysis of data and what might otherwise pass as a criticism or an "attack" upon a "competitor."—THE EDITOR.

IT is generally enough conceded that one of the most potent social forces in American national life is the press. Yet in spite of this fact there is virtually nothing definitely known concerning the net stimulus to public opinion given by the many thousands of daily papers, religious papers and magazines published in this country. We have no way of knowing, for example, the relative attention given by the press of the country to political discussion as compared with cultural news or crime news. Who knows what the editors of the country really give to their readers? One soon learns that this or that paper seems to print the kind of news matter that one likes and which seems to meet one's needs, but this knowledge does not come from any scientific study of the facts.

A SYSTEMATIC METHOD.

When we turn to the management of the great business houses of our country we find a different condition. A great business house knows by a most careful system of bookkeeping just what type of publicity pays, and what does not pay. By an analysis of these results the firm obtains definite knowledge as to what is the exact cost of producing certain definite changes in the public mind. With this knowledge at their disposal they can change their advertising campaign to suit the needs of the times and occasions. If this method is so successful in business, why should not society study its own methods of producing its various types of social thinking by establishing an equally careful system of bookkeeping. Why should not each religious denomination have exact knowledge as to the class of reading matter that is going into the homes of its people? With this knowledge at their disposal it would be a more or less simple matter to determine the quality of religious life and interest of the people of that religious group.

To obtain the data for such a study the first step is to measure the number of linear column inches of space devoted, by a given paper, to the various classes of items or subjects printed. By classifying this measured material according to subject and geographic heads, we can ascertain accurately what the people are reading and thinking about. This quantitative analysis, carried far enough, would tell us with certainty the type of paper we are dealing with, and at the same time suggest what type of spiritual and mental life its readers possess.

ARE DISCIPLES PROVINCIAL?

The present analysis was undertaken in the endeavor to establish some correlation between the reading matter printed in one of our widely read religious papers and the often-heard criticism that some of our preachers and our people are provincial. In an age when the church is striving to forget her differences in order that all believers may unite in aggressive action to Christianize the world, and when all Christians are striving to look beyond the limits of their denomination and see the whole world as a field for Christian service, is it not a serious charge if we so act and think and talk and write that people call us provincial? Can the men and women of our brotherhood afford to retire behind "our plea" and view the world from that safe retreat? Is it wise to have our sympathies confined to our churches and our activities limited by the needs of our people only? Whether or not we have a paper in our brotherhood that tends to foster this provincialism is the object of the present study.

MEASURING A NEWSPAPER.

The particular paper examined was chosen because it boasts that it is the defender of the faith and because it has the largest circulation of any Disciple newspaper. Seventeen issues of the paper were examined, including the issues for the months of February to May inclusive, and 19,626 column inch space was measured. Using this as a base number the percentages were derived. The results of the analysis can best be shown in the following table.

Comparative Table of Results.

	Items	Inches	Per cent
1.	Notices from local churches and evangelists	5,271	26.95
2.	Apocalyptic interpretation	3,525	17.91
3.	Stories, children, travel, etc.	1,896	9.66
4.	Doctrinal discussions (Disciples' doctrines)	1,819	9.26
5.	Controversies with other papers	976	4.76
6.	Lives of men of our brotherhood	876	4.46
7.	Activities of societies (Disciples)	810	4.12
8.	Controversies with Roman Catholic Church	792	4.03
9.	Foreign Missions	619	3.66
10.	Christian virtues	532	3.22
11.	Home Missions	507	3.09
12.	Doctrinal discussions (Other Communions)	412	2.09
13.	Schools and Colleges (Disciple)	288	1.46
14.	Contributions and Benevolences	253	1.28
15.	Special movements (Disciple)	199	1.01
16.	Denominational history (Disciple)	154	0.78
17.	Poems	134	0.68
18.	General religious matter (Disciples)	115	0.58
19.	Christ, His Character and Work	91	0.52
20.	Temperance	84	0.44
21.	General Religious (Other Communions)	67	0.38
22.	Economic and Governmental News	40	0.25
23.	Books	43	0.23
24.	Church Politics and Government	31	0.15
25.	Church Unity	26	0.13
26.	Public Men	24	0.12
27.	Preparation of men for the ministry	10	0.05
28.	Public Health	7	0.03
29.	Interdenominational organizations	4	0.02
30.	The Bible	2	0.01

A glance at the above table will show where the emphasis is placed in the paper under examination. In the seventeen issues analyzed, over 5,270 inches of column space was devoted to notices from our churches. This is over 26 per cent of the total space for that period. During the same period only four inches of space, or two-hundredths of one per cent, was devoted to those great interdenominational activities whose influence is doing so much to bind the world together in bonds of loving fellowship. Granted that it is the duty of a denominational paper to print denominational news, it surely is not its sole duty. Is it more important for our people to know that the Fife brothers have closed a meeting at Canton with five additions than that they should be informed of some of the activities of the Student Volunteer Movement, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., or of the movement for international peace, or the nation-wide movement for prohibition? Surely these organizations also come within the province of a religious paper. Of what real value are these so-called news reports that they should occupy the first place in our paper?

SECOND PLACE TO APOCALYPTIC WRITINGS.

The next largest item is what has been called apocalyptic writings. The editor of the paper devoted 3,525 column inches or 17.91 per cent of the total space to a fearful and wonderful interpretation of certain apocalyptic Scriptures, that were written under the stimulus of impending disaster or intense persecution. From Jesus' time till now how many false prophets have arisen, set the time for the coming of the end of the world, the punishment of the wicked, the reign of justice and have led their deluded disciples astray? Cannot we be content with the assurance of Jesus that only "the Father knoweth the day of the coming." Would it not be better for us to discredit such bizarre attempts to misinterpret Scripture than to give them the second place in one of our church papers. Is it possible that our people feed their spiritual life with such food?

Again we notice that children's stories and stories of travel rank third in importance with 1,896 inches or 9.26 per cent of the total space.

We find that the next largest amount of space is given over to the discussion of points of doctrine. Almost ten per cent of the paper is given over to the discussion of the perfection of "our plea," and the validity of "our position," and the desirability of church union on the basis of our doctrines.

DISPUTES WITH OTHER PAPERS.

But the one item that is very significant in determining the policy of the paper in question is number 5. Here we find that 976 inches or 4.76 per cent of space is given over to disputes and controversies with other men and papers of our brotherhood. Add to this the space devoted to controversy with the Catholic Church and we have the great total of 1,768 inches or 8.76 per cent of the total news space devoted to bitter disputes with men on differences of doctrine; rejoicings at misfortunes that are befalling other creeds; and criticisms of other men's positions. We know that this is not Christianity. We may differ widely on points of doctrine; we may find many subjects worthy of a full and free discussion and in the end still be friends and fellow workers. Controversy, jealousy, self-satisfaction, self-exaltation,—these things do not make Christianity. All men know further that this is Christianity: To love our God with all our heart, to love our neighbor as ourselves, and to follow Jesus Christ. Why should not our paper preach this vital doctrine and it will have little time left for criticism of those whose revelation of truth may have differed from its own.

READERS FIND WHAT SUITS THEM.

It is not unreasonable to suppose that persons reading a paper week after week find in that paper that which their taste desires, and also find discussions of those matters in which they are most deeply interested. The stock raiser reads his Breeder's Magazine to learn how to improve his cattle. The farmer reads his farm journal in the attempt to produce better crops. The advertiser reads an advertising journal. Following the analogy, we read a religious paper with the hope of finding discussed therein those matters that are of importance to us as men of religion. As religious men and women are we not interested in the life after death; in the character of Christ and His place in our life, in God, in the Bible, in the value of prayer, in Paul and his place in our Christian religion? As a teacher of religion, as a seeker after truth, these cannot be far from my mind. And yet there is no interpretation of these great fundamentals through seventeen issues of this Christian paper. This paper boasts that it stands for the old religion. Might we not ask with justice, what old religion? Contrast this neglect with the fact that during the same period almost a tenth of a mile of space was devoted to thickly padded reports from churches, that 3,525 column inches was devoted to a "Great Demonstration" of very doubtful value, that over eight per cent of the space was taken up by bitter criticisms of men whose conceptions of truth differed from our editors. Can it be possible that our people do not feel the utter lack of spirituality of the paper? Can it be possible that our people are the kind of people represented in this newspaper mirror? Can it be possible that we whose plea for unity should make us the most catholic of all Christians are thus provincial and sectarian?

RESULTS SUMMARIZED.

To sum up briefly the results of our examination, we find that 15,796 column inches or 82.7 per cent of the total space is given over to matter purely denominational in character. Add to this the space devoted to stories and we have 92.2 per cent. This leaves us less than 8 per cent of the space to be devoted to the great Christian denominations and to the great movements outside of denominationalism, and to the discussion of those Christian realities dear to the heart of all the churches. We have already seen that hardly a word is printed about the last named, about which, as Christians, we should be most deeply interested. Almost nothing likewise, is said of those great movements that are shaking the church to its foundations. What of social service? What of Christian unity? What of the Y. M. C. A.? What of the Y. W. C. A.? All these are mighty movements and they are doing much to hasten the coming of the kingdom of God on earth. They are of importance to the church and to all those Christians whose religious experience is not bounded by the four walls of a denomination. Then is it not sad that in this age in which men are striving to realize the best spiritual ideals, and in which they are striving to advance beyond denominational boundaries we Disciples should be the kind of people to whom a newspaper fostering denominationalism and provincialism should make any appeal at all?

The Cross-Maker

"I MADE His cross! I knew not what I did!"
It was the fairest tree on that fair hill!
As boy and man I'd rested 'neath its shade,
When heat was burning up the grass. A tree
Well-planted by the Lord, both tall and straight,
It grew on lands owned by Ben-David's son.
I paid some silver to the youth; all day
I spent to cut it down and trim it clean;
A day I took to saw it into parts
To serve as uprights for a house. I paid
A man and ox to haul it to my shop;
And here it lay until a Roman came
And cried, "Three crosses speedily I want."
My son and I straightway with saw and bolts
Soon made the frames and got our silver coins.
I marked the crosses with my mark, by use,
And then the soldier, with his men, dragged hence
The crosses to the hated Roman jail.

* * *

The mob swept past my door. I heard the cry
To "crucify!" I saw the Rabbi, One
Whose words I'd heard, and whom I'd seen to heal
The lepers and the blind. I'd hoped that He Had come to free us from our cursed yoke.
I knew the priests much hated Him, but I
Believed Him guarded by the people's love.
But now He bore a cross, and 'mid the throng
Was hurried onward to the place of death.
In that swift moment, as He passed, I saw
My workman's mark upon His cross, and knew
That I, in ignorance, had framed the wood
On which the kindly Man was doomed to die.
"Fair tree," I cried, "why did I cut thee down?
Thou wert all innocent. O cursed axe
That felled thee to the earth, and roughly shaped
Thee to a bitter cross! 'Twas thus I raved;
And then I followed with the crowd, in hope
That those strong men who long had walked with Him
And been His friends, would boldly rescue Him.

* * *

At last, I saw them nail Him to the cross,
And set it in its place, between two thieves.
I wept, and when the crowds had drawn away
I went up near and said, "A workman I;
In ignorance I cut the tree and made
Thy cross, not knowing Thou wouldst suffer here.
Forgive, that I by work upon the wood
Have taken part in this Thy dreadful pain."

* * *

He uttered nought, but tenderly He looked
On me and smiled. I knew He did not hate
Or curse me for my deed. Yet I have mourned
My act. They say He's risen from the grave;
If so, I'd say to Him I meant no wrong.
Dost think He lives? Canst tell me where He is?
I wish to tell Him I repent I made
His cross. 'Tis sad, although in ignorance,
I made for Him the cross of shame and pain.

EDITORIAL

SEPTEMBER STANDS FOR CHURCH EXTENSION.

NO EDITORIAL on this page nor article in this paper contains in equal space so important a message as this which reminds every reader of the annual offering for Church Extension to be taken next Sunday and every Sunday in September.

In churches where the budget plan is followed the pastor ought to utilize this psychological moment to instruct his people on this far-reaching enterprise of the Kingdom, even though no collection is taken. And churches whose missionary giving is not organized on the budget plan should fall into step with their comrades the country over and make a generous offering.

Church Extension no longer needs an apologetic. Its work is its sufficient apologetic. The number of churches made possible by its aid is now a great multitude, and their very existence is a living demonstration of its radical importance.
